¶ This week the words say: "Four hundred and forty-six and a quarter more pages of advertising than its nearest competitor since January 1st."

¶ And the chorus—"Paid subscriptions—from those actively in the field—and the confidence of the industry's advertisers are the acid test of a trade publication."

Said Fatty Cobb to Fatty A.:
"The picture beats them all, I'll say!"

WHEN the two funniest men in the world get together and make up their minds to beat anything they have ever done you can be sure of the result.

That's what happened in "The Life of the Party." Irvin S. Cobb wrote the story—put into it enough laughs for a good half dozen comedies.

And Arbuckle made the picture and put in more laughs.

So the result is to date the funniest five-reel comedy ever made. No matter how big you play it up, your patrons won't be disappointed.

ALL the catastrophes of history were brought about because a man tried to please one woman. Adam ate the apple, the Trojan war was fought, and Antony lost an empire—for a woman.
And so in a tremendous modern story Lois Weber has crystallized the destructive force of the ages—has presented with mighty dramatic intensity the havoc wrought by a selfish woman.
A story of real life in a real town—of real people who love and suffer and at last find happiness. A story that reflects every aspect of American life.

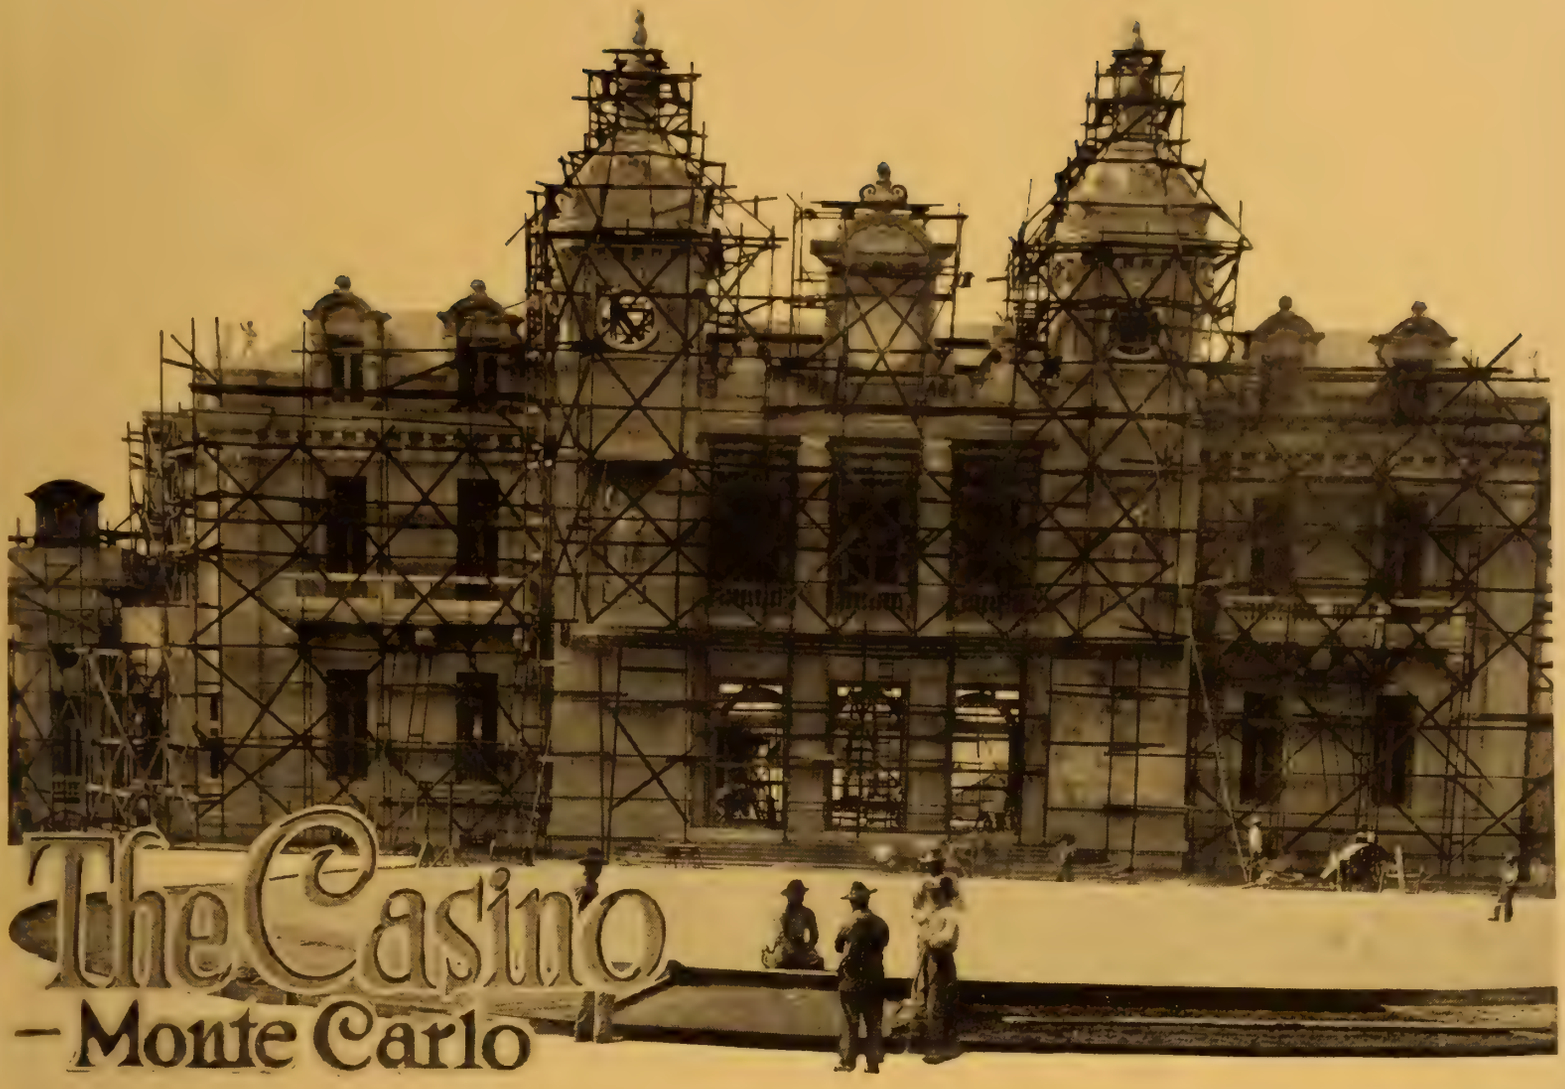
OF THE NEW SEASON!



HERE is a "progress-picture" of the left side of the Plaza at Monte Carlo, reproduced in every minutest detail by Von Stroheim for "FOOLISH WIVES," the other two sides being formed by the Hôtel de Paris and the Café de Paris. This building—the world-famous Casino—is 174 feet long, its towers rising 74 feet above the little park with its specially grown lawn. At Point Lobus, near Monterey, the back of this same building has been erected in a setting which is a city block-and-a-half long, rising magnificently from a 100-foot cliff on the sea and having in front a promenade 305 feet long and 60 feet wide.

Of such marvelous settings—of such amazing fidelity in detail, is this newest Universal-Jewel Master-play constructed. Dramatically, "FOOLISH WIVES" will be found just as fascinating in revelations of certain phases of European social life which none but Von Stroheim might ever dare to screen.

FROM small town to big city and back again goes the action of "Once to Every Woman," and thru it all, from humble poverty to selfish power and back to her mother's arms, Dorothy Phillips holds you fascinated, as can no other actress of our generation. THE FORBIDDEN THING

Mr. Dwan

What Do YOU Consider

"Thou shalt not"—what?

This powerful story when published last spring in the Metropolitan magazine was one of the short story sensations of the season. It is a story of a quick-flaming passion, of a strong but simple man swept off his feet, torn from the girl he loves, by a dance-hall beauty, a swarthy half breed siren who lived and died in sin.

Was this the Forbidden Thing?

Life's Forbidden Thing ?

In any large city where newspapers contain a women's page or daily magazine page your press representative or advertising agent can focus tremendous interest upon this picture in your theatre by contests or discussions of "What is the Forbidden Thing" in this town? Award pairs of free tickets for the best or cleverest answers.

Who forbids the Forbidden Thing?

Is this the Forbidden Thing?

This Woman - This Man?

Allan Dwan's first Associated Producers Special Production is as it should be—a strong native American drama. A drama of scenes and people familiar to you. A story superior in power, in humanness, in sex interest and love, to such previous Allan Dwan successes as "Soldiers of Fortune," "In the Heart of a Fool," "The Sin of Martha Queed," "Fifty-Fifty" and "The Social Secretary." Nationally released Nov. 7th, with an all-star cast.

"THE Anniversary of the Hodkinson Corporation, in the form of a Hodkinson Month, calls attention to an organization that has added a solid plank to this industry.

W. W. Hodkinson founded his present business three years ago upon an economic principle. It is a principle that underlies other industries. It had been the basis of Mr. Hodkinson's previous operations in this field. It is the principle of the complete independence of the distributor.

Briefly, Mr. Hodkinson believes that the distributor must operate independently of the producer and exhibitor. He must be utterly free to pick from one for the other. Only in this way can there exist that freely selective force which at one end of the line encourages better production and, at the other end, assures a marketable product.

None of us will argue against the sound economy of this principle. Its application to so peculiar a business as this might be questioned if it were an untried theory. But Mr. Hodkinson has made it a fact. He started with a theory and today, after three years of application, he has a successful and expanding business.

We have a firm belief in the economics of this art-industry. We believe that its development will be gradually moulded by economics, and we furthermore believe that not only will its industrial structure be shaped by established business laws, but also that its art will be fostered by these same sturdy influences.

And for that reason it is a pleasure to recognize a success like Mr. Hodkinson's because it is a constructive effort in the best, ultimate interests of the entire industry."

"TRAIL blazers, peacemakers and pioneers usually fail of recognition until after the floral tributes have been delivered and the echoes of solemn music have died away. In moving pictures which move with seven league strides fame overtakes a leader before too many years have fled. Therefore today W. W. Hodkinson, the most conspicuously modest man in our industry, is receiving the recognition that is his due. and these words are recording that fact. A man of ideas, of vision and constructive ability, much that has marked the progress of moving pictures first crystallized in his fine brain.

Recently Mr. Hodkinson's organization decided to set apart the month of November to a celebration to be known as "Hodkinson Month." This fitting and practical thing will be observed throughout the land to the advantage of the celebrants and to the further prestige of Hodkinson and all that he represents.

When all the history of moving pictures is written, the name of W. W. Hodkinson will be carved high in the list of those who have served, of those who have builded, of those who have set up standards which have been followed to the vast betterment and uplift of the great business which is close to all of our hearts.

A real pilgrim in the early days, he adventured into leadership, and today the things he forecast are accomplished facts.

It is well for the industry to pay him a practical tribute by observing Hodkinson Month, and though it be good business, it is by good business that we all survive."

Never has there been a more incessant demand, by public and exhibitor alike, for a star's return, than that which has greeted Mae Marsh during her absence from the screen.

She comes back now in "The Little 'Fraid Lady," with her quaint, adorable way, to hold the hearts she has won by the charm of her ever human work.

And—to the host of her admirers, she will add untold numbers, captivating by the wistful smile that shines through a tear-dimmed eye, like a ray of sunshine in a clouded summer sky.

"A CROWNING ACHIEVMENT"–M.P.NEWS

EVERY CRITIC HAILS THE MOTION PICTURE RECORD OF

MAN O'WAR'S VICTORY

AS THE WORLD'S 2 REEL FILM TRIUMPH

THIS week our advertisement of the picture that we promised you as the one exclusive motion picture record of Man o' War's victory over Sir Barton at Windsor, Ont., and promised you that would be the greatest offering of its kind in the history of films is written for us by others.

Every word of the criticism of the Motion Picture News is well worth reading by the man who closely watches his box office.

"ONE OF THE GREATEST FEATURES EVER SCREENED–WONDERFULLY PRODUCED."

"IT HAS MORE TENSE MOMENTS THAN ANY THRILLER — GREATEST RACE SCENE EVER."

ON the opposite page you will find the opinion of two of the leading sporting writers of New York City. They saw the picture at a private showing given in honor of Louis Feustel, trainer of the super horse. It is voluntary testimony to the worth of the picture.

It is publicity in addition to the thousands of columns of news that has been printed about Man o' War—that makes this the most eagerly sought for film in history.

"The Race of the Age"

(Featuring Man O' War—Educational—Two Reels)

THE most wonderful racing horse in the world "Man O'War," who has received more publicity within the last year than any animal or human living and whose intense popularity has made every man, woman and child with the least bit of sporting blood in their veins tingle with excitement, is shown in this picture

Any way you want to take it this two-reeler is one of the greatest features ever screened. It is wonderfully produced, has more tense moments than any thriller, has the most popular horse in the world and has the greatest racing scenes ever witnessed, barring none.

The latter scenes show the horses from the time they leave the post until the finish of the race. Most of them are side views and follow the horses along the course as they struggle for supremacy.

The pictures are clear and lifelike and one can easily imagine the intense excitement of an audience as they see these two thoroughbreds stretch out upon the track with Sir Barton at the rail.

Then little by little, "Man O' War" is shown creeping up on his rival until he gains a full length which he holds for a quarter. The plucky Sir Barton with bull dog courage, sticks to the bigger horse and recovers some of the lost ground.

It is a hopeless task, however, for when Clarence Kummer, the jockey, loosens up on "Man O' War," we see this super-horse with his wonderful stride, pull away from his rival and finish eight lengths ahead.

These latter scenes are full of intense excitement and are a crowning achievement in camera work. How they ever did it is a mystery.

The reels also show "Man O' War" entering his private car with his pal "The Major," another horse for his trip to Canada; the entrance to the race track and the thousands of spectators who gathered for the big event; scenes about the paddock, the owners, trainers, jockeys and attendants of the two horses, etc., etc.

This picture has wonderful exploitation possibilities. Run as many stories as you can about this super-horse. Tell your patrons that he is guarded like a crown jewel, pampered as a prima donna, has cooked food and pure water as a diet, that the doctor and dentist are among his regular attendants—and that he shakes a wicked hoof.—FRANK LEONARD.

E.W.HAMMONS ANNOUNCES PREMIER SHOWING OF

"THE RACE OF THE AGE"

FOR THE WEEK OF OCT. 31 AT BOTH.

STRAND, NEW YORK, and STRAND, BROOKLYN

"MORE MONEY THAN FOR A MARY PICKFORD FILM," SAYS N.Y. EVENING WORLD.

In connection with the dinner, the first view of the moving pictures of Man O' War's match with Sir Barton were thrown on the screen at the Police Club. They are the most remarkable, perhaps, ever taken, showing every step of the thrilling contest, and will be shown publicly at the Strand Theatre next week. It is said that more money was paid for the film by the Strand producers than they expended for a Mary Pickford picture.

PHOTOGRAPHED BY 14 CAMERAS INCLUDING SLOW MOTION

NEVER in the history of the camera has there been a race pictured with the dramatic power of "The Race of the Age." Every critic, every sportsman, every man, woman and child with blue blood in their veins have used adjectives that we dared not employ in attempting to describe it.

At the Strand, New York, and the Strand, Brooklyn, it is being given an exploitation that few feature pictures have ever won. A full week before the showing a greater portion of the lobby has been devoted to it. Advance inquiries indicate that it will break all attendance records.—THE REASON IS THAT IT IS THE WONDER PICTURE OF THE YEAR

"NEVER WAS A RACE PICTURED WITH SUCH ACCURACY AND COMPLETENESS"—THE N.Y.MAIL

By way of a surprise the first exhibition of the historic Man o' War-Sir Barton race was flashed upon him in lifelike exposure in the big dining room of the Police Club, the scroll being loaned by the Educational Film Company to Marshall McCarthy for the occasion. There have been many pictures of horse races, but never was there one which depicted with such accuracy and completeness the memorable event which took place at Kenilworth Park on October 12.

Spectators are practically within a few feet of the contest from the moment Starter Harry Morrissey gave them the signal until the finish. It is the first photographic example taken by a panoramic machine and depicts every move made by horse and rider during the entire trip of a mile and a quarter race. So realistic is the photography that spectators will be brought to the pitch of enthusiasm and root with as much energy as the 30,000 witnesses rooted on the day of the race. Moving picture experts declare it the perfection of production in that line.

RECORD CROWD AT NEAL HART FIRST RUN KANSAS CITY

Gayoso Stands 'Em Out On "Hell's Oasis" Against Big Competition

Kansas City, Mo. (Special to The News)—"Hell's Oasis" opened at the Gayoso Theatre, first run in Kansas City, Saturday, to one of the biggest crowds that ever attended that theatre on the opening day of any picture.

They stood them out all day Saturday and duplicated the same thing on Sunday.

For competition the Gayoso had a group of big special productions opening at the Twelfth street theatre, the Regent, the Victory and the Idle Hour, all within a block's distance.

SLOCUM OF LITTLE ROCK SIGNS 21 BIG HOUSES ON HART

E. R. Slocum, manager of the Little Rock, Ark., branch of the R. D. Lewis Film Company, reports a list of twenty-one first run theatres in his territory which have closed contracts for the entire series of eight Neal Hart productions.

"The pictures are going over big in this territory," writes Mr. Slocum, "and exhibitors are very anxious to contract for them."

"DAMFOOL TWINS" ARE SELLING FAST

Among the additional territories closed for franchise rights on the Pinnacle "Damfool Twin" Comedies last week were Saniel and Steinberg of the S. & S. Film and Supply Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., Dresner of the Exhibitors Film Exchange, Washington, D. C., and Dave Warner of Warner Film Attractions, Cleveland, O.

At this time practically all sections of the country are covered by contract or option on these comedies. Releasing will begin November 15.

PRINTS OF "SKYFIRE" READY FOR SHIPMENT

Prints of "Skyfire," the second Neal Hart release, are now being made at the laboratories in Chicago, and shipments will be ready to go forward to the exchanges by the time this issue of The News is published.

The principal players included in the "Skyfire" cast are as follows:

Barr Conroy .....NEAL HART
Joe Beaupre .....William Quinn
Marette .....Rita Pickering
Father Malloy .....Hugh Saxon
Pierre Piquet .....Al Garcia

"HERE'S YOUR MAN!"

A bit of tense action from "Skyfire," the second Neal Hart release in the series of eight Pinnacle Productions. "Skyfire" is brim ful of action—a big spectacular drama of the Canadian Northwest. It will be released November 15.

Peering Ahead

This colyum is compiled with the aid of our best wee-ja board, by which we are able to forecast the events of the future.

Marcus Loew, eastern distribution manager for the Independent Films Association, telegraphed the Chicago office this week that he closed for the New York Hippodrome for Independent's colossal all-star show, which will be made up of one former star from each of the disorganized program organizations, Addie Zukor, Bill Fox, Samuel Goldwyn and other ex-film magnates will quit Wall street to sit in a box at the unprecedented performance and all New York is on its toes for the date announcement.

Neal Hart was a Chicago caller two weeks and was given a rousing reception by the genial Independent gang. Neal had to make a speech, in which he recalled Independent's first picture, "Hell's Oasis," in which he starred and which, incidentally, was the beginning of real film independence.

STUDIO EDITION OF NEWS NEXT WEEK

Beginning with the next issue, The News will have a studio edition each week, packed to the margins with production news on the Neal Hart features and the Pinnacle Comedies starring Leo White.

Big stories of interest to exchanges and exhibitors handling the Harts and the comedies are developing every week at the West Coast studios. These will be fully covered.

Squidgelums

One of our foremost exchange men—talking to us over the long distance telephone a few days ago about some extra prints—got balled up for a moment and wanted to know "where's them 'Hell's Fire' prints I ordered?" We thought he was cussin' us out, but he explained that he was thinking of two pictures at once, "Hell's Oasis" and "Skyfire." He got the prints and we got his apology.

NEALUPBASESFULL

AN INDEPENDENT YEAR—WITH I. F. A. BLAZING THE WAY

"This is surely the year of the independent's big chance; as it is also the opportunity for the exhibitor to put the independent to the test."

The above was part of an editorial published last summer in the Motion Picture News.

And it proved prophetic—for the exhibitor has put the independent to the test and it is now an admitted fact in the industry that THIS IN AN INDEPENDENT YEAR.

It is an independent year because the independent exchanges have placed themselves in a position to supply what exhibitors want, namely series productions, built around the personality of an established star—such as the Neal Hart series of eight Pinnacle Productions and the series of twelve two-reel Pinnacle Comedies starring Leo White, and exploitation and advertising of the sort that the Independent Films Association has become famous for in the independent field.

Advertised pictures of high merit—that is what the theatres have demanded of the independent exchanges.

The Independent Films Association, through its member exchanges, has not only led the way from the standpoint of being first in the field with advertised series pictures of high merit, but will continue to blaze the trail from the standpoint of increased number of releasing units and increased volume and variety of advertising.

Roy Springer, magNUT a la movie, of Forth Worth, Texas, who, incidentally, operates the Orpheum Theater in that southwestern metropolis, piped this: "Oh you Southern Championship baseball games—but please let me see Hell's Oasis FIRST."

DAMGOODSERVICETOO

They are telling a rich little yarn about L. J. Selznick around the tall buildings in New Yawk. It seems that L. J. got Pinnacle Productions mixed up with the national pastime along Broadway. He is quoted as having remarked: "Say, how they get that Pinochle stuff? I saw 'Hell's Oasis' three times, and I'm dimmed if I saw a single deck of cards."

Why Realart can depend on Sam Wood to produce Pictures that Entertain.

BECAUSE—

FIRST:

His almost uncanny instinct in picking real stars led him to select the one whose pictures he is now directing—WANDA HAWLEY.

SECOND:

The years of training under Cecil B. de Mille and then his own successful direction of "Excuse My Dust," "What's Your Hurry?" and "Sick Abed" for Wallace Reid, and "The City Sparrow" for Ethel Clayton, have given him the training and equipment which the production of Realart Pictures demands.

THIRD:

In "HER BELOVED VILLAIN" which he adapted for WANDA HAWLEY from the famous French farce "La Veglione," he did not lose one iota of the irrepressible entertainment of the play.

FOURTH:

He has followed "HER BELOVED VILLAIN" with a breezy, summery yachting comedy, "HER FIRST ELOPEMENT," another WANDA HAWLEY picture, quite as entertaining as it is artistic and clever.

FIFTH:

SAM WOOD rose through his understudy period alongside his star, and is therefore peculiarly well fitted to produce her pictures.

WILLIAM D. TAYLOR'S production of "THE FURNACE" is a picture which every man and woman, married or unmarried, will go miles to see.

(Adapted by Julia Crawford Ivers from the Novel by "Pan")

MR. STATE RIGHTS' BUYER.—I have repeatedly stated you should be more particular in the selection of pictures, in the entire range from Features to Short Stuff, for your present profit and future growth and success.

I don't claim to have the only good pictures that are available for State Rights' Buyers, but I do claim that I know what a good picture is, because I have marketed a great many money-makers, and I am now offering Two Big Features that are 100% Box Office attractions.

"THE VICTIM" is a six-reel super-feature in which Robert T. Haines is featured, with a wonderful cast, including Joyce Fair and Harry Benham—when you see this picture you will agree with me that it is replete with suspense, excitement, soul-stirring action and, in addition, the settings and photography are beautiful. Its story presents a maze of baffling situations that nearly send an innocent man to his death.

I have just learned Robert T. Haines plays an important part in "The Foreigner," a forthcoming First National release.

"The Victim" also has a special exploitation tie-up that is unusually valuable for the Box Office.

"A GOOD BAD MAN" is a six-reel Super-Western Production. It is a stirring Drama of the Great West, and the romance of it unfolds an interesting tale of what the love of a woman can accomplish. The story, the production, the action is of the highest standard and there can't be any doubt about the Cast having bigger money pulling powers than any recent production offered to you.

Just think of it—in the cast are—

Pete Morrison, a very popular Universal Western Star. Carol Holloway, a popular Vitagraph Serial Star.

Jack Richardson with the Pathe Serial following. Ruth King, featured in the "Devil's Passkey."

Harry Von Meter, one of the best known Heavies of the Screen; Spottiswoode Aitken, one of our cleverest character actors with a reputation dating back to "The Birth of a Nation." William Lyons West and others are included.

If you want these Two Big Features, and some excellent Short Stuff, particularly two-reel Western Thrillers, wire or write to me.

Showmen and Salesmen

To sell a person something without first showing it to him requires mighty excellent salesmanship. Practically every article of trade is seen before the sale is made. The business of the motion picture exhibitor furnishes almost the one exception, for the only thing he sells is the privilege of seeing his wares. The exhibitor isn't a seller of merchandise, he's a showman thereof!

The number of people, therefore, who will wish to see a show will depend upon the quality of the posters. Because of the difficulty of selling anything without showing it the task of the poster becomes manifestly difficult. The fact that the best is none too good is beyond all question, but equally beyond all question the RITCHEY poster is the best!

We do not claim that the RITCHEY poster adds one jot to the artistic value of a photo-play. What it does do is to give to the photo-play it accompanies a tremendously increased box-office value. An unusually artistic film will of course please the exhibitor's patrons, but the point not to be overlooked is this:

It is through RITCHEY posters that the maximum number of them will be provided!

VOL. XXII NOVEMBER 6, 1920 No. XX

The Sales Manager's Opportunity

THE Theatre tax returns, recently made public by the Revenue Department, together with the amount collected from distributors on the five per cent film tax basis, brings up again the highly important subject of film rentals.

$780,000,000 is, approximately, the gross box-office receipts for the year ending June 30, 1920; and the distributors, if we can judge by the film tax, took in about $86,000,000.

Film rentals, then, amount to a little over 11% of the Exhibitors' receipts.

This agrees very nicely with the estimates we made some time ago, when we figured that the distributor was getting, in film rentals, only between 10% and 15% of the theatres gross receipts.

The figures received a storm of protest at the time. A number of small houses wrote in that they paid out for film rentals upwards of 35% of their box-office intake. Some sales managers—who evidently run their offices without any figures or without any respect for figures—wrote in ridiculing our estimates.

But there the figures stand—cold figures. They say that the average theatre spends only 11% of its receipts for its pictures.

And yet we know that the great majority of theatres—comprising the small houses—spend around 35%.

What's wrong?

Here's a splendid opportunity for any sales manager to explain just why this remarkable discrepancy exists.

Perhaps it should exist. Perhaps the little house should pay four or five times what the big theatre expends for pictures.

But if so, why? Why the burden—and we know it is a very heavy burden—on the small theatre?

Or is it that the present system of rentals is basically wrong and unfair; and being unfair, that it is uneconomic; and being uneconomic that it is designed to be dangerous and maybe disastrous to the industry.

Certainly it will prove disastrous if its scheme tends to crowd the small house to the wall or out of business entirely.

Perhaps the big theatre will explain why its rental should be only one quarter of the small theatres.

But the main issue, we should say, is up to the sales manager.

We will cheerfully give all the space anyone wants for his explanation. The matter is of supreme importance.

Then there's the subject of "specials" and the small theatre.

The small theatre can't afford "specials" under present rental prices. One exhibitor puts the whole thing in a nutshell when he says, in a letter; "I lose on them, no matter which way I jump."

He's dead right. And every other small house in the country is in exactly the same boat.

So what is the situation here?

Hadn't we best stop beating around the bush and come straight out into the open?

Is the "special" picture excluded from the small house? Is the distributor's plan on "specials" geared up only to the big theatre? Is this simply or largely a "first run" business?

A "special," remember, is simply a better picture—better than the kind that have been made and like the kind that are being made in larger numbers, the new kind, which soon will be an average or simply good picture.

Are we to exclude good pictures from the small houses? Is it necessary? If so, it would seem to be good business to say so, to admit it, and to go about making cheap pictures only for the little house. This considerably disturbs our idea of the motion picture—that it is a community entertainment business; and we know perfectly well that most every small house and its patrons want good pictures just as much as any big theatre.

We were informed the other day that a certain inexpensively made brand of comedies had a distribution of nine thousand theatres, whereas average feature distribution is less than thirty-four hundred theatres.

But the point is: if the small house can't play the high rental good picture why force them? Why drive them into bankruptcy? Why break what we call the backbone of the business—the eighty per center?

Of course, we know that distribution is wrong. Rentals are wrongly graded. We know that.

But the matter is so very important that certainly its solution can't be very long delayed.

Its a big subject and a tough one. And it will require big men to tackle it. If any sales manager does reorder rentals successfully we have an idea he can invite the President of his concern out of his chair.

Distribution is the biggest problem facing the business today.

Snapshots

Around the Clock with W. A. Johnston

Ever see an editorial note-book? Page after page of random jottings of names. Each name a reminder. Well—here are the names and the thoughts they bring to mind, just as the pages of this week's note-book are turned:

Charles Chaplin. J. D. Williams and writer walking up Fifth avenue. Meet Charles Spencer Chaplin and Edward Knoblock—both playwrights. Mr. Knoblock an Anglicized American (in speech). Mr. Chaplin, an Americanized Englishman (in appearance). Both in film business? Yes, at least Mr. Knoblock now is.

Handshaking all around. Mr. Knoblock introduced subject of weather. "Frightfully warm day," etc. Messrs. Williams and Chaplin concentrated on subject. All four finally and solemnly agreed it was a "frightfully warm day," etc. "So, Long!" etc., etc.

Cited as only instance of film men meeting and not talking film.

Query: Does First National get "The Kid"? Weather signs would indicate it.

Allan Dwan. One of the few instances of a director who is also business man. One of still fewer instances of a director who has a sincere respect for the selling end of pictures. Says he regrets that the director must work 3,000 miles away from sales headquarters—and also from the public pulse. "Lonesomeness" of director, he calls it. Wants cooperation in the making of pictures and seems to mean it; and means to get it. Likeable fellow: keen, hardheaded, progressive, on the job. Saving grace: An Irishman's sense of humor.

Jesse D. Hampton. In town. Only fair to Mr. Hampton to state that, on a recent visit, he inspired our editorials on "Bunk." Will be in New York a month. Important plans brewing. By the way, watch for his Pathe Special, "Half a Chance." It is a Special. Mighty fine picture.

Kismet. First showing Monday evening, at Astor. Otis Skinner to be present. Fine reports about Kismet. Hope to see them realized.

Gudger of Goldwyn. F. A. are his initials and V. P. his title—Vice-President of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Lawyer and North Carolinian. One of the new type of business executives, in the field. And H. W. Alexander, assistant to Messmore Kendall, President of Goldwyn. Met them both at luncheon—and glad of it. At the Republican Club where George Kleine, Wm. N. Selig and George K. Spoor used to week end from Chicago.

Fine types—these newcomers. Clean-cut and alert. Work from charts which show a picture's progress—at a glance—from its cost right through to its distribution. Wonderfully interesting work from figures, too. Lots of tables. Trying to take the word "gamble" out of the business. They'll do it, too. Open-minded, liberal too,—and keen. Liked their grim spirit of fair play. If these men typify their business principles among Goldwyn salesmen the exhibitors will get a new and hopeful idea of film salesmen. More power to them!

Samuel Goldwyn. Didn't expect to use the name right here, nor this week either. But here he is—and the odds at this writing are that he's coming back—to Goldwyn. Hardest man in the business to get along with but we need his force. Tries to open a door without turning the knob; bumps his head into window panes when you tell him to look out the window. Threatens often to take a rest but never does. Recently tried to get into Muldoon's but neither one would tolerate the other. Fierce energy. Inexhaustible vitality. Indomitable. And nervy! Tackles anything. Never quiet. Shoots wildly but—or so—he often rings a big bell. Say what you will we need such men on the production end. He's done a lot—and will do more—for motion pictures. Later: He's back.

Sam Katz. In town. Exhibitor extraordinary. Putting five millions into new theatres. Making Chicago the picture theatre de luxe city. Balaban and Katz were unheard of a few years ago: now when we speak of big exhibitors their name comes nearly first. Fine type. Young, sleek, well dressed. Radiates success. Quiet, serious, observant, works all the time. Watches every theatre worth watching. Keeps ahead of the times.

Motley H. Flint. Vice President, Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank—and prominent in other Los Angeles banks. Young man past fifty. Shrewd, concise, vigorous. Eyes that are used to saying "no" to borrowers before his lips do. Knows the film business—the one banker we know of who does—and keeps on knowing it. Asks lots of questions—pat ones too. Then puts them all in one pot and boils them down—way down. Knows studio operations—theatres too. Reads Motion Picture News every week. Missed a copy while in Washington at the bankers' conference, so had one sent to his New York hotel. Asked me if the industry appreciated Motion Picture News. Says it ought to.

Adolph Zukor. Saw him at lunch. Just mentioned his name because he rarely is mentioned. One of the many things we respect about him, is that he doesn't care whether he gets into the trade papers or not. He prefers not to. In the same restaurant—but not all at the same table—saw Samuel Goldwyn, J. D. Williams, Paul Brunet, E. R. Pearson, E. J. Ludvigh, J. S. Hampton, Morris Kohn, J. S. Woody. Guess. What restaurant?

Charley Whittaker. Of London, Los Angeles and New York. Writer—and a good one. Scripts for Tourneur, Rex Beach and other good judges. Oxford man. Genial Cosmopolite. Everlasting proof of the libel that Englishmen have no sense of humor.

Kismet. (later) A success! Otis Skinner. One of the finest pieces of acing the screen has ever seen. Subtle, highly expressive, delightfully interesting. Director has skillfully and wisely kept dramatic interest above spectacular—though sets are massive, colorful and artistic. Might be cut more; but a splendidly done picture. Highly gratifying.

Personalities

Off-Hand Introductions by Robert E. Welsh

This week we allow Mr. Happy Golucky, a press agent, to fill this page. As he writes at greater length than we can ever hope to—and he needs every inch of space he can get if the boss is to be kept happy—we will let him go on with his own sad story:

I AM the greatest press agent in the world. I admit it. That makes it practically unanimous. The case is clinched by the fact that I have been asked to write this page for one week. That's a recognition of superlative and scintillating genius.

It's just like when the boss says: "You big bum! You got nine special interviews with me and forty-four columns of space last week, and this week you only got half as much. What's the matter with you? Laying down on the job?"

That's recognizing ability, too. It's the best a boss can do.

If the word "Can't" isn't in the lexicon of Youth, then I'm here to say that the Funk & Wagnalls of a press agent's boss never heard about "Good stuff!"

BUT I'd better lay off that one sheet copy about my own axes and get to the twenty-four. You know I had to promise not to mention myself or my own picture in order to get this page. Any time you see anything about "Why Change Your Nightie?" it's just a slip. I intend to be good. Besides, a super-special marvellous production with a DeMille title don't need no insinuating advertising in the state rights field these days. It could gross three hundred thousand through the accessory jobbers.

Why I sold Florida to a man living in Seattle even before the picture had been re-cut the sixth time. I sold him with a new line about advertising the picture in the trade papers after the territory was closed. "That's when it will do some good with the exhibitor." Nobody ever pulled that line before. Nobody. Nobody ever went through with it, either, but that's something else again.

As I said before, I'm not going to say a word about myself or my picture on this page. The managing editor has given me his notebook and I'm to write a lot of "Personality" jazz concerning folks in the business. I can say anything I want about them so long as I don't tell the truth. It's a cinch. I'm a press agent.

THE first note he hands me is a letter from Watterson R. Rothacker forwarding a clipping from the Chicago Tribune. Herewith, to wit and as follows, is said same quotation:

"Both the dead man and his wife were closely questioned by the attorney, and each told the same story."—Casper, Wyo., Herald.
What d'ye mean "tell no tales."

Rothacker says this story might interest the Vitagraph Company. I should say so. It's always "interesting" when you get publicity you didn't expect. And "The Trib!"

Which reminds me about an editorial William A. Johnston ran on one of my boss's pictures some few months ago. Do you know I had the hardest time convincing the boss that I wrote that editorial and slipped it over on Johnston? I had to tell him every argument I used on W. A. J. and how many lunches I bought, 'n everything. But I finally proved it to him. And got my raise.

Now I'm sorry I did. The boss wants me to get a Johnston editorial on every two reeler he releases. It's a tough assignment. 'Cause I can't get anybody to introduce me to Mr. Johnston.

I HATE to bring myself into this conversation again, but I must say I'd like to work for that guy Rothacker. The editor tells me he's one of the few advertisers who says, "I only want my publicity department to send out news about my company; if it isn't news don't run it," and really means it.

That line is going to be engraved on the tombstone of a lot of guys in this game I'm going to get. Some day.

But the editor says Rothacker lives up to it. Since I don't never suspect no editor of having press agent traits, I'll have to believe him.

THE next line in the notebook says, "'Doc' Shallenberger." And it don't say nothing else. What I'm supposed to write about "Doc" I don't know. What I could write would be a bookfull. But it might make the competition too strong for my own mastodonic masterpiece, "Why Change Your Nightie?"

I can't afford to tout that guy too strong. People will begin to think there's nothing else in the state rights field.

I guess I know why "Doc's" name was on the editor's book, though. It seems to be an unwritten law now that every trade paper must say something unusual about the independent game each week. Isn't it funny how some trade paper discovers the state rights field about every six months?

All the old tricks are pulled out of the bag and paraded. Then the other trade papers have to scurry around and turn the old handsprings in new clothes for fear they will be called imitators.

"For the last shall be first in the publishing game." If you get what I mean.

HERE'S a note in the book says, "Eltinge Warner." Warner is one of the big guys in the Zane Grey pictures and also publishes "Smart Set," "The Black Mask," "Field and Stream," etc.

Don't know why I have to mention Warner on this page. I didn't never get nothing over in "Smart Set" except when George Jean Nathan panned me and Jesse Lasky and some smaller guys for corrupting the stage. And I never did play those chorus broads much.

But the managing editor says I got to mention him, 'cause Warner is a regular, all-wool, honest-to-glory, clear-white, hundred-proof good fellow.

Guess that's reason enough. There's only a few of us left.

Yes, I'm a press agent.

ANOTHER note says, "Jerry Beatty and Jack Meador ate in the Claridge Wednesday." Shucks! Must I mention other press agents? That's unfair!

Besides, those boys ain't in my class.

Not if they eat in the Claridge.

The blue-pencil guy says I have to mention this, because the NEWS hasn't yet told that Jerry Beatty is back from his cross-country trip. Played the one-night stand route and looks huskier than ever.

A lot of us guys would improve in appearance if they'd let us get away from the home office.

ONE half hour at this desk has convinced me that a managing editor needs a sponge for a backbone. All day long he has to listen to all the old lines and shoot his face and voice full of eager surprise hop each time.

A state rights fellow just blew in with this: "I started sumthin' new. Set the price on my picture for each territory and stuck to it. No gyping, no jockeying. Buyers so surprised they all embrace me. Square, above-board deal I'm givin', and they never heard of it before."

That's a new line. Ask Joe Lee.

A magnate just phoned! "We plan to start our big advertising campaign in three or four weeks. Meanwhile we need a few little advance announcements. Little ones, just two or three column heads."

The editor says he's not supposed to know that the magnate needs the publicity to get the money with which to advertise if he really intends to advertise.

Or, as Oscar Price might say, "This will be a great business when it is, won't it?"

Another press agent came in to growl because the editor used four pages of his company's publicity, but every line of it happened to have been written by other members of the publicity staff. That's team work. Eddie MacManus would call it "Coagulation of the circulation department."

Somehow or other, I don't think I'd like this job. There's something about the rewards of wielding a blue pencil which remind me of the continuity of "Why Change Your Nightie?"

It ain't.

Omaha Musicians Return to Theatres

Omaha musicians resumed playing in motion-picture theatres on October 23, following a lock-out of union musicians since September 1.

Omaha musicians were locked out of downtown theatres when their demands for a flat increase of 60 per cent over the former wage scale was refused them. They also refused an offer of a compromise for a 43 per cent increase.

Through the efforts of Harry Watts, manager of the Strand, John Loveridge, and August Herman, manager and assistant manager, respectively, of the Rialto, the Central Labor Union took a hand in the contention between the Omaha musicians and the theatre managers.

The arbitration agreement signed by representatives of both sides in the controversy, cites a salary of $50 a week for orchestra men, $55 for first organist and $45 for second organist pending a settlement of the strike.

The agreement states that an arbitration board consisting of seven persons, three chosen by each side in the controversy and the seventh member to be chosen from among newspaper men of Omaha.

Hearing of the dispute will be held the first week in November.

Stoll Film Manager Will Tour Pathe Exchanges

Ralph Proctor, general manager of the Stoll Film Corporation of America, left New York October 25, for a tour of Pathe exchanges throughout the country. Mr. Proctor plans to get in touch with the company's sales force, a unit of which will be represented in every Pathe exchange. He will be accompanied as far as Chicago by George King, president of Stoll. Mr. Proctor expects to be away from New York a month.

No Closed Shop in Choosing Extras, States Lasky

Denial was made yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that the choice of extras in the new Famous Players studio in Long Island City would be closed hereafter to all actors except members of the Actors Equity Association.

"While I sympathize with all players who by the slump in theatrical business have been forced out of work," said Mr. Lasky, "the assertion that we maintain a closed shop in our studios is erroneous. We are not affiliated in any way with any actors' organization, and insofar as the choice of people for 'extras' goes it would be impossible for us to make such an alliance. 'Extras' in the motion picture profession means more than 'supers'; the term means that persons chosen as extras must be types.

"Thus if we have a scene in one of our pictures calling for a group of Chinese, the casting director goes to Chinatown and gets real Chinese. Should we wish to show a group of Italian laborers, we should engage real Italian laborers."

Robinson Opens 2,000 Seat House in Peoria, Ill.

Another theatre has been added to those served by the Chicago film exchanges—the new Madison theatre at Peoria, Illinois, Dee Robinson's latest achievement. At the opening last Saturday, a number of Chicago film men were present.

The Madison has 2,000 seats and is what Dee Robinson calls a "happy theatre"—being all in cheerful colorings, with many mirrors and a wonderful lighting system. A twenty-piece orchestra, special scenic effects, etc., make the Madison a theatre any city could be proud of.

Peoria turned out 10,000 strong for the opening. "Humoresque" was the first picture.

Universal Treasurer and L-Ko Head Return

Abe Stern, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and Mrs. Stern, his brother, Julius Stern, of the L-Ko Company, and others of their family, returned to this country from Europe last Saturday aboard the liner Mauretania. The Stern brothers went abroad with Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, four months ago. Mr. Laemmle is still in Europe.

Stars to Attend Southern Movie Exposition

At the Southeastern Motion Picture Exposition, which will be held at Atlanta, Ga., beginning December 6, Muriel Ostriche, two Select stars, Helen Gardner, and possibly Lillian Gish, will attend, according to an announcement issued by the chairman of the exposition. Elaborate spectacles are planned by the committee.

Missouri Executive Board Holds Important Meeting

A meeting of the executive board of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri was held at the Central Hotel, Jefferson City, Mo., recently, and among other things, the board selected St. Louis as the next meeting place for the semi-annual convention of the State of Missouri to be held in January.

It was definitely decided to contract with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Film, Inc., for their industrial-educational films as the means of financing the organization for the coming year. The discussion of censorship was one of the most important features of the meetings. It was left in the hands of the legislative committee to counteract any action that might be taken detrimental to the interests of all.

A resolution endorsing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was unanimously adopted.

Illinois Exhibitors Will Have One Day Session

President Joseph Hopp has sent out the formal call for the one-day convention of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, which is to be held at the Hotel Jefferson, Peoria, on November 18. Mr. Hopp states that the first session will start promptly at 10 a. m. on that day and that the large amount of business to come before the meeting will be rushed through so that adjournment positively will be made after the evening gathering.

Prospects for a large attendance are excellent, as the alliance is growing rapidly in enthusiasm and membership, and already has passed the three hundred mark and many of the exhibitors who were unable to be present at the recent successful Springfield meeting, have signified their intention of being at Peoria.

Among the most important matters to be discussed are the proposed censorship and Sunday closing bills which may be introduced in the next Illinois legislature. The legislative committee of the alliance already is making plans to combat these measures which would strike a serious blow at the industry and exhibitors who attend the coming convention will be asked to cooperate in carrying out a campaign to uphold the rights of the picture house owners.

M.P.T.O. Urges Exhibitors to Forward Claims

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America urgently request all persons having claims against the United Picture Theatres Corporation or Hallmark Pictures' Corporation, to communicate at once with the National Headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, 1842 Broadway, New York City.

Exhibitors whose claims arise either through deposits or advance payments or purchase of stock in the United Pictures Theatres Corporation, or who have any claims against the Hallmark Pictures Corporation, will find it to their advantage to forward their claims to the above address with detailed substantiation of same.

The organization announces it is making a thorough investigation of the business affairs of these companies.

Pageant and Ball Delayed Until Mid-December

The National Motion Picture Pageant and Ball, under the auspices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which was to have been held the first week of November, has been postponed until the middle of December.

The officers of the organization, owing to the presidential election, deemed it wise to change the date so as to afford an opportunity to the exhibitors of the country to cast their vote on Election Day. Many friends of the industry, as well as exhibitors, are candidates for office at the coming elections. Many state organizations are also supporting various candidates who have been friendly to the industry. It was with this in mind and because of the numerous letters and telegraphic communications from all parts of the United States requesting the postponement, that the officers decided to hold the ball at a later date.

It is the intention of the president of the organization to summon all of the officers and the executive committee for an executive session in New York several days prior to the pageant and ball. At this conference, it is the purpose of the executive committee and the officers to meet with the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry for the purpose of working out a constructive solution of the many problems which the industry will have to face in the very near future. It is also hoped at this executive session to have a more perfect understanding between the manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor as to the business policies which will prevail in the future.

Sunday Question Settled After Close Fight

In one of the hottest elections ever held in Herkimer, N. Y., the voters in that village have decided to allow Sunday evening motion pictures after 8 P. M. The question has been one that has aroused the greatest interest in the village. A total of 2,617 votes were cast, of which 1,143 were favorable to Sunday shows and 1,057 opposed, there being 417 blanks. The total vote exceeds even that of the last village election, giving some idea of the amount of interest that was shown.

Automobiles placarded with a "Vote Yes" or a "Vote No," according to the sentiment of the owners, flitted about during the election, carrying voters to the polls. Both sides were represented by workers on the streets.

Receivership Asked for Big Butte Theatre

Appointment of a receiver for the Rialto theatre of Butte, Montana, the largest moving picture house in the state, and a court order for the disposal of the property at public auction are asked in a complaint filed by James H. Rowe and Louis Dreibelbis against the Silver Bow Amusement Company. C. S. Jensen and J. G. Von Herberg, moving picture magnates, who own a string of theatres on the Coast, together with Rowe and Dreibelbis, compose the company.

The suit is a result of labor troubles in which the Jensen and Von Herberg theatres in Seattle and Tacoma were involved and which reached Butte. It is alleged that Jensen is the manager of the Rialto and has absolute control in running the business. It is stated that on June 20 last the musicians' union and the moving picture operators instituted a boycott against the theatre and that the boycott is still on. The house, it is said, has been running at a heavy loss.

Rowe and Dreibelbis are Butte business men. They state that Jensen and Von Herberg have refused to either buy the interest of the Butte men or sell their own.

Dwan Speaks to Trade at New York Luncheon

Allan Dwan, who has been visiting in New York, was the featured speaker at the last weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers. Mr. Dwan made a special appeal for closer cooperation between publicity men and producer.

At a second luncheon, given by Bert Adler, general representative for Mr. Dwan, which was held at Delmonico's, many prominent men in the industry were in attendance. Among the speakers were J. D. Williams, William A. Johnston, Arthur James, J. W. Dannenberg, and Lesley Mason. Arthur Butler Graham introduced Mr. Dwan with a humorous speech on the trials and tribulations of a motion picture director.

Mr. Dwan in his speech pleaded for a system of advance criticism of movie plots that would keep the producer from the stories that the public did not want. The producer may not know the unpopular themes because he is too busy with the details of production, stated Mr. Dwan.

Lloyd Ingraham to Direct "Girl in the Taxi"

A wire from the Coast announces that Lloyd Ingraham will direct the Carter de Havens in their new picture version of "The Girl in the Taxi." The cast is reported to include King Baggott, Grace Cunard, Leo White, Tom McGuire, Lincoln Plummer, Otis Harlan, John Gough, Zella Ingraham, Margaret Campbell and Freya Sterling. Ross Fisher is the cameraman and Bob McGowan the scenarist.

Off for the Coast

Arthur S. Kane

ACCOMPANIED by Mrs. Kane, Arthur S. Kane, president of the picture corporation that bears his name, left New York last Wednesday on an important business trip that will take him to the Pacific Coast and back. He expects to arrive in New York again December 4th.

This is Mr. Kane's first journey to the Far West in nearly eleven months. According to Mr. Kane's own statement his primary mission is to confer with Charles Ray with respect to winter and spring productions. Conferences at least twice yearly are now contemplated, in the belief that these will give rise to results yet more satisfactory, alike to the picture-loving public and the exhibitors of the country.

Besides his meetings with Mr. Ray, who is now producing independently for First National release, Mr. Kane will confer with his business associates on the Coast, notably Richard Willis and Albert A. Kidder, Jr., respectively general manager and assistant general manager of Charles Ray Productions, Inc., and Gus Inglis, of the firm of Willis & Inglis.

In behalf of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, Mr. Kane will take advantage of the opportunity to talk also with Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven, Bessie Love, Tom Santschi, the officials of Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., Cyrus J. Williams and yet other stars, producers and directors.

Mr. and Mrs. Kane will make frequent stops both en route to the Coast and on the homeward journey, to meet prominent exhibitors.

One of the most enlightening discussions of the Prologue, what it is, what it can do, what it intends to do—and how to do it is told in the current issue of Motion Picture News by Charles D. Isaacson.

Chicago Theatre to Run Election Returns

An exploitation stunt of wide scope and one which it is believed will have direct box office results for Chicago moving picture theatres, especially the neighborhood houses, has just been arranged by Oscar A. Doob, exploitation man of Paramount's Chicago office.

The stunt will bring to every moving picture house in Chicago which has a phone, fifteen-minute bulletins on the presidential and state election on the night of Tuesday, November 2nd. The returns will be telephoned directly from the editorial department of the Chicago Evening American.

To make this feature a money-getter for the theatres the Chicago Evening American, through Frederick McQuigg, motion picture editor, is going to give it tremendous publicity. First the theatres are supplied free with one-sheets to place in front of their houses announcing that the returns will be shown. Two thousand of these one-sheets, in two colors, are now ready. Another one-sheet will be used as a bulletin sheet, upon which can be written the returns and set on the stage under a spot light. This will not interfere with the picture on the screen. In addition, free slides are being given out.

The American will announce the stunt from fifty twenty-four-sheet billboards, from one hundred and forty-four two-sheet boards on their seventy-two wagons and trucks. Big newspaper space is to be used giving direct and free publicity to the theatres co-operating.

Paramount is offering all the free material and the bulletin service to all theatres, including the legitimate houses, regardless of whether Paramount Pictures are used.

Hart to Fight Re-Issues Under New Titles

Western Star Starts One Suit and Threatens Others Unless Practise is Stopped

STARTING a campaign to put a stop to the exhibition of his old films disguised under new and false titles, William S. Hart has filed suit in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County against a distributing corporation, asking for an injunction, an accounting and damages in the amount of $250,000. A second action has been brought against a theatre proprietor, to restrain him from showing old pictures under false titles, an accounting and $25,000 damages. These suits are but the forerunners of others. The star's attorneys, Wetherhorn, Hoyt & Jones, are said to have in preparation five more suits which will be filed in the next few days against other offenders.

William S. Hart has been among the first in efforts to put an end to this practice. For the protection of the motion picture theatregoing public, he instituted a proceeding before the Federal Trade Commission. The Commission held that the practice of putting old pictures on under new titles is illegal and has a tendency to mislead and defraud the public, and issued a restraining injunction.

This decision seemed to have a salutary effect for a time, but it was only temporary. Recently other distributors and exhibitors have resorted to the same practice and Mr. Hart has again found it necessary to institute suits to protect the motion picture theatregoing public and honest exhibitors.

The star has also addressed an open letter to the motion picture public in which he urges co-operation in his efforts to stamp out the deception:

"Since 1914," writes Mr. Hart, "I have been starring in motion pictures. In those early days two-reel pictures were most popular, the five-reel production being somewhat of a gamble. In the ensuing years, as the motion picture industry naturally progressed amazingly in all lines, the big five-reel production became the standard. Now, my old two-reel pictures having changed ownership a few times, they were naturally re-issued as my popularity with the American public increased. To re-issue these old films under their original titles is of course absolutely legitimate,—fair and square. Any theatregoer who wants to pay to see William S. Hart in a picture made years ago, —that is your own business. But—when you are lured into a theatre to see me starring in a picture under a 'new' title and find out that you have been stung, then both you and I have been done a gross wrong.

"Alone and unaided, at great expense to myself, I started a legal fight in 1918 to put a stop to this practice of deceit. I made this effort to protect the theatregoing public and the honest exhibitor, as well as myself.

"The first picture I ever made was 'The Bargain,' produced six years ago. It is in five reels and today it is being billed as 'The Two-Gun Man in the Bargain.' Another, 'On the Night Stage,' has been re-titled 'The Bandit and the Preacher,' while the other offending five-reeler, 'The Darkening Trail,' is now called 'The Hell Hound of Alaska.'

"Now comes the worst deception of all. There is a five-reel picture being circulated about the country today which is billed 'William S. Hart in "Staking His Life."'

"Mr. and Mrs. Public, I never made such a picture.

"I did make a two-reel picture nearly six years ago called 'The Conversion of Frosty Blake.' With the addition of three reels of discarded film called 'cuttings,' which even in those days I did not consider good enough to use in a two-reel production, there has been evolved this five-reel deception.

"I have just brought action through my attorneys, Wetherhorn, Hoyt and Jones, to prevent one company from distributing my old pictures under false titles. And I am starting six more suits within a few days against other distributing companies and exhibitors for the same offence.

"I am giving exhibitors fair warning, for if they persist in showing my old pictures under false titles, suit will be brought against each and every one."

Censorship Activities Again Claim Interest

WHILE proponents of state censorship are reported to be busy in Colorado preparing a bill for submission to the state legislature early in January, municipal officials of various cities throughout New England have convened in New York City and adopted formal resolutions against governmental official censorship of motion pictures.

Several persons prominently identified with social welfare work in Denver have, it is authoritatively stated, called upon Attorney General Keyes for advice in preparing a bill providing for censorship of all motion picture films before they may be shown in the state of Colorado, which measure they propose to have introduced at the next general assembly, scheduled to meet early in January.

According to one of the proponents of the measure, the bill will provide for the creation of a state commission modeled along the lines of the state industrial and the public utilities commissions. The right to censor all film showed in the state will be given to the board so created.

Revenue to defray the expenses of the commission is to be provided through a tax levied on every foot of film to be shown.

One section of the proposed bill provides for the regulation of all motion picture theatres as to fire escapes, sanitary conditions and ventilation.

Violation of any of the rulings of the commission carries the penalty of a fine or closing the offending theatre until such orders are complied with. Authority would also be given the commission to also exercise a certain supervision of all film exchanges within the state.

The proposed law, as it is now drawn, is declared to be the most drastic censorship measure ever advocated. Containing all the "teeth" of censorship laws in other states, several other features have been added, it is stated, that are alike harmful to the interests of producers and exhibitors. Under the proposed law the commission created by its passage would be given practically the same powers as are those vested in the state public utilities corporation.

Every effort will be made by the organized bodies of the picture industry in the state to defeat the measure if introduced. The Rocky Mountain Screen Club is already on record in its opposition to censorship and for the repeal of an existing blue law providing for Sunday closing. Several public officials are likewise on record as promising hearty co-operation with the Screen Club in its stand against censorship. Judge Ben B. Lindsey recently appeared before the Screen Club and pledged himself to go into every pulpit he is allowed to enter, if necessary, to fight the evil. Paraphrasing a familiar and oft-repeated declaration during the Allies' struggle against Germany, the watchword of the industry in Denver is, "It shall not pass!"

In the East, mayors and other municipal officials of New England states, responding to a call from Mayor Andrew J. Peters of Boston, convened in New York City on October 21 and 22. The meeting of the officials was called for the purpose of conferring with representatives of the National Board of Review on the question of motion-picture censorship and the regulation of picture advertising.

The conference went on record as opposed to censorship by state officials and as in favor of a method of supervision similar to that now exercised by the National Board of Review

Exhibitor Closes on Sunday Voluntarily

In Watertown, N. Y., a city of 30,000 inhabitants, where Sunday shows are permitted by the authorities, the management of the Avon theatre, the newest and largest house in the city, has just announced that Sunday shows will be discontinued. The management has decided that Sunday shows are undesirable, and furthermore that the thirty or more employees of the house are entitled to a day of rest. The house has been drawing exceptionally good crowds and has been featuring some splendid pictures. There are four or five other motion picture theatres in the city, and they will continue to show pictures on Sundays.

Messmore Kendall, one of the directors of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, who has been in charge for the purpose of reorganizing its affairs, announces that financial plans have been completed and under the new plan of operation, Frank J. Godsol will be chairman of the Board of Directors and the Executive head of the Corporation.

Samuel Goldwyn will be President.

Jacksonville Looms Forth as Production Center

Through the motion picture committee of the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce preparations are being made to offer motion picture producers 100 per cent. cooperation when they send companies there this winter for work on location. Plans are being made by the committee for cooperating with producers in every way and companies coming to Jacksonville and Florida to work on location during the winter months will receive a welcome designed to impress upon them the fact that their presence is much desired here.

This committee is preparing a plan for meeting producers more than half-way and an effort is being made to induce several of the largest film concerns to locate permanently. The object of the committee is to make Jacksonville the third great producing center for pictures. The fact that this city and its surrounding territory offers practically every range of scenery needed for pictures of every character is to be capitalized on, according to W. R. Carter, chairman of the committee. The further fact that Jacksonville is only 30 hours distant from New York is another fact the committee hopes to impress upon producers, since it holds untold advantages for bringing Broadway players to the Southland's sunshine at moderate expense and with little lost time.

Columbus, Ga., Will Have Two New Theatres

R. E. Martin of Columbus, Ga., who already owns and operates two movie houses in Columbus, announces that two more will be ready for opening about Christmas. One of these houses will be the Bijou, North Highlands, Columbus, while the other will be the Phoenix Opera House, at Phoenix, Ala., across the river from Columbus.

Both houses will seat 1,170. They will be two stories, having a balcony, and orchestra, and will have ample facilities to house road-shows, or even a stock company, should Mr. Martin decide that Columbus would welcome a stock company. The theatres are the stucco bungalow type, being constructed chiefly of concrete and stucco.

What the Exhibitors Are Thinking

Keystone—Popular Prices

Writing under the date of October 2nd, W. H. Brenner, manager of the Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind., addresses the NEWS as follows:

"Your open letter to exhibitors was received today, and will say it pleases me to note the optimistic view you have on picture productions for the year. The part that pleases me most is the statement of better pictures, for we certainly have been fed up on the wild sayings of producers of bigger and better pictures, but as a matter of fact most all of last year's productions would come under the just average class.

"I have done some experimenting this summer, having shown some very big pictures, paying big prices to the distributor, and in turn passing the 'buck' to the patrons who hand their money through the ticket window. I must confess that the advance prices charged have been a failure, my gross not coming up to the gross of the old days of straight ten and twenty cents. Therefore, I have decided to maintain a price of ten cents for children and twenty cents for adults.

"Our greatest trouble in this business is that the men who are promoting production and distributing are not looking to the future, but are going on the old theory of 'get the money today and make the get-a-way,' and business founded on such principles cannot withstand a crisis. Therefore, if we do not get on something more firm than present methods what else may we expect but to suffer sooner or later.

"Generally speaking, it is my opinion that motion pictures are a popular-priced amusement, and when we try to get the thing along further than that we are treading on dangerous grounds. Therefore, pictures must be made and sold to the exhibitor at a price consistent with this idea. Pictures are being marketed today at 100 per cent more in a great many cases than they are worth."

Cheaper Pictures Needed

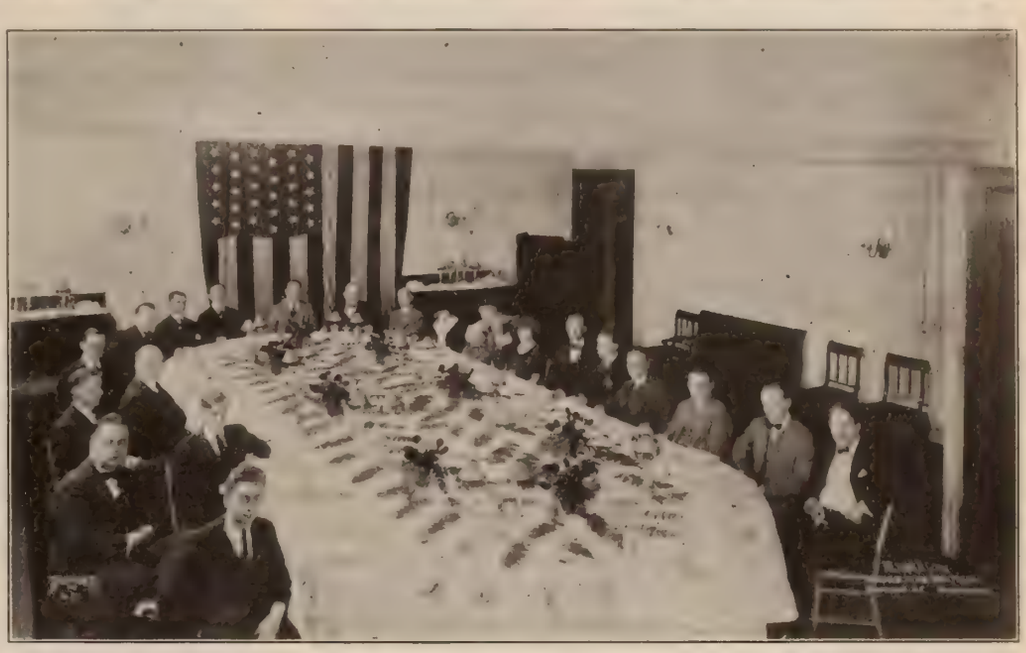
H. A. Dannenbrink, Jr., manager of the Mt. Shasta theatre, Etna Mills, Cal., also asserts that "great pictures cannot pay the small country exhibitor." He writes the NEWS as follows:

"Your letter of the twenty-ninth of last month received, and am taking my typewriter in hand to answer a few of the questions and subjects discussed by you.

"In the first place you state that next year will witness a greater number of great features, super-specials, and assure me of an open market with a number of good pictures. In my opinion, what the theatres need—that is the small ones—is cheaper pictures as well as better ones. A great picture as 'The Miracle Man,' and others of like rank, while no doubt great pictures, cannot pay the small country exhibitor. No doubt these pictures draw a great attendance in the cities, but cannot pay in the country.

"Take my case, for example—I exhibit in a small farming community and necessarily have a limited attendance. My audiences comprise the same people practically every week—people who will not spend more than a limited amount each month for amusements. There is no floating attendance. Now if I show a big picture I cannot hope to draw a bigger house—the people aren't here to draw from, and if I boost the prices my attendance drops. Whichever way I jump I lose. I find in my experiences that if I put on an average picture with a small admission price I make more in the long run than if I show a 'Miracle Man' type of picture.

"However, while writing, I wish to command you on your stand for the exhibitor, for your honest, square reviews and your support of the exhibitor in all ways. Keep up your work, you are the squarest paper I know of and that is the reason I take the MOTION PICTURE NEWS exclusively."



Members of the trade press assembled at a luncheon given by Allen Dwan

Names News, "Our Bible"

The following letter has been received from Robert L. Wilson of the Ark theatre, Orlando, Fla.:

"Received yours of September 29th. Just say in reply that we are only a small, one-horse, colored affair, BUT, THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS IS OUR BIBLE. And that if this theatre is large enough to use the word 'efficiency' in connection with it, we have increased our efficiency just 100 per cent through digging into the columns of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and would not be without it. If it came to the question of a new pair of pants or the NEWS, I am very much afraid that our nether extremities would suffer."

Rentals Bar Big Films

A Louisiana exhibitor, who asks that his name and the location of his theatre be withheld for obvious reasons, adds his quota of personal experiences to the problem of the small-town exhibitor. He writes:

"With reference to 'The Future of the Small Town Exhibitor'—I have been operating a show in a town with a population between 900 and 1,000, for the past six years. The original cost of the show was $1,500, and the building which we occupy was rented at a very low figure, however, a nice building built for the purpose. An electric piano was purchased, to be paid for at $15 per month.

"After struggling with the show for six years, the last payment on the piano has just this month been paid. Nothing has been paid on the original investment; nor have we received anything for our time, and trouble in running the show.

"I do the operating and my wife sells tickets. We run the show three nights per week. Of course, I make my living by holding down another job.

"The majority of the people in a small town are working and making just enough for a living and do not have the money to spend for pleasure, and it is a problem to get them in at the high admission prices which we are forced to charge.

"On account of the high rental we cannot play Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart. Three years ago we could get them at $5. The price now is $20 and $25. We have already raised the admission as much as the public will stand, and any further advance would decrease the attendance.

"The show in the next town near us has closed up and quit, and unless there is some change soon we will doubtless be compelled to give it up."

"At Sea" Without News

The following expression of appreciation has been received from W. H. Durham, proprietor of the Grand theatre, Camas, Wash.:

"I would be all at sea and without a compass if I did not get the MOTION PICTURE NEWS regularly every week.

"I was pleased to note the stand you took in the matter of reviews and think had you done otherwise your NEWS would have lost the most valuable asset for us exhibitors.

"Keep up the good work and please notify me when my subscription is about to expire so I will be able to renew and not miss a number."

M. Rubens of Joliet, Illinois, was in Chicago this week arranging for his campaign to put over "The Restless Sex." He reports a big engagement of "Humoresque"—in spite of the fact that his town, he says is an Irish town.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Linick have left for New York to be gone for about two weeks and will be joined there by Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Jones and Mr. and Mrs. Schaefer. Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Jones will sail from New York on the Aquitania for a six weeks' trip to England and France.

"Deliverance," George Kleine's remarkable production starring Helen Keller, telling the story of the life of this blind and deaf girl who is famous the world over for her achievements, had its first Chicago showing at Orchestra Hall, Monday evening, where, through the courtesy of Mr. Kleine, it was screened as a benefit entertainment for the Vocational Society for Shut-Ins. It was regarded as a particularly appropriate choice of subject for the purpose of the society as it shows what can be accomplished in the face of apparently insurmountable difficulties and the big Auditorium was well filled with spectators who gladly paid $2.50 admission fee to see the wonderful picture and at the same time aid the Shut-Ins.

"Trumpet Island," the spectacular Vitagraph feature, is having a most successful run at the Ziegfeld theatre, according to Manager McKenzie, who states it did more business in the first five days of its engagement at the Ziegfeld than any other picture booked at that house did in seven days.

Robert E. Boland has joined the sales staff of Robertson-Cole and will cover Illinois territory. Mr. Boland formerly was connected with Realart's Chicago exchange and has a very wide acquaintance among exhibitors of the state.

Lynn S. Card, general manager of Frank Gersten, Inc., was in Chicago this week in the interest of "The Unfortunate Sex."

O. F. Spahr, manager of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, has just returned from a trip through the northwest and spent several days with the northwest distributor of Motiographs, Sidney Alexander Lewis. He reports that Mr. Louis is selling a large number of Motiographs and that business prospects for the balance of this year are fine. Ira Jackson, Motiograph traveler, is back at the factory after an extensive trip through Texas, Oklahoma and other southern states and is shortly to start on a trip east.

Allan Dwan, of Associated Producers, spent a day in Chicago last week en route from Los Angeles to New York and was given a warm welcome by his many friends in the Windy City, where, by the way, he began his successful screen career at the Essanay studios in the pioneer days of picture-making. Among the pleasant features of his brief sojourn was a dinner at the Blackstone in his honor, at which were present representatives of the daily and trade press. He expects, while in the east, to complete a story for his next production and will return to California before the end of November.

Richard Robertson, advertising manager for Independent Films Association, is back at his desk after being confined to his home for several days with an acute attack of tonsilitis.

Among the Chicago exhibitors who are under the weather are: C. H. Fricke, New Home Theatre, Armitage and Cicero Avenues, who is about to undergo an operation for dislocation of his shoulder blade; Basil Charukus, owner of the Southern and Oak Theatres, Oak Park, Illinois, is in the hospital with blood-poisoning infection of his right hand caused by a bruise sustained in cranking up his auto; and Eli Schwartz of the E. S. Film Company is very sick and confined to his home.

Chicago was the mecca for many out-of-town exhibitors this week and among those seen around the exchanges were: H. A. Arnold, Colonial Theatre, Colfax, Illinois; Francis Peart, owner of the Star and Lyric Theatre, Lincoln, Illinois; Hoover Opperman, owner of the Crescent Theatre, Pontiac, Illinois, and D. S. Smith, Opera House, Hoopeston, and Princess Theatre, Watseka, Illinois.

The Opera House at Gillispie, Illinois, has been taken over by Noah Bloomer, who now has a theatre in Feeburg, Illinois. Mr. Bloomer plans to remodel the Gillispie house into a first-class movie theatre and is going to book his service in conjunction with his Benld theatre.

John Frundt, owner of the Claremont Theatre, Clark and Belmont, Chicago, has sold his theatre to Jack Freeman, who also owns the California.

C. L. McDermott, Arc Theatre, Logansport, Indiana, is remodeling his theatre at a cost of $10,000 and the improvements will make it one of the finest houses in that section.

The strike on the building that Superior Screen Service is to occupy has been settled. They expect to be in new quarters the first week of November.

George Isaacs has resigned his position as west side salesman of the Greater Starts Production Company.

The Apollo theatre at Forty-seventh and Forrestville has changed hands and will be known as the H. & R. Theatre.

Wm. S. Hart in "Staking His Life" has been purchased by Superior Screen Service. It was immediately booked into the Castle for the week of October 24th, Band Box for week of October 31st and Star Theatre for week of November 7th. Superior Screen Service has also purchased Charles Ray in "The Straight Road," the release date of which will be announced later.

Lewis Daniels and Titus Iocca, exhibitors of Benld, Illinois, were Chicago visitors last week and brought the good news that in six weeks their new theatre will be opened. It will replace the house destroyed by a fire caused by a bolt of lightning last May, and they state that it will cost $45,000 when completed, and will seat 828.

Continuity for Fanark Picture Is Prepared

Director George Everett and N. Brewster Morse, the able young writer, respectively, the producer and author of "The Crimson Cross," the first feature offering of the Fanark Corporation, are now hard at work on the continuity script of a second picture to be produced by Fanark.

This story, which has been titled "The Strength of the Weak," will, it is said, present a novel theme in an unusual way and will be, like its predecessor from the pen of Mr. Morse, "The Crimson Cross," something of an innovation in the way of picture production.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

EXHIBITORS' reports on the feature pictures playing leading theatres of the country are shown on this page. Only such houses as play a picture a full week are represented. An entirely new list of comments appears each week, same being for the bills played the previous week. After publication once on this page the reports are transferred to the "Exhibitors' Box Office Reports" department appearing on the pages backing the "Plan Book" reviews.

The theatres reporting or the cities from which the reports have been secured are not given, since few managers of leading theatres will permit their opinions to be quoted.

Managers who are willing to assist in compiling this most valuable exhibitor service will be furnished blanks for returns and assurance is given that their reports will be considered strictly confidential.

FIRST NATIONAL

Curtain—

Katherine MacDonald gave entire satisfaction. Picture well produced. Splendid supporting cast. Business very good. (East.)

It's by far the best acting Katherine MacDonald has ever done. People liked it well enough to fill two houses for a week simultaneously. Good entertainment. (Middle West.)

Harriet and the Piper—

Regarded this as just a fair picture and it drew average houses. (Mid. West.)

The entertaining value of this picture is good, and drew more than usual business. (West.)

The Master Mind—

Powerful and very high grade picture which did better than average business. (Middle West.)

Forty-five Minutes From Broadway—

Charles Ray always entertaining and patrons welcomed him in a role far removed from his usual characterizations. Held up well for a seven-day run. Picture excellently produced. (East.)

Peaceful Valley—

Very good week. Ray always sure of big business. This considered much better than "45 Minutes from Broadway." (Middle West.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Jailbird—

They all came—but they were disappointed. In point of business, it did very well. But I don't like to disappoint my people. They expected something as fine and peppy as "What's Your Husband Doing?" and "Mary's Ankle." MacLean does good work in a typical Charles Ray part—but it was not his sort of role, at all. May very good, also. (East.)

Civilian Clothes—

This is a good production as far as entertainment goes but it brought only average business. (West.)

Something to Think About—

Didn't do quite so well here the second week as it did the first. It started off big on Monday, but during the remainder of the week drew about average audiences. (East.)

Did not do as well opening week as other Paramount specials. Title keeps public away, says box office. (Middle West.)

The Round-Up—

Stereotyped Western play well produced. Did fair business. (East.)

The World and His Wife—

Poor picture, but the box office returns were about as usual. (West.)

The Restless Sex—

Good picture. Favorable comments on all sides. Average business, consistent all week. (Middle West.)

Started well but fell down last days of run. (West.)

The Village Sleuth—

One of Ray's best productions, and its box-office value was quite up to the usual Ray standards, which is saying a good deal. (Middle West.)

A City Sparrow—

Program picture. Did fair business. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Madame X—

Opened to very poor business, competition to circus and Fair as well. But has built steadily up every since. Business, total, very good. A fine picture—a classic. (East).

Stop Thief—

My house plays particularly to the young people, and they all like Tom Moore. So business was good, and they liked the picture. (East.)

Honest Hutch—

Great as an entertaining feature, and brought a well filled house at each performance. (West.)

It's a Great Life—

Only liked by those who enjoy Mary Roberts Rinehart's humor. Business far below normal. (Middle West.)

The North Wind's Malice—

Not much. Did fair business (East.)

Out of the Storm—

An average picture which brought the usual audiences. (West.)

Jes' Call Me Jim—

A picture which appealed to my audiences. The box office results were larger than usual. (West.)

The Branding Iron—

An entertaining production. Business good during run. (West.)

Officer 666—

Not up to Tom Moore's standard although it did fair business for a week. (M. W.)

FOX

The Honor System—

Did only fair business, though an entertaining picture. (East.)

Les Miserables—

Pretty good houses, audiences pleased. Old pictures. (East.)

While New York Sleeps—

Broke all the house records at advanced prices—30, 50, 75c. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

The Wonderful Chance—

Drew well at both matinee and night performances. Regular O'Brien following of women of city saw to that. Picture is about the most entertaining O'Brien has ever made.

Everybody's Sweetheart—

Despite the fact that this is Olive Thomas' last picture it broke no records here. Audiences were about average. Drew well at matinees. (East.)

METRO

Madame Peacock—

The crowds came to see this picture because they are enthusiastic about the star, Nazimova. Drew well for entire week. (East.)

Worst Nazimova picture ever produced and shows clearly lack of direction and lack of judgment in picking story. Another picture like this and Nazimova is finished. (East.)

Parlor, Bedroom and Bath—

A big risque, very speedy, but undeniably funny, and it went over very well. Even the broadest bits of horse-play did not offend, but on the other hand, was accepted by my audiences in good part. A good box-office attraction for me. (East.)

The Chorus Girl's Romance—

This picture certainly went over big. A pleasing story, well liked by my audiences. (West.)

The Price of Redemption—

Good both as to entertaining value and box office results. (West.)

REALART

You Never Can Tell—

A very pleasing little picture—star has made a place for herself, and this picture suits her to a "T." (Middle West.)

Bebe Daniels shows that she is a real actress. She had a good production, and drew well. (Middle West.)

39 East—

Fine! Acting splendid. Subtitles are a scream. People who had seen the play said the picture was better. Picture brings out the comedy to better advantage. Good cast all the way through. (Middle West.)

A Cumberland Romance—

Did well with this, thought Mary Miles Minter's popularity has dropped a bit because of her persistently saccharine roles. This is as good as her best and pleased. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

Trumpet Island—

Very fine picture. Spectacular and exciting. Did exceptional business first week of showing with indications for a big second week. Broke house records second Sunday. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

Love Madness—

Louise Glaum well liked here and picture presented her in ideal role. Did very good business with it throughout week. (East.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Big Happiness—

This picture contains a good story with plenty of pep. The audience was pleased and receipts were gratifying. (East.)

Love's Twist—

Another quite as hopeless as "The Woman Who Understood." Women are supposed to demand these impossibly good heroines, but this was almost too much.

Recent New York Bonus Parade Gives Exhibitor Real Idea

Edward Costigan, enterprising manager of the Acme theatre of South River, N. J., and one of the most successful exhibitors in the state, got his idea from the big bonus idea parade which was held in New York City recently. If the question is of sufficient importance, he argued, to draw 75,000 men into line for a parade of that sort, it ought to be capable of arousing interest in any community that boasts of a goodly number of former doughboys and gobs among its population, as does South River. And inasmuch as he had booked "The River's End," he decided that this would be an excellent opportunity to tie up a first class exploitation idea with an event of such importance to the community. His plan was nothing more nor less than the staging of a local bonus parade in South River on the opening night of "The River's End," and in addition, he decided to hold an open forum on the bonus question in his theatre before the opening of the regular motion picture program. The expense of the plan was practically nothing. The manager offered to provide funds for a band for the parade, but the service men took hold of the idea with such eagerness that they secured all the music they needed for themselves and made his offer unnecessary. At first it had been planned to make it only a South River affair, but Manager Costigan has a "nose for publicity," and he has a way of getting it into the city desks of the papers in his territory in such a way as to insure its appearance in the daily news columns, so that the idea quickly caught the popular fancy and became a county-wide affair, drawing in about twenty municipalities. Manager Costigan had played the affair up in his advertising, but its novel features had attracted so much free publicity in the news columns that he found it was needless to go to any extra expense for advertising. The parade was a great success, and when it ended at the Acme the place was jammed to the limit. The rally before the show did not last long, and when it was over there was still such a crowd outside that it was decided to have an overflow meeting, and this continued until the first crowd filed out and the house was again filled with the overflow.

Rothafel Has New Presentation Idea

FOR the ballet offering on the Capitol program this week under the title of "Ballet of the Flowers" an addition has been made to the usual dancing number which possesses real audience appeal.

From library strips of film taken of various flowers, most of them colored, a reel of sufficient length to run during the period required for the ballet which Mlle. Gambarelli, and six girls present to the strains of "Whispering Flowers," has been compiled.

A net is hung even with the tormentors on which the image of the various flowers is projected. A special projection lens which enlarges the picture to a sufficient size to completely cover the proscenium opening is used. A black drop back of the net kills that portion of the picture which strikes through the open spaces in the net.

The effect obtained in this combination of dancing and a film show is that the artists are dancing in and about huge flowers of various colors. Selections of film which show butterflys and small birds resting on the blossoms add to the novelty of the combination. The picture image is of course not clearly defined on the net but enough of the flowers are shown to carry out the effect described.

The ballet number is the usual esthetic style with the dancers in the usual costumes.

Mrs. Rood's Knock Boost for Horater

The Cleveland Press, under date of October 22, is responsible for the story that Mrs. P. E. Rood, president of the board of welfare directors over in Toledo, objected to seeing Viola Dana, the movie star, do the "shimmy" in front of the Alhambra theatre, where the popular actress is appearing in "The Chorus Girl's Romance."

Of course, it wasn't Miss Dana in person who was doing the "shimmy." It was only her pasteboard facsimile. And she wasn't really shimmying at all. It was only a fan placed at the proper angle back of the cut-out that made her shoulders move. But even so, Mrs. Root objected. Not only did she object, but she aired her objections in the papers. Result: Manager H. C. Horater, of the Alhambra, did a whale of a business on "The Chorus Girl's Romance," much of which was attracted by the free publicity with which Mrs. Rood furnished him and the amount of attention that the "shimmying" cut-out drew.

"Pirate Gold" Exploitation in 'Frisco Gets Attention of Everybody, Including Newspapers

IN last week's issue was printed a somewhat abbreviated account of how "Pirate Gold" was put over at San Francisco. Possession of all the facts concerning the complete campaign warrants a more detailed account of what was done, how it was done, and who did it. Publicity following day after day, most of it free and on the pages of all the newspapers, is not an every day occurrence, even if searches for "buried treasures" are not so new as exploitation.

However, as all newspaper editors and reporters are aware, "buried treasure" is a subject most ideally rich in the element of "human interest," and being humanly interesting is the most certain of all known means of swelling a newspaper's circulation. California is a golden land of treasure hunting—as nobody knows better than do the editors of San Francisco newspapers. As they were perfectly honest—though completely fooled up to the moment when the last drop of juice had been squeezed out of the "stunt"—they were entitled to accept their increased circulations without any qualms of conscience. That they did so was evidenced by their cheerful and generous treatment of the "Pirate Gold" revelation in the climax.

The Edgar Allan Poe of the great San Francisco "Search for Buried Treasure" hoax is W. W. Kofeldt, manager of the San Francisco branch of the Pathe Exchange, Inc. From first to last he was aided and abetted by Al Lundborg, hotel manager; by Miss Miriam Shelby, who had justifiable ambitions to become a movie actress, as the sequel proved; by Newman's College theatre, and by the San Francisco Police Department—the latter falling in line for a highly ingenious "epilogue."

These preliminaries arranged, the campaign was started with the following newspaper "teaser" advertisement in all the local papers:

"Wanted: Husky laborers equipped with picks and shovels for excavation work near the city. Call at receiving room entrance, rear of Bellevue Hotel. Ask for Mercedes de Cortez, between 10.30 a. m. and 3 p. m. to-day."

"Mercedes de Cortez" was the happy treasure-hunting "pieces of eight" nom de hoax of Miss Shelby, whose picture promptly got printed with such captions as: "Spanish Senorita Seeks Aztec Treasure. Senorita Mercedes Cortez, who explains her presence here from Spain by saying that she is to search Land's End for a fortune buried by her ancestor, Don Hernando Cortez, early day explorer."

Wouldn't any newspaper fall for that? The desired "husky laborers" with picks and shovels proved numerous and eager. Reporters assigned by all the papers to "cover the story day by day." Newspaper readers thanking their lucky stars for relief from an indigestion of political speeches. In the meantime Mr. Hutt, Pathe cameraman, inquired solicitously of the city editors whether they had heard anything about the Spanish treasure-hunting lady at the Bellevue, because if it was an honest-to-goodness tip with a news story in it, he felt it would be his duty to cover it for Pathe News. Mr. Hutt obtained all the encouragement he needed.

By this time, of course, Mr. Kofeldt had properly planted the "treasure." He had discovered in a curiosity shop a weather-beaten, iron-bound chest which had been salvaged from a forgotten wreck. The chest was appropriately filled, taken out to a point just opposite the entrance to the Golden Gate on a dark night, and there buried deep in the sand. It was an admirable spot for the purpose, redolent with traditions of treasure ships that had foundered there in times long past.

The newspapers were much edified to learn that "Mercedes de Cortez" had in her possession a tattered old chart marked to show the spot where her ancestor had buried his gold. That this spot was at "Land's End," any San Franciscan, especially city editors, could readily see. Accordingly, when Senorita Cortez gathered her husky laborers and started for the scene of her quest, she was accompanied by a distinguished retinue of reporters and photographers.

With her own fair hands "Mercedes de Cortez" started the digging, at some little distance from Mr. Kofeldt's "plant," at Land's End, San Francisco. The men with shovels and pick-axes set to industriously. The labors of October 1 were without result. The Senorita remained calm and confident, especially in the hospitable newspaper columns. October 2 the same. October 3, ditto. October 4 also likewise, but growing warmer.

October 5—Eureka!

As was meet and fitting, a spade in the Senorita's taper fingers was first to touch bands of iron. The reporters immediately touched wood. So did half a dozen willing spades. And presently, with numerous cameras focussed on the excavation, including that of the industriously "grinding" Mr. Hutt of Pathe News, the decayed old treasure chest was hoisted into view.

And, as stated in the next morning's papers, "the Senorita collapsed." Reviving, she was so thankful that she would not think of opening the chest until she had "consulted her priest." Unopened, much to the present disappointment of the "gentlemen of the press," the chest was conveyed to the Senorita's hotel apartment. She was certain that four more of the treasure chests were waiting to be dug up—for the present she would be alone with her precious chest of "Pirate Gold."

It was natural that those pregnant words, "Pirate Gold," should have been printed innumerable times during the quest. Newspapers in neighboring cities followed the lead of those of San Francisco. At least one big newspaper syndicate rushed a Sunday feature into preparation. "Pirate Gold" was on all lips; also well displayed at Newman's College theatre, which had naturally taken advantage of the sensation to show the Pathe Serial and pack the house. The management improved on this tie-up by printing coupons in the Daily News admitting boys in a party to see "Pirate Gold"—"A Story of Captain Kidd." And in its advertising displayed the following note:

"The treasure chest found at Land's End will be opened at 12 o'clock Saturday, just after the Daily News' Theatre Party."

But Mr. Kofeldt had found means for another "tie-up" which added more free newspaper notice. At the beginning of the treasure quest the police had interfered on the ground that the Senorita and her laborers were digging on city property—which necessitated obtaining a permit—all of which helped out the main idea. At the coming election the people were to vote on an amendment for increasing the pay of the police. Mr. Kofeldt called on Chief White and arranged for a patrol of three policemen accompanying himself and Miss Shelby, stopping at all the principal street corners and displaying banners hitching up "Pirate Gold" with demands for increased pay for policemen.

This feat followed the opening of the treasure chest by a Captain and two Lieutenants of Police in front of the theatre before an immense crowd, which wildly applauded the result—a large "Pirate Gold" banner!

Not even now were the possibilities of the "stunt" wholly exhausted. Most of the papers printed accounts of the identification of "Senorita Mercedes Cortez" as Miss Miriam Shelby, of Los Angeles, who had accepted this means of winning an engagement as a movie acrtess—which it was admitted she well deserved. As was to be expected, Miss Shelby was immediately besieged with letters from her future "fan" admirers, some of which contained poems and offers of marriage.

Mr. Kofeldt's clever management in delaying the opening of the "treasure chest" enabled the papers to "save their faces" by anticipating the denouement in the usual good-natured satirical vein. But this did not interfere at all with the enthusiastic demonstration of the crowd in the street when the "Pirate Gold" banner was solemnly taken from the chest and flung to the breeze.

Famous Choir Singing at the Capitol

THE Russian Cathedral Choir famous with all music lovers presents three selections as unit 2 of the Capitol's program for the current week. The first is "The Lord's Prayer followed by "Song of the Volga" and "Song of the Volga Boatman." The selections are taken from traditional Russian melodies and are presented in the beauty of their native and original harmonies with the picturesque Russian costumes of the singers augmented by a stage setting by artist John Wenger, himself a Russian by birth.

Mr. Wenger's set is not describable in view of the fact that it is the color harmony that makes it attractive with no attempt to represent either an exterior or interior. The highlights of what he has staged are to be found in a back drop on which colored lights blend in artistic beauty while on both sides of the singers who are placed in two rows running diagonally across the stage, one row sitting and the other standing, are yellow strips reaching from the floor to the flies on which are Russian emblems.

The singing organization is of 21 voices under the direction of Rev. Constantin Bukatoff. The plaintive melody of their blended voices makes music that is rarely excelled.

Window Displays for "Restless Sex" at Chicago

Chicago exhibitors are going to have the benefit of another ready-made window display tie-up like they are using on "Humoresque." The Columbia Graphophone Company found the "Humoresque" tie-up so successful that they have arranged with Oscar A. Doob, of the Paramount Chicago exploitation department, to make window displays in all dealers' stores on "The Restless Sex." In one scene a Grafonola is used with a Columbia record. This scene has been made into an enlargement and cuts printed on 22x28 cards appropriately worded. Window cards so arranged to hold a phonograph record also are prepared, with which regular accessory material will make up attractive window displays. "Fair One," the latest Columbia record hit, is being tied up with "The Restless Sex." Exhibitors playing this picture should get into touch with their nearest Columbia dealer and arrange a window. The Columbia people and the Famous Players-Lasky exploitation department are also communicating with all Columbia stores throughout the Chicago territory, more than two hundred in all.

Here is the way the Sunset theatre of Baltimore decorated for the showing of "Down on the Farm." Even "His Master's Voice" found a pleace in the display

The Empress theatre, Central City, Nebraska, of which E. C. Preston is manager, used a very large banner and a huge cut-out based on a twenty-four sheet to advertise "The Fortune Teller," as is shown in the cut above.

The huge cut-out was so large that it nearly filled the entrance to the lobby. Above on the banner were shown characteristic scenes from the picture.

Manager Preston is another small town showman who believes in exploitation and this is only one of the many stunts he has conceived and executed to attract more business to the Empress.

How the Rialto, El Paso, Puts 'Em Over

The Rialto theatre of El Paso, Texas, recently gathered in a lot of word of mouth advertising with a little stunt put over in connection with a local Chamber of Commerce celebration called "Mystery Night."

O. Wescott Young, publicity director for the Rialto, distributed small envelopes of the "prescription" variety in which was a single frame of positive film on which was the wording "Park Your Car. You Know Where," and a picture of the Rialto.

On this page is a cut from the Rialto's prologue for "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde." The photographer has used double exposure to illustrate how L. F. Klein, technical director of the Rialto, played the Barrymore role in the prologue, making a change from Jekyl to Hyde.

Short Subject Revivals Win

Broadway Managers Bring Back Six Pictures from One to Six Years Old

DURING the past six weeks four of the leading New York theatres have paid an unusual and, perhaps, unconscious tribute to the value of the single reel to the program and its audience pulling power, even if the subject is one that has been exhibited before. Revival of a feature picture from one to six years old on Broadway would be considered a notable event, yet this very thing has occurred in the case of at least six different single reels within as many weeks, and all of them releases from one company.

In each case these pictures have been selected with full knowledge that they had been exhibited before (often they had been played by the same exhibitor), but they were picked either because they lent themselves to special settings and specific pictures, or because their worth was such that they should be repeated.

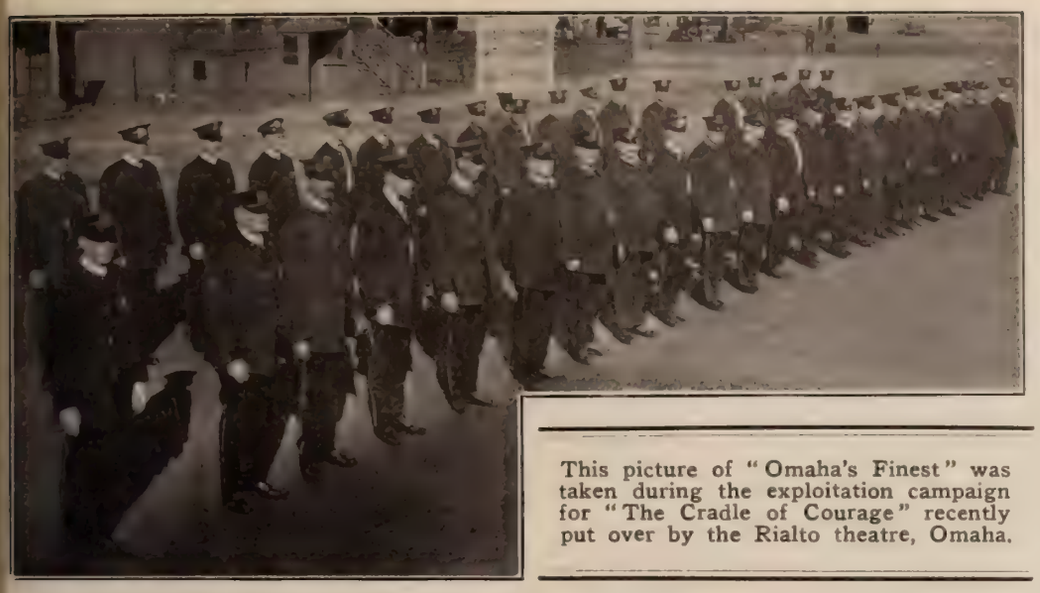
One of the most attractive portions of the bill at the Criterion theatre during the run of "Something to Think About" is "Versailles," a picture that fits in so well with the remainder of the program and the musical setting that motion picture goers will agree that it has created a most delightful atmosphere. Yet "Versailles" was made at the time of the peace conference and has been shown before at either the Rialto or Rivoli. It made such an impression on Dr. Riesenfeld that he recalled it when making up his current program.

Last week at the Capitol one of the most attractive bits on the bill was "Alaskan Wonders." It won round after round of applause and formed a perfect setting for the feature, "The North Wind's Malice." Yet "Alaskan Wonders" had been played by S. L. Rothapfel when he was in charge of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres.

During this same week "Automatic Moving" was used as one of entress on the bill at the Brooklyn Strand, and Managing Director Edward L. Hyman gave it a musical setting that pleased his audiences greatly. This same picture was used at the Capitol about three weeks before, yet Educational is responsible for the statement that the picture is six years old and has been exhibited once or more by practically every theatre in New York.

Another picture to which Mr. Rothapfel gave a special musical setting recently at the Capitol was "Sundown," one of the earlier Robert C. Bruce Scenics Beautiful, and, though many in the audience had doubtless seen it before, its presentation on that particular bill was so thoroughly proper that it got more evidence of appreciation than most new subjects. "The Storm," a hand-colored picture which Educational has been releasing for several years, was another single reel featured at the Capitol.

Only about a month ago Dr. Riesenfeld used "Holland's Rustic Life and Waterways" as a setting for a special Dutch dance at the Rivoli, and the picture was given a similar showing a couple of weeks later at the Brooklyn Strand, with special song and dance numbers and an artistic special stage setting.



This picture of "Omaha's Finest" was taken during the exploitation campaign for "The Cradle of Courage" recently put over by the Rialto theatre, Omaha.

"The Great Redeemer" Tops Rivoli Bill

"THE Great Redeemer" a Maurice Tourneur-Metro production written by H. H. Van Loan being presented in the Rivoli Theatre this week, a house which seldom sees a picture bearing anything but a Paramount or Realart trademark might mean many things of real importance to the trade but probably is to be considered significant only to the point of further establishing the fact that the feature is about the best "western" if it is to be classed as such, to come through in many a day.

"The Great Redeemer" is apparently a paradox, a western with a theme based on religion. It is also about as good an example of what can be done to improve on the traditional western plot as we have ever seen.

Another thing that "The Great Redeemer" makes self evident is that House Peters is an actor.

Small Town Manager Does Things for "Sick Abed"

Very often it takes the small town manager to hit the real spark of genius in exploiting a picture. Manager A. E. Weld, of the Strand theatre, Cedar Rapids, Ia., demonstrated this theory when he put on a brand new idea for the exploitation of "Sick Abed."

In the lobby of his theatre Weld rigged up a dummy hospital room, with the supposedly ailing star in bed and an attractive girl in nurse's costume watching over the patient. The saxaphone, Wally's proverbial companion in his hours of recreation, was on the table at one side. The sick room was decorated with flowers from hypothetical admirers. The institution was christened the "Paramount Artcraft Hospital" and the sign on the entrance read "Please Be Quiet—Wallace Reid in 'Sick Abed.'"

The invalid Wallace had good company during his bedridden spell because the room was decorated with pictures of Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, Billie Burke and other Paramount stars.

Omaha Coppers Boost Hart Picture

Omaha coppers, in their new natty blues, were brought into play on an exploitation stunt for "The Cradle of Courage," at the Rialto theatre, Omaha.

The plan was fertilized and made successful through the efforts of John Loveridge, manager of the Rialto, and Fred Hunt, sales manager at Famous Players' office in Omaha.

"The Cradle of Courage" is a story of a policeman. Hence an appropriate chance for tie-up with a detail of local police, Mr. Loveridge thought.

An invitation to Inspector of Police Andrew Pattullo and a detail of his understudies was extended by Mr. Loveridge. Newspapers printed front-page stories about the police inspector "tricking" his men in leading them to the Rialto theatre instead of drilling them.

The following day the newspapers printed comments on the picture as made by Inspector Pattullo and the various police sergeants.

Big business was done on the picture.

Applying Liberty Bond Ideas to the Picture Business

Liberty Bonds and motion picture exhibiting. Three or four years ago a connection between such might have seemed logical, but to most people the Liberty Bond is a dead issue as far as being a vital factor in the exhibiting game. Yet C. W. Eckhardt, of the Marlow theatre, Helena, Montana, declared that the exhibitor who will analyze the result of the Liberty Bond drives and act accordingly will reach splendid box office results. Americans plan their entertainments. Liberty bonds caused a budget in the family to be a universal American trait. The weekly payments on the bonds started this vogue, and it has just naturally stuck. Now the American family plans on Sunday what shows they will see during the week, and therefore, it is up to the exhibitor to inform the public at the beginning of the week of the attraction or attractions at his house during the coming seven days. That is where newspaper display space hits its top notch of worth to the exhibitor. Use the newspapers that are read on Sundays. The working family uses that day for the family conferences. Sunday night is the universal calling evening for the young folks and they make their dates for the ensuing week at that time. Therefore, give them something so that they will put down your house as a place they can't afford to miss visiting during the coming week. Daily announcements are effective as far as transients go, but Helena has few of that class except at special times, such as the state fairs. "People now buy their amusements on the same basis as they do merchandise. The theatre offering the best value for the admission prices is the theatre that gets the patronage."

Best "What's Your Hurry?" Stunt Pulled to Date

Minneapolis' Fire Department Assists in Putting Over Wallace Reid Picture

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., was the last of the large cities to get on the band wagon and join the "What's Your Hurry?" crew. The statement is not a reflection upon the Minnesota metropolis, for in every city where an anti-speeding campaign has been prosecuted under this slogan it was initiated by a clever exploitation man anxious to boost Wallace Reid's latest picture—"What's Your Hurry?" and the picture only had its first run there recently. The fact remains, however, that when Minneapolis did come in she moved by direct action and established the potentiality of the "What's Your Hurry" slogan by a monster parade that topped in size, splendor and demonstrativeness anything previously shown by the other cities. Not only was the parade immense; but for two weeks previous, the Minneapolis Tribune (morning and evening), which sponsored the campaign maintained a steady barrage of front page stories on automobile accidents and the means of prevention. Cuts, cartoons, line runners, and scenes of accidents figured in the journalistic "What's Your Hurry" movement. Hal Olver, exploitation representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at the Minneapolis Exchange, who planned the continued demonstration found the city roused up to the anti-speeding idea more than he had ever expected so that when the Paramount picture played at the Strand theatre it drew packed audiences who wanted to know what it was all about.

The first act was staged October 9, as the result of Olver's diplomacy and the powerful backing of the Tribune when Fire Chief Ringer rang in an alarm himself which was answered by ten pieces of apparatus all of which participated in a demonstration at the intersection of 6th Street and Nicollett Avenue. The ladder went roof high in a series of stunts, the final one of which consisted in stringing a huge banner across the street: "When you hear the fire gongs ring and the apparatus coming drive to the nearest curb and stay there, or if walking stay on the sidewalk until you are sure all danger is past. What's Your Hurry. National Safety Council."

Enormous crowds gathered to see the firemen at drill and the final act brought down the house. They cheered vociferously and could not help noticing the huge slogan above which the warning sign had been displayed.

The following Saturday, October 16, a huge motor truck parade was staged under the auspices of the National Safety Council in its anti-accident drive. There were 85 trucks in the parade, headed by the Firemen's Band and the Police band in two sections. The main body of the parade was made up of Mack Trucks which under a stage name, feature in the Wallace Reid picture. Every vehicle in the parade carried the huge signs of the National Safety Council for every precaution against traffic accidents and individual advertisements for "What's Your Hurry?" and the Strand theatre.

It was a "Hippoppotamus Parade"

"1812" as Overture Given Novel Rendition

TCHAIKOVSKY'S "1812" is the overture selected this week at the Capitol Theatre with the Russian Cathedral Choir singing the Russian hymn with which the selection opens off stage in place of playing the bars as is usual. This composition in commemoration of Napoleon's withdrawal from Moscow has strains illustrating the pealing of the cathedral bells when victory came to the Russian arms. For this part of the composition additions to the orchestra ensemble have been made to produce the effects at which the composition aimed and also to give the number the volume it requires to fully bring out its greatest musical beauty. The number closes with the Russian national anthem to be immediately followed by the selections rendered by the Cathedral Choir.

ones Gets Good Results rom Post Card Campaign

Using a postcard as a means of exploitg a picture is nothing new, but to conne one's exploitation to a postcard and ll do a business almost capacity for all owings, is a novel stunt. It proved most acious for "The North Wind's Malce," at the Jones theatre, Canon City, lo., October 14-15. It is an inexpense way to exploit a picture.

This lobby display for "The Idol Dancer" was originated by O. F. Wells, manager of the Lincoln theatre, Chariton, Iowa

Capitol Celebrates First Birthday This Week

THIS is Anniversary Week at the Capitol Theatre, New York, and for the event a novelty special film opens the Capitol News number. The strip is largely a trick film made by the Lyman H. Howe studios of the sort that made the Howe shows famous and did much to hold business for the Howe companies in spite of the inroads made by the regular picture program.

The usual birthday cake with the single candle is shown in novelty form, the Capitol employees have been "shot" on the theatre roof and a strip under the title of "Capitol Topics" is presented.

In celebration of the Capitol's first birthday the Russian Cathedral Choir is added to the list of specialty presentations. Their number is described in another column.

Proves Lobby Displays Practical for Small Town House

The cut on this page illustrating this story concerning the lobby display which O. F. Wells, manager of the Lincoln theatre, Chariton, Iowa, constructed for his engagement of "The Idol Dancer" is another proof that the small town showman can get good results from the kind of exploitation that too many believe is practical only for the big town huse.

This is Mr. Wells' own story of "The Idol Dancer" display. That it was inexpensive will be apparent from the recital of how it was constructed.

Mr. Wells constructed a small grass house and placed it in one corner of his lobby. In the doorway of the house was placed a one-sheet board. On the outside four large cut-outs, one made from a 24-sheet and others from smaller paper, were located. Around the cut-outs and house and leading into it, grass was laid on the lobby floor and about the cut-out figure of the dancer constructed from the 24-sheet a bright red sash was tied, on which had been written some Hawaiian words. A small talking machine was concealed inside the hut with Hawaiian records being played during performances.

The result of Mr. Wells' ingenious but inexpensive lobby decorations was big business for the picture, much of which is assumed came from the use of unusual exploitation methods. Anyway, that is the way Mr. Wells figures, and he ought to be in a position to judge.

Above is a view of the lobby of the Superba theatre showing the decorations which Manager Jones used to exploit "Pink Tights" during its run at this theatre

Parade for "Pink Tights"

Manager Jones of the Superba, Los Angeles, Setting Fast Pace in Novelty Exploitation

W. E. JONES, manager of the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, is right out in front when it comes to unusual exploitation.

A good example of his exploitation methods occurred recently when he booked "Pink Tights." As the picture is a "circus" picture, he determined to circus it.

His main stunt was a grand "pee-rade" right up and down the busy streets of Los Angeles. It was a regular parade, too.

To say that the parade was a success would be putting it mildly. The crowd that followed it to the Superba was as big and as enthusiastic as that which follows a real circus parade to the circus lot.

In this case, it seemed as if the parade ended right at a real circus lot, for Jones had fixed up his lobby to resemble the entrance to a big tent show. A marquise effect was used over the entrance bearing the words, "MAIN ENTRANCE—BIG SHOW." Inside the foyer, and visible from the street, was a flat, painted to resemble the long rows of animal cages under the "animal top" of a big show.

From the marquise to the edge of the sidewalk was strung red, white and blue pennants. Over the sidewalk was a large cut-out of Gladys Walton, in pink tights.

Jones did not stop there. Inside theatre, the walls were covered with c vas to represent the walls of a tent. pink color scheme was used through including pink lights. The ushers w dressed as clowns, with peaked caps a big ruffles.

The circus atmosphere was carried also in the presentation.

A drop was painted to represent a c plete circus lot, with the big tent in background and the side-show tents banners in the foreground. Even sandwich stands were prominently view. The rising curtain disclosed clown standing behind a large paper-c ered hoop.

Music and The Picture

The Prologue—

Some Suggestions and Variations of the Idea

By Charles D. Isaacson

WHY the Prologue? The story is told concerning the famous opera "Pagliacci" that the composer, ing for a performance upon the good es of a noted baritone, was told:

But my dear maestro, there is not gh for me to sing. Can't you give me ething else to do?"

nd then came the famous, if not the , music of Leoncavallo—the noted logue to "Pagliacci," known among icians as the Prologue. In it, the n, in the old-fashioned style of play- ghts (who always used prologues as cessity), explains to the audience what oming in the opera, and establishes e clearly the atmosphere of the compo- n. He says: "This is about stage peo- and stage people are human, despite r comedies and their seeming frivoli- —back stage they suffer and mourn same as you." Then the audience ws what is going on between the lines he speeches.

he Prologue is the most classical of inventions and the oldest device of wrights — it comes from ancient ece and Rome and Judea.

et it is the newest invention of the en- rising motion picture impressario.

'e hear a good deal about the Prologue . Even a great many of those who are g some phase of it, are not fully ac- nted with its fullest possibilities.

ay I be therefore permitted this op- unity of analyzing the Prologue, its ibilities, its intentions, at the same time esting some likely variation of its e?

erhaps the best way of describing the ogue is to say that its intention is to olish forcibly before the rise of the ain the most vital and throbbing part he motive of the play. To take the ence fresh from their supper, their problems, their own every-day atmo- re of city or farm, flathouse or man- , lodging room or castle, and trans- them to a state of understanding with play-world. To overcome that inertia h is generally apparent at the begin- of a play or a story: The listener has been thinking of those things which been living in the playwright's mind, director's heart, the players' exist- s; hence, for a little while, until the of the story or play or picture takes hold of the listener's attention, the running start has been a limping one—the Prologue supplants this condition with a concentrated essence of the best bit of the play or its atmosphere beforehand.

The Prologue is equivalent to the Chairman of the meeting who introduces the Speaker with eloquence and generous compliments. The Speaker is just a Speaker, but the Chairman classifies him into a Governor of a Great State, who did this and that and the other thing for the good of humanity, the One Person in the Universe who is equipped to discuss this Most Throbbing Subject of So and So which has been chosen for this Evening's meeting. So with the halo upon his head, and his atmosphere enveloping him, the Speaker advances amidst great applause, already Fairly Well Established in the Attention of his listeners—with a running start sufficient to enable him to Jump Off at Once!

If you were sitting in your office in the midst of all your multitudinous duties, Mr. Exhibitor or Mr. Director, and a gentleman walked in with a Brilliant Idea, you might listen and you might not. But if a few moments before his arrival, your best friend and trusted adviser had telephoned you in great secrecy: "There's a famous gentleman coming to see you; he's done more for the big Blankey-Blank folks in Such and Such a City than anybody else. In fact, he's the one that made them. He sprouts ideas like a field does wheat. And every idea is a jewel and every word a pearl"—would you be looking for that man? Would you let him get away?

If the traffic policemen of your amiable city saw a red touring car go by, it would mean nothing out of the ordinary to them, but if word had been sent ahead:

"Watch for the Sing Sing convicts just escaped; they are in a red touring car"—every automobile which faintly resembled the passionate color would get the watcher on his most admirable behavior and set his blood boiling.

In other words, a Prologue can establish the atmosphere of the picture. It can take the best moment of the play and put it first (without giving the secret away). It can offer the Great Opportunity first in a glimpse so the less important bits will be passed over graciously. It can pique the curiosity and whet the desire. It can establish the state of mind and the mood of the action. It can tell the audience how wonderful the author, actor, director is—how he went through hell's fire and the North Pole's ice to bring what is being presented tonight; it can show all the past impossibilities of getting what has been filmed. It can simply arouse the imagination and the curiosity by suggesting that there is something hidden apparently which only the more alert clever ones in the audience will fully comprehend.

If the Picture is of the Far North, the Prologue might be an icy scene, with freezing music, whistling winds, shivering Eskimos—possibly an actual blast of frozen wind shot across the hall added for realism—close-ups of icicles, snow-drifts, seals, ice-bound ships, etc., etc. Possibly the introduction of a living singer in furs with a dog-sleigh, possibly something from the music of Peer Gynt or Olaf Trygvason. That's one way. But that same picture might contain some moment of tragic or melodramatic suspense which would cause the showman to forget the locale of the action and concentrate on the action itself. Thus, the climax of the play might be a terrible mountain-slide. Then the Prologue could be a scenic which would represent that moment—with music that built up the horror of it. Even some of the actual film itself might be used in the Prologue—the best bit from it—the memory of the Prologue would make the actual showing of the scene of a stronger value later. Just as when a magazine editor lifts out the climax from his story and illustrates it with a picture and a title un-

Ascher Announces Big Deal

Many Important Re-Issues Are Acquired for New York District

ONE of the most important deals announced this week in film circles was the acquisition by Ascher Features, Inc., of specials and re-issues starring Douglas Fairbanks, Norma Talmadge, Olive Thomas, Charles Ray, Frank Keenan, Gloria Swanson, Louise Glaum, William S. Hart, etc., for distribution in New York City and State and Northern New Jersey including Trenton, with offices at New York and Buffalo.

In addition to the above, which number several hundred, Ascher Features, Inc., also took over the franchise for the same territory to distribute the entire output of the Hamilton Film Corporation in which are included the Famous Directors' Series and twelve new Ascher productions now under way, all of which will be what are rightfully termed big specials. There will be a complete line of new posters and accessories.

In connection with the Triangle Features, the Mack Sennett Keystone Comedies will also be handled exclusively by the Ascher Company in the territory above named.

Ascher Features, Inc., of which Sidney Ascher is president and Joseph A. Jacobs is treasurer is a new company formed especially to take over the valuable franchises of both the Triangle and Hamilton Corporations and to acquire such other pictures that have unusual box office values will be in the independent market from time to time.

Although Sidney Ascher is president of both Ascher Productions, Inc., and Ascher Features, Inc., he wishes it announced that the two concerns are separate and distinct corporations and in no way connected one with the other. One is strictly a producing company that will make a series of big specials throughout the year to be offered the state rights buyers and the other company will confine its activities to the distribution of several large producing companies and numerous independent producers.

The physical distribution of all Ascher Features, Inc., pictures will be made through the Alexander Film Co., with offices at 130 W. 46th St.

Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has issued the following statement: "My attention has been called to an item appearing in some of the trade papers relative to one, Frederick Shipman, in which it is stated that the Arrow Film Corporation will supply Mr. Shipman with films for a chain of theatres which he represents.

"I desire to state that this is not correct, Mr. Shipman in no way represents the Arrow Film Corporation and furthermore the Arrow Film Corporation is not supplying and does not intend to supply Mr. Shipman with any of its products.

New Reelcraft Exchange Opens

Cleveland Branch to Handle Reelcraft Pictures Only

THE REELCRAFT PICTURES CORPORATION announces the establishment and opening of an exclusive Reelcraft Exchange branch in Cleveland, Ohio. The formal opening will take place on November 1st in the new quarters at 2169 East 9th Street, with Mr. George W. Wilson in charge as manager. The addition of the Cleveland office gives Reelcraft six exclusive Short Subject exchanges in its distributing organization, other cities where Reelcraft Exchanges are already established include New York, Chicago, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, and Minneapolis. These offices together with Independent State rights exchanges in every other important distributing center complete the Reelcraft distributing organization.

George W. Wilson, manager of the new Exchange, was transferred from the Indianapolis branch of Reelcraft, where he has been branch manager for some time. In the Cleveland territory he is already well known among exhibitors having covered the section for two years in behalf of another film company.

G. L. Parrish, has been promoted to the position of manager at the Indianapolis Exchange, assuming the vacancy caused by the transfer of George Wilson. Parrish has covered the Indianapolis territory for the past year and served as Assistant Manager at that exchange during the past six months.

The first releases to be distributed at the Cleveland office include the "Bud (Duncan) and His Buddies", single reel comedies, the "Royal Comedy" series of two reel comedies, the "Romance of Youth" series and the Milburn Moranti comedies.

"This new branch is only a part of our general plan of expansion," states R. C. Cropper, President of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation. "We are opening this Cleveland branch because we believe it the only possible means of presenting our many series of Short Subject releases where there is such a density of population and exhibitors who serve them. By owning our Exchanges we are able to give a personal co-operation that is not otherwise possible.

"Many other important expansions are also under way relative to Reelcraft distribution and releases. For our Short Subject program we have already arranged for a series of Reelcraft Scenics to follow our "Bud and His Buddies" single reel comedies on the market. This Scenic series has been planned for a long time and releases have been coming in for the past three months, being re-cut and edited at our general office. They will be released weekly, and known as "Reelcraft Scenics".

"Another important addition to our releases will be a series of releases, planned to be just a bit different from any other series now offered to exhibitors. The pictures will be two reels in length, combining all the action and thrills of the serial with the mystery and suspense of a mystery drama, yet complete in each release a story of intense dramatic situations that will keep the audience guessing right up to the very finish of the picture. Work on the series has already been started, the stories are now being written, and every detail will have been completed before the actual shooting is commenced, to insure an entire series of releases that will measure up to a new high standard of quality set by Reelcraft.

New Association States Plans

Policies of Associated Photo-Plays Given in Official Statement

"ALL past experiences in the making and exploiting of Motion Pictures have consistently taught that neither producer, distributor, franchise holder or exhibitor can successfully combine any two or more branches, without drifting into factory production.

"Every analysis has shown that any effort to combine these branches results in the assembly and coordination of the various branches, upon a plan and with a range so big as to preclude the possibility of their successful operation.

"The outstanding lesson of all such attempts, including those that enjoy unlimited capital, with few exceptions, is that motion pictures cannot be produced in factories, but must be produced in studios.

"Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., through a careful study of present-day problems of all branches of the industry, in the production and distribution of motion pictures, has been able to devise a plan that meets the problems that seem to be the principle cause of complaint from Producer to Exhibitor.

"Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., carefully selected, among the most fitted and available producers, six producing units, alloting each but five pictures for the year, to be distributed through twenty-two franchise holders, insuring franchise holder and exhibitor, in each territory, thirty studio-made pictures for the year, under Associated Photo-Plays' plan, at actual production cost, plus twenty-five per cent as a fixed producer's profit, with an added fifteen per cent thereof for Associated Photo-Plays' distribution.

"The responsible and dependable franchise holder is thereby offered its franchise, without one cent of advance, and by it insured the prompt delivery of thirty pictures for the year, at a cost so much less than he is able to obtain from any other source, and of a quality the equal of any, that in itself will bring the Exhibitor to the holder of its franchise.

"Under this plan, the producer must prepare an itemized, sworn account of the actual production cost of each picture, an exact copy of which is forwarded to each franchise holder when delivery is made, bearing a certificate of confirmation as to cost, and certifying to the entertaining qualities of each production, under its novel acceptance plan.

"There are now in the course of construction six five-reel productions, with stars and all star casts, for the first deliveries under this plan, which has been announced for January 1, 1921.

"The keynote to the Associated Photo-Plays' plan is found in the policy of "A square deal from producer to exhibitor—a plan converting a game into a business."

"Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., will, in the very near future and in the following issues of this publication, make an announcement of special interest to the franchise holder and exhibitor, and all inquiry in its regard may be had in advance, by communicating with the producing office, which is located in the Baker-Detwiler Building, 412 West Sixth Street, Los Angeles, California. The location of its executive office, in New York City, will be later announced.

"Midchannel" Is Popular with Californians

Opening at the California theatre in San Francisco "Midchannel" set a record for box-office reports on all Young productions to date, according to reports received by Equity. The popularity and strength of Young in the West was borne out by similar successes, it is said, at the Kinema in Los Angeles, the Florence in Pasadena, Loew's State in Oakland, the Plaza in San Diego and the American in Ventura, Cal. The picture played a week at each of the houses named.

Three Aywon Pictures Find Ready Buyers

A number of contracts were drawn up this week by Nathan Hirsh, president of The Aywon Film Corporation, covering state rights territory on "The Woman Above Reproach," "The Evolution of Man," "The Woman of Mystery," and "When Dr. Quackel Did Hide." These are now in the mails and when signed by those taking over the rights announcements will be made.

Practically every one of the buyers who have seen these pictures screened agree with Mr. Hirsh that they are the finest line of box office attractions he has ever handled and when one considers the long list of hits he has put out it would seem that the four pictures mentioned should prove of unusual value to the exhibitors of the country.

The list of current attractions being state righted by Aywon cover practically all of the most wanted varieties of motion picture entertainment. "The Woman Above Reproach" is a well acted and produced society melodrama; "The Evolution of Man" is a distinct novelty with a marvelous Man-Ape in the leading role; "The Woman of Mystery" is a most thrilling adventure story starring Frances Ford and Grace Cunard, while "When Dr. Quackel Did Hide" is a highly amusing travesty on the well-known drama in which Charlie Joy and his Miami Beauties appear in a five reel laugh provoker. It is a line up of motion pictures that should be the means of making up very attractive and business getting programs for the best of houses.

For every picture Mr. Hirsh has had prepared a fine line of publicity and advertising material as well as posters, in fact everything that is necessary to put these features over in the way they deserve.

The Creation Films, Inc. have just issued a sixteen page press book on "For the Freedom of Ireland," the feature which they are now offering on the State Right market.

Creation now owns the old Kalem Studios in Cliffside, N. J. and announce that they intend to finish the next release in November.

Sherman Allots Many Franchises

Sixty Per Cent of Country Now Disposed Of

ANNOUNCING that franchises in Sherman Productions Corporation had been allotted totalling sixty per cent of the entire territory in the United States and Canada, Harry A. Sherman, president of that company, returned to New York early this week after a ten day swing around the country visiting exchange centers.

Mr. Sherman's whirlwind tour was made thru the middle west and south in response to the numerous inquiries which followed the announcement of the formation of Sherman Productions Corporation and its unique plan of operation with its distributing units. Under this plan each franchise holder is assured a minimum of twelve attractions annually, on a strictly cost basis without advances of any kind, under a guarantee which practically secures the exchange against loss.

Mr. Sherman was very enthusiastic over the reception he received in all the cities visited and the impression which the Sherman plan had made on exchange men everywhere.

While so novel in its advantages to the distributor as to be almost revolutionary in character, he said, every exchangeman with whom he spoke was tremendously impressed by the fairness of the proposition and the possibilities which Sherman Productions contained for them for profitable handling.

As an opportunity to obtain attractions of big entertainment value at a definite minimum expense and without initial outlay, the Sherman plan had never been equalled many declared.

"If I could have remained away from New York another ten days, said Mr. Sherman, "I would have returned with Sherman Productions Corporation sold one hundred per cent.

Every independent exchange man who examines the proposition doesn't want to delay a minute in getting a franchise and it has now become merely a matter of selecting the 'livest' and most responsible exchanges in each territory to handle our output.

"I don't hesitate to say that a fairer or better proposition than the Sherman plan was never made to the independent exchange men of America. And what is more every man of them recognizes it, when it is presented to him.

"My problem now, is not one of obtaining distributing units to handle the product of Sherman Productions Corporation, but of production entirely.

"That is why I am back here in New York on a flying visit, for I must first complete my local organization and arrange for adequate office accommodations and then take another trip to perfect plans and acquire facilities, which will make the name of Sherman Productions a trade mark, which will mean entertainment quality and box office value, wherever it appears.

"Frankly, while it is still too early to say very much and I do not believe in dealing in futures in this business, I don't think its an overstatement to say that when I am ready to announce the plans I now have in mind for Sherman Productions Corporation, that I believe they will be something of a sensation.

"I am going to give the exchanges who handle Sherman productions, the best obtainable in the way of story, direction and artistic talent and it is for this purpose that I have cut short the highly gratifying trip just ended.

"When I have concluded arrangements looking to this end, which will be within the next ten days or fortnight on my return to New York I will then be ready to place the balance of the territory which Sherman Productions Corporation still has available."

Serial Is Given A Trial by Jury

THE campaign launched by Bob Lynch, manager of the Metro Film Exchange of Philadelphia, on the new Joan serial "The Invisible Ray," starring Jack Sherill and Ruth Clifford, is said to be assuming such proportions as to create a sensation in that territory. Three weeks ago, Bob Lynch purchased the rights of distribution of this 15-episode picture for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. To-day the great subject of interest among exhibitors in that district is "The Invisible Ray" and its unique "trial by jury."

This trial screening began October 1st, before any advertising in any trade paper or by circular was begun. The exhibitors who passed upon "The Invisible Ray" were total strangers to the serial, and came absolutely uncommitted. The stipulation was that they do not communicate their sentiments to one another, and that they affix their approval or disapproval entirely on their own deliberation. The ballots given them contained eight items to be passed upon—cast, direction, thrills, continuity, etc. Each item was rated in proportion to the exhibitor's own estimate. He was asked to fill in the percentage each item bore to the entire worth of the serial, in his own opinion. Some exhibitors rated thrills 75%, others rated them lower. He was then to decide whether the episode seen contained full measure of each item.

The results of this count, taken on the first three and the last three episodes, show that the verdict of the jury was unanimously in favor of "The Invisible Ray" as possessing every element of drawing power to the required degree. Naturally, it did not receive the same rating from each of the jurymen, but despite the variation, every count gave the serial a high passing mark. The full figures will be announced next week.

It could have been easier to have a blanket judgment passed upon it, and to simply ask the jurymen whether they approve or disapprove of the strength of "The Invisible Ray," the answer would have been unanimous, as the vote shows, but it was the desire of Bob Lynch to make the trial minute and precise.

Great Praise for "Isobel"

Curwood Picture, on Independent Market, Gets Recommendations

FEW pictures, it is claimed, have been offered the state rights buyer, backed with the praise which have been given James Oliver Curwood's latest film drama, "Isobel, or The Trail's End", from his novel of that name. This production, presented the independent field by George H. Davis, in points of photography, direction, cast, dramatic value, story and heart interest, is said to be one of the biggest pictures of the year. Of its author, no further comment need be made—Curwood's stories have proved to be popular and good box office attractions. "Isobel" has been called his finest and biggest story, and the film production has brought out everything which made it so.

The cast is headed by House Peters, whom the role of Billy McVeigh in the picture fits like a new glove. In his support is Jane Novak, in a role in which her sympathetic nature and personality was never portrayed to better advantage.

"'Isobel' is a love story," announced Mr. Davis, "a deep, vital chronicle of a strong man's love and a pure woman's faith in an erring husband. This theme, followed in the typical Curwood style has been completely absorbed in the film version, Director Edwin Carewe having seemingly joined forces with the author to present an adequate picture of the emotions and dominant characteristics of the strong men and women who walk through the scenes.

"We call it the one hundred per cent picture, because it crystalizes in one film production all of the things which have been said to be necessary in a successful portrait of life as it is. No one knows the Great Northland better than Curwood; no director has ever given Curwood to the photoplay loving public in a more satisfactory manner than has Carewe in 'Isobel'; no better photography has been seen in any other production in years; and last of all but not least, House Peters and Miss Novak head a cast which was carefully selected according to type—a cast that I never saw, in all my experience in the industry, bettered or even equalled."

Larger Studio for Capital

Doubleday Studios Are Improved to Meet Demands of Producers

EXPANSION is the order of the day at the Doubleday Studios, according to B. Daniel Russell, who will journey back to Los Angeles from Chicago next week to permanently make his headquarters at the studios, acting as production manager for Russell, Greiver & Russell and the Capital Film Company.

Mr. Russell states that the studio, after present plans are completely carried out, will be the most complete in the independent field. Six acres of ground adjoining the present studio at Edendale has been purchased. On this piece of property a complete Western street will be built.

A huge concrete swimming tank is already under construction for use in filming of comedies which are soon to be started. Five stages are being added to the present equipment with twenty dressing rooms for the better comfort of the actors.

The comedies that will be made for Capital are to be one-reel situation comedies of the better class. The scenarios to be written by Charles Sumner, a well-known playwright.

In order to facilitate the handling of film, a well equipped laboratory is being installed to take care of the developing of the negatives and the cutting and assembling of the finished product. Twenty thousand dollars has been put into scenery and up-to-date studio lighting equipment.

Russell, Greiver & Russell have about closed a contract for a very prominent star for society dramas. As soon as this contract is consummated, Mr. Russell will organize the company and begin production of the five-reel society dramas.

The Capital Film Company intends to make the product they release, the strongest and best that is to be had in the independent field. All productions will have to be up to a certain standard of excellence, determined by the Capital management, before it will be accepted for release.

Hart on Third Production

Independent Film Star Continues Work at Ford Hollywood Studios

NEAL HART, who is making his third picture for Pinnacle Productions at the Francis Ford studios in Hollywood, will continue his production activities at that place, according to information obtained from the Chicago offices of the Independent Films Association this week. Leo White, star in the two-reel Pinnacle Comedies, is also at work at the Ford studios.

Both of these producing units, together with the company officers and members of the production staff, have been provided for by improvements and enlargements at the Ford studios, and it is announced that this centrally located spot will be headquarters of Pinnacle activities indefinitely.

The Pinnacle studios in Glendale, where Neal Hart's first two pictures were made, are being retained by the company and will be used constantly. The Western street at the Glendale studio and several of the big permanent outdoor sets are being "shot" in the current Hart picture. The administration offices, however, have been completely removed to Hollywood.

This change was made necessary, according to General Manager Eckels, of Independent Films, by the rapidly expanding production requirements of the two units now at work.

The picture Neal Hart is now making will be released under the title "Danger Valley."

Announcing Service Grows

National Screen Service Reports Appreciation of Announcements

NATIONAL SCREEN SERVICE, INC., eight months ago, conceived the idea of furnishing an announcement service in artistic, entertaining motion picture form, instead of through the inadequate representation which the older form of announcing possessed.

The officials of this company have labored diligently to introduce to the industry, something in keeping with the artistic development that has been noted in every branch and during the last few months, this concern has devoted its energy almost exclusively to perfecting the service to a point where it would meet with the general approval of exhibitors and their audiences.

"It can now be safely stated," announces the company, "that our object has been accomplished, and the presentation of coming attractions in motion picture form has passed from its initial stage to that of proven performance.

"During the past week at a leading New York theatre, one of the large producers was pleasantly surprised to see a production in which he had invested $400,000, announced with a beautiful close-up, followed by the most dramatic scene of the production. He stated that for the first time in his experience as a producer, he had the satisfaction of seeing his efforts properly represented. All of the leading producers have the same attitude of mind toward the activities of the National Screen Service, Inc.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Three scenes from Robertson-Cole's super-special, "813," an Arsene Lupin story, with Kathryn Adams and Wedgwood Nowell in principal roles

Allan Dwan Booked for Two Big Conferences

The arrival of Allan Dwan in New York from Los Angeles, where he recently completed "The Forbidden Thing," his first Associated Producers' offering, was the signal for putting into effect an arrangement whereby the producer will hold two important conferences to outline definite exploitation plans for productions he has already made, some of which are yet to be released.

One of these conferences will be with officials of Associated First National, and the other with the publicity and exploitation department of Mayflower which is presenting the last six productions Dwan made. These include "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Luck of the Irish" distributed through Realart and "A Splendid Hazard", "In the Heart of a Fool", "The Scoffer" and "The Sin of Martha Queed" being issued as First National Attractions.

Guy Navarre Appointed to Seattle Office

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces that Guy Navarre has been appointed manager of its Seattle office. Mr. Navarre has been assistant and sales-manager of the Paramount Seattle office where he has given a great deal of attention to the sale of short subjects and is regarded as a man especially competent to handle Educational product.

Bookings of Educational's comedies, scenics, special and other short subjects are reported already heavy through the Northwest though the Seattle exchange has been in operation but a short time. The pictures are being featured at all the Jesen and von Herberg houses.

Detective Series Is Ready

Robertson-Cole to Issue First of Arsene Lupin Tales Late in Fall

ROBERTSON-COLE announces for release in the late fall, "813," the screen version of the Arsene Lupin story of the same name. Previews of "813" have assured Robertson-Cole officials that they have the best detective and mystery production of the year, according to word from this distributing firm. Robertson-Cole is counting on the wide fame of the Arsene Lupin stories, which were written by the French author, Maurice Leblanc, to recommend "813" to exhibitors and picture patrons.

But "813" by no means will rely on the fame of its central character and writer for its appeal, it is stated. Every care was taken to make the picture one of power and entertainment, able to stand with the better attractions being released by all companies, entirely apart from the publicity attached to its origin, says Robertson-Cole.

The Arsene Lupin story "813" was chosen by Robertson-Cole for the first picture on account of its striking originality, its great suspense and its deep human theme.

Wedgwood Nowell who is known as "the best Latin type on the American screen," is featured in "813," taking the part of the celebrated detective. Mr. Nowell in "813" is supported by a cast which includes Ralph Lewis, Wallace Beery, William V. Mong, J. P. Lockney and Kathryn Adams.

Crisp at Work in London

Paramount Director Well Started on New Production, "Appearances"

LETTERS received at the Famous Players-Lasky offices state that Donald Crisp is well started on his production of "Appearances," Edward Knoblock's first screen story, which he is filming at the London studios of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd. The picture is the first of the series of Donald Crisp All-British Productions. The story which was scenarized by Margaret Turnbull is said to be one of universal appeal and represents the struggle of the professional classes to "keep up appearances" under the pressure of present-day economic conditions.

In selecting his cast, Mr. Crisp has drawn artists from the ranks of the most eminent of English stage players. The leading woman is Mary Glynne, who was the heroine of Hugh Ford's recently completed production of Henry Arthur Jones's "The Call of Youth," and who recently signed a long-term contract with the British company. In the leading male role is Langhorne Burton, one of the best known British actors of both stage and screen, while other notable members of the cast are Percy Standing and Marjorie Hume, both of whom had prominent roles in Hugh Ford's first English production, "The Great Day."

Strong Cast Is Chosen for George Arliss

Harry Leonhardt and Andrew J. Callaghan, who are producing "The Devil" with George Arliss in the stellar role for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., have engaged a strong supporting cast for the star. The picture is scheduled for release by Pathe Exchange, Inc. The cast includes artists with established reputation on both stage and the screen, says Pathe, in announcing the list of players for this production.

Sylvia Breamer has been engaged for the part of Mimi, the naughty, bewitching little grisette. Lucy Cotton has been chosen for the role of Mary Martin, the emotional young wife, who is torn between the suggestions of the devil and the promptings of her own better nature. Edmond Lowe portrays the artist, the beloved of both Mimi and Mary. Roland Bottomley plays the part of Mary's unsuspecting husband. Mrs. Arliss is also cast [illegible] in her husband's stellar vehicle. James Young will direct.

"So Long Letty" Hailed by Trade Reviewers

If the warmth with which "So Long Letty," the Robertson-Cole super-special, produced by Al Christie, has been received by the trade paper reviewers can be taken as a prophecy of its future, this six reel comedy-drama, first of a series of greater pictures to be made by Christie, will be one of the most profitable productions of the year to American exhibitors, declares Robertson-Cole. Previews of the attraction have drawn forth considerable praise for the picture as an attraction full of bright, clever situations, wholesome humor and not without the vital elements of surprise and suspense.

Types from the William Desmond Taylor production released by Realart, "The Furnace"

Food for Set Goes to Poor

Eatables Assembled for Scene in "The Furnace" Given to Charity

THE donation to a Los Angeles charity organization of all the food bought for the filming of the wedding scene in William Desmond Taylor's new production, "The Furnace," is upheld by Realart Pictures Corporation, which is releasing this picture, as an instance of conservation and avoidance of waste in the production of an elaborate motion-picture special. Although the picture is described as a lavish production, which entailed the expenditure of large sums of money to assemble its fine settings, yet very little material was wasted, declares Realart.

In the wedding-breakfast scene, for instance, says Realart, it was necessary to arrange the dining table according to the best customs of the hospitable English home. A Los Angeles restaurant was therefore called upon to furnish a wide variety of eatables and delicacies—more than enough to supply breakfast for the wedding party and the many extras who were employed in the taking of the scene. After the action in this scene had been filmed, the food was handed over to a local charity organization, says Realart, for distribution among the poor of the city.

Agnes Ayres plays the leading role in this production. She is supported by Jerome Patrick in the opposite role. Theodore Roberts and Milton Sills are also cast in important parts. Lucien Littlefield, Mayme Kelso, Betty Francisco, Helen Dunbar, Robert Bolder, Edward Martindel and Fred Turner.

Walsh May Go to Coast

Producer-Director May Go West to Do Next Picture Is Report

THAT R. A. Walsh may go to the Coast to do his next feature looms as a possibility, according to an announcement from the Biograph Studio where Walsh is now busy cutting his second independent production which Mayflower will present as a First National Attraction.

If the plan now under consideration is put into effect the Walsh unit will be transferred West and linked up with the Los Angeles branch of the Mayflower producing organization. Although no official announcement has been made in connection with this contemplated move, it has been rumored in the trade for some time that such a project was under consideration.

The reason set forth for the change is that suitable locations for the next Walsh story can best be obtained in Southern California; also the fact that more stage room will be required for the gigantic sets which the producer proposes to build for interiors in his production.

Considerable inconvenience and difficulty was experienced because of cramped stage space during the filming of the feature Walsh is now cutting. On account of the limited capacity of Eastern stages it was necessary for the producer to use three studios while "shooting" the attraction he is now completing. This resulted in delays that slowed up materially the making of the picture, and it is to avoid a similar contingency in connection with the next release that the move Westward is being considered.

Walsh is now devoting the utmost attention to cutting his current feature, the title of which has not yet been announced.. The all-star cast will feature Miriam Cooper, Conway Tearle, Anna Q. Nilsson, Henry Clive and Neil Moran.

Rare Shots in Pathe Review

New Wireless Invention of Great Service in War in Review No. 80

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces that its Pathe Review No. 80 contains extraordinary views of Dr. James Harris Rogers' underground and sub-sea wireless system. This system, says Pathe, was put to an extensive and practical test by the Navy Department after it was discovered that the Germans, following our entry into the European struggle, had succeeded in "jamming the air" to an extent that at times practically destroyed our wireless communications with Europe. The Pathe statement besides emphasizing the important part played by this system during our conflict with Germany also describes the invention as one which has "revolutionized both the theory and practice of wireless telegraphy all over the world."

In Pathe Review No. 80, declares the distributing organization, there are fully pictured and diagrammed the actual workings of this wonderful invention. The taking of the views, according to the Pathe account, was supervised by Dr. Rogers himself, and the pictures are presented in such a way that no audience can fail to grasp the tremendous importance of this American scientist's discovery. Moreover, according to Pathe, this is the first time that a complete account with official details has been given to the public, concerning this invention.

The invention first came to the attention of the Army and Navy Departments officially when the military authorities were searching for a way to offset the Germans' encroachments upon our wireless messages, says Pathe. Mr. Rogers' invention was found registered in the Patent Office. Through the cooperation of officials high in the Navy Department, the invention was subject to tests within a short time. Upon being proved practical, the system was installed first at New Orleans, then at Belmar, N. J., and later at various places on the other side of the Atlantic. Its installation resulted in the resumption of wireless communication with Europe without further interference from Germany's agents, declares Pathe.

Fox Studio to Be Enlarged

Addition to New York Studio to House Several Executive Offices

DEMOLITION of the building on the southwest corner of Fifty-sixth Street and Tenth Avenue, to make way for a new addition to the big studio and administration building of Fox Film Corporation, has been completed. This space, which adjoins the present building—formally opened last May—was included in the original plans, but could not be had at the time, owing to leases which could not be broken. The new addition will be used mainly for expansion of the executive offices.

While additional space has been needed for offices, this has not hampered at all the work in the studio proper, which is said to be the largest under a single roof in the world. Among the notable pictures turned out here since the studio was opened are "Bride 13," the first serial produced by Fox; "The White Moll," the first special feature made by Pearl White and the first of her series for Fox; "While New York Sleeps" the 1920 sinemelodrama of life in the metropolis, which had such a sensational run as a special production at the Lyric and Astor theatres in New York; the special "Over the Hill," which ran four weeks at the Astor theatre, New York, and now has been transferred to the Nora Bayes theatre; and "The Face at Your Window," a great production written by Max Mercin.

Two Stories Bought by Metro for Filming

Metro Pictures Corporation has just purchased for production on the screen the motion picture rights to "The Unchartered Sea", a novel by John Fleming Wilson, and "Sorrentino", an original story by Donn Byrne. The former of the two stories which Metro will produce in the fairly near future, appeared serially in Munsey's Magazine, while the latter is a story written to order for Metro by Mr. Byrne under his general contract with the company.

"The Unchartered Sea" and Sorrentino" will be placed in production before long, although the exact dates have not as yet been announced.

Betty Francisco and Milton Sills, who play leading parts in Realart's "The Furnace"

Carmel Myers Finishes "The Orchid"

Universal announces the completion of Carmel Myers' third production since her return from New York. It is called "The Orchid," based on a magazine story by Marguerite Storrs. The production will introduce the work of Universal's newest director, Marcel de Sano, who brings a new and subtle touch to the creation of photoplays.

Miss Myers is supported in this feature by a strong cast, including Irving Cummings, Pell Trenton, George B. Williams, Lee Kohlmar.

Official Reception for R. A. Walsh Player

Plans are being made by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation for an official reception by the city of New York to Edith May, winner of the Mayflower Salesgirl Beauty Contest, who is now appearing in the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic on the New Amsterdam Roof. After Miss May completes her six weeks' engagement with the Ziegfeld show she will appear in R. A. Walsh's next production.

Brunet Says Outlook Is Good

PAUL BRUNET, president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., expresses himself at variance with those who have been drawing a pessimistic outlook for the amusement field during the coming year. Mr. A. L. Erlanger in the legitimate field has taken issue with these calamity criers, maintaining that this would be "a poor year for bad shows but a wonderful season for good plays." In the picture field, Mr. Brunet sees the same promising outlook for worthy contributions to the screen that Mr. Erlanger holds for the worthwhile stage productions.

"People throughout the entire United States are as eager as ever for entertainment, in fact more so," said Mr. Brunet in discussing conditions. "In some sections of the South, theatres have been more or less hard hit by local conditions, but they are not significant of conditions even in that locality. The tremendous drop taken in the prices of cotton and sugar has resulted in hardships for growers in Georgia and Louisiana principally, but the percentage of the population affected is not very great.

"Cotton is now returning to a higher level, which should alleviate conditions somewhat in Georgia and the cotton raising country, but we can expect below normal conditions in Louisiana for a time.

"In some sections farmers have been hard pressed for money, but conferences now being held in Washington will find means for relieving this situation. Manufacturing communities which felt the pinch of after-war conditions, in the closing down of factories owing to lack of orders, are once more returning to normal. The public which has kept out of the buying market for many months, has again unleashed the pocketbook strings, and lured by lower prices, is buying considerably now.

"The lowering of prices on many automobiles has been an incentive for increasing product in auto manufacturing centers, so that prosperity continues to reign there for the workmen, upon whom the motion picture industry is greatly dependent for support.

"There is no cause for alarm whatever so far as the motion picture is concerned. The public, however, as in all its other buying, is purchasing entertainment with discrimination. No longer can any picture draw a crowded house. It is the exhibitor who gives the best for the money, who is getting the patronage in return.

"Pathe's reply to the 'Hard time' bogie, is that during October, its feature business should show nearly a thirty-three and a third per cent increase over September, and last month was a banner one in our organization.

"Serial business will show a proportionate increase, while all our short subjects will enjoy a similar period of prosperity."

Human limitations made it appear impossible for the Pathe sales force to greatly increase its business over September, but high class product and intensive application have been responsible for the great increase October will indicate over the previous month.

Hugh Ford Is Back in America

HUGH FORD has returned to New York from England, after inaugurating the production at the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., studio in London. During his six months' stay he directed two special productions, the Drury Lane melodrama, "The Great Day," by George Simms and Louis N. Parker and the "Call of Youth," by Henry Arthur Jones. The cast in each picture was entirely British.

Mr. Ford had many interesting things to say about his work in the London studio. "The weather was rather uncertain," he said. "Photographic days, as we know them in this country, are scarce. This makes it necessary for a director to add another week to the time it would normally take him to make a picture and he has to gauge his work in such a manner that each day he is in a position to take either exteriors or interiors, switching from one to the other according to the weather.

"It will be necessary to develop British talent. Heretofore the cinema has been looked upon as a side line, something that may be done during spare time, by the leading actors of the day. Possibly this is because of the slow development of the British producing companies on account of the war and they have not as yet begun to give it serious consideration. This will have to be remedied and can be if they develop their own producing units. At the same time, new talent can be developed.

"The locations available are ideal. It is possible for a company to go on location to the South of France or to the Alps, as we did to get some exteriors for "The Great Day," with no more trouble than to go from New York to Florida. The natural beauty of Britain cannot be overlooked. Some of the most beautiful exteriors that one can imagine are there waiting to be photographed.

"Getting started was good, hard work. It was particularly difficult to get the talent for the extra work, which was only accomplished after making a tour of the plays the night before and engaging them for the next day. We received great cooperation from the labor employed to assist us in designing, decorating, building and lighting our sets. Altogether I am particularly pleased with the producing possibilities over there and I believe that with a combination of British thoroughness and American ingenuity the pictures will exceed our expectations."

As an example of the smoothness with which the London studio is working, the length of time to make Mr. Ford's pictures might be cited. "The Great Day," the first production, took nine weeks to make while the second production took only four weeks. Mr. Ford took with him a complete equipment of lights because lighting had not been developed to any great extent. Cooper-Hewitts had never been used, nor the sunlight arc, which is a comparatively recent invention.

Donald Crisp passed Hugh Ford at sea on his way over to take up the producing where Mr. Ford left off. Major Bell will take over the work of Milton Hoffman who will return to the States in a short time. Joseph Boyle, who has been assisting Mr. Ford for over two years, accompanied him on his trip home but it was necessary, because of the scarcity of cameramen, to leave Hal Young on the other side for a few months to develop new cameramen.

This is not the first time Hugh Ford has produced in Britain. He has produced many stage successes in both London and Paris. His first picture was "The Eternal City" with Pauline Frederick, which was taken in England and Rome for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and caused a sensation when shown five years ago.

Ben Morgenroth Joins Masterpiece Film

Ben Morgenroth, formerly with the World Film Corporation, has been appointed manager of the New York Exchange of the Masterpiece Film Distributing Corporation and assumed his position on October 18th. Pioneer Installs New Dept.

A Special Department Is Started for Serials and Short-Subjects

THE creation of a special department, devoted to serials and short subjects, marks another step in the expansion of the Pioneer Film Corporation. This new department, says, Pioneer, is being developed under unusual auspices, made possible through the acquisition of three of the biggest serials of the year, as also a number of short subjects, which promise to establish a new record in this particular field.

The three serials are: (1) "The Son of Tarzan"; (2) "The Tiger Band," and (3) "The Mystery Mind."

So far as "The Son of Tarzan" is concerned, it ranks with the best serials that have ever been produced. Written by Edgar Rice Burroughs, who wrote all the Tarzan stories, and produced by David P Howells, it has created a stir in exhibitors' circles, and houses that have never played serials in the past have booked "The Son of Tarzan" for a run of 15 weeks.

"The Tiger Band" was made by Warner Brothers, the producers of "The Lost City," and for thrills and a remarkable story of a most appealing character, it has no peer.

"The Mystery Mind," the third serial to be distributed under the Pioneer banner, was produced by the Supreme Pictures, Inc., and has as its star, J. Robert Pauline, the famous hypnotist, who has entertained threatre-goers in all parts of the world. Supporting Mr. Pauline are Peggy Shanor, Paul Panzer and Violet MacMillan, film stars who are known wherever the cinema is known. "The Mystery Mind" was written by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey.

Spectacular Feature Ready

Fox Announces "The Face at Your Window" to Be Ready for Release

FOX FILM CORPORATION is about to release "The Face At Your Window," a dramatic spectacle of modern American life from the pen of Max Marcin, the author of "Cheating Cheaters," "Eyes of Youth" and other stage plays.

The director of "The Face At Your Window" is Richard Stanton, who made "Checkers," "The Spy" and other Fox productions. Upon the structure of Max Marcin's plot he has built a great picture, states Fox, powerful not only in its dramatic intensity, but also in its spectacular quality.

The theme of "The Face At Your Window" is timely. All the scenes are laid on the soil of America, in a typical factory town with a large alien population. The characters are the men, women and children who make their living in this community. The dramatic interest in the picture is in a series of glimpses into the lives of some of these people.

A girl factory worker learns of a gigantic plot that threatens the existence of American homes, American women, American institutions. To save the land of her adoption she risks even the loss of her sweetheart's love. Her sweetheart is a returned soldier. In the nick of time he sees the way events are moving, and the American Legion comes to the rescue. . .

The part of the factory girl is played by Gina Relly, a well-known French actress. The part of the returned soldier is in the hands of Earl Metcalfe. Others in the cast are Robert Cummings, Edward Roseman, Frank Farrington, Alice Reeves and Viola Allen.

Smith Buys Race Feature

Foreign Rights of Educational's "Man o'War" Sold for $100,000

GUY CROSWELL SMITH, LTD., yesterday closed a deal with the Educational Film Corp. of America, for all foreign rights to their two reel feature "The Race of the Age" which shows in full detail the recent match race between Man O' War and Sir Barton at Kenilworth Race Track, Windsor, Canada.

The price for all territory in the world outside of the United States and Canada was reported as $100,000. This is said to be the highest price ever paid for a two-reel offering in the foreign field.

This is the exclusive picture of the match race which Educational secured through special arrangement with the Kenilworth Jockey Club and which had its American premier at the Strand theatre.

The arrangements between President E. W. Hammons of Educational and Guy C. Smith call for elaborate presentations of the great racing picture in London and Paris the latter part of November. George Bowles the European representative of Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., will have personal charge of the foreign exploitation. He has been instructed to book immediately special showings at the Carlton Hotel Ballroom in London and the Trocadero in Paris. The London showing will include as guests noted horse owners of England, such as King George and the Dukes, Earls and Lords whose colors are familiar upon the British turf together with social lovers of the United Kingdom.

Prominent officials and citizens of the French Republic interested in turf and society in France will be the invited guests at the special showing in Paris. Mr. A. K. Macomber the American turf devotee who has recently taken over the late W. K. Vanderbilt's racing establishments in France will be the host.

As Man O' War, recognized as the greatest race horse in the world, has been permanently retired it was fortunate for lovers of the thoroughbred all over the world that Educational secured this remarkable reproduction of the last and most brilliant race of his career and it is sure to be a revelation in foreign countries where racing is a much more prominent feature of social life than it is even in America and where they have all heard so much of the prowess of this super animal. It is said to be the only complete motion picture ever taken of an actual race and to turfites it will be an ever fresh study to keep alive the deeds of the finest race horse that ever looked through a bridle and the only opportunity left to see this remarkable animal in action.

Hodkinson Month Drive On

Managers Display Ingenuity in Effort to Attain Record Sales

EVERY member of the Hodkinson organization is thoroughly imbued with the proper spirit which is required to make "Hodkinson Month" a big, outstanding, long-to-be-remembered event. Each and every one of them has started a separate little campaign on their own book, says a statement from the Hodkinson headquarters, and a great deal of ingenuity and originality is being displayed. For instance, Mr. Edmund, the Hodkinson representative in San Francisco, started a mail campaign which is bound to produce results. The letter which appears below was sent by him to every theatre in his territory:

"Our young travelling representative, Julius Cantwell, is headed your way with the Hodkinson Service tucked under his arm in picture form and full data on each and every quality picture under the Hodkinson Banner.

"Beginning November 1st W. W. Hodkinson celebrates his third anniversary as an independent distributor under his own name, and his branch managers throughout the United States have united in making this month a testimonial to Mr. Hodkinson.

"Will you not assist us in making this a great big banner Hodkinson month by arranging with Mr. Cantwell for a number of the really good pictures he will have to offer you, giving dates during November if possible.

"The pictures Mr. Cantwell will offer you of the late releases are: "Love Madness," the Louise Glaum big special; "The U. P. Trail," Zane Grey's latest release; "The Brute Master," with Hobart Bosworth; "The Tiger's Coat," with an all-star cast; "The Kentucky Colonel," with Joe Dowling, Fred Vroom and an all-star cast; "The Dwelling Place of Light," the Winston Churchill story with Robert McKim, King Baggot and Claire Adams, and the big special J. Warren Kerrigan picture, "The House of Whispers." Mr. Cantwell will explain fully to you the merits of these pictures as he is in thorough touch with them."

Robert Edeson at Work at Metro Studios

Robert Edeson has taken up his permanent headquarters at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, Calif., and is preparing to start work before the camera in "Are Wives to Blame?" May Allison's new starring picture, in which he will enact an important role. After appearing in this production Mr. Edeson will join the Metro directorial forces, according to the plans of Bayard Veiller, chief of production for Metro in the West.

For a number of years, Mr. Edeson has been one of the foremost American stage stars. He has already appeared in a number of motion pictures.

Metro has announced two important directorial assignments this week. Philip E. Rosen has been selected to direct the Metro special production of "Are Wives to Blame?" in which May Allison will be starred. Filming of the picture, as announced by Bayard Veiller, chief of production at the company's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Calif., will begin at once.

Wesley Ruggles has been selected by Bayard Veiller, chief of production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Calif., to direct Alice Lake in her first starring vehicle, the working title of which is Mother Love." Actual filming of the production is scheduled to start in ten days.

Antonio Moreno Back Again in Features

"Three Sevens," by Perley Poore Sheehan, a story which appeared in both magazine and novel form and which is considered ideal as a transition from serials to feature drama, will be the title of Antonio Moreno's first feature production for Vitagraph, according to an announcement of Albert E. Smith, president of that company.

Mr. Smith announced his intention of starring Moreno a number of weeks ago. "Three Sevens" was selected by Mr. Smith from seven strong possibilities.

Man o' War Close-Ups in Fox News Reel

An unexampled opportunity to study the "points" of Man o' War, the phenomenal race-horse which from time to time has crowded the Russian war off the front pages, is offered in the current issue of Fox News, Vol. 2, No. 6, says William Fox. Man o' War is shown in close-up in many poses, and one really sensational shot shows how nearly he escaped a disastrous accident. The pictures were made at Media, Pa., during the Rose Tree Hunt Club Meet.

Three new poses of Metro's talented star, Alice Lake

Alice Lake Full-Fledged Star

Her Fine Performance in "Body and Soul" Wins Honor

ACCORDING to an announcement issued this week by Richard A. Rowling, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, Alice Lake has now been made a "full-fledged Metro star." Her fine work in the special production, "Body and Soul," is explained to be responsible for her elevation to stardom. A statement from the Metro headquarters issued in connection with Mr. Rowland's announcement follows:

"Since signing the long-term contract with Metro several months ago Miss Lake has been designated as a featured player. Officials of the big producing company desired her to establish beyond any doubt her claim to recognition as a star in fact with the public and exhibitors alike before billing her under that title. This, according to Mr. Rowland's statement announcing her elevation to stardom, Miss Lake has done to the complete satisfaction of all.

"Miss Lake was featured in 'Should a Woman Tell?' the powerful sex melodrama by Finis Fox. She was featured in 'Shore Acres,' by the late James A. Herne; in 'The Misfit Wife,' by Julie Herne and most recently in 'Body and Soul,' from the stage play by William Hurlbut. The last named is scheduled for release by Metro on the 25th of this month. She will be starred in her next special production, "Mother Love," picturized from the original story by Izola Forrester and Mann Page.

"Her rise from featured player to star has been accomplished by Miss Lake with the same meteoric speed that has characterized her entire motion picture career, which runs back but a few short years, but has been marked by one pronounced success after another. Her advent in motion pictures with Vitagraph followed a brief experience as a ball room dancer in those hotel entertainments which were so much the vogue in the days directly preceding the war.

"Bert Lytell, the young Metro star, was primarily Miss Lake's discoverer. He saw her in a slapstick comedy that was a burlesque on heavy melodrama. Although her work was pitched in a key of satire, it occurred to the theatre-wise mind of Mr. Lytell that a girl who could burlesque drama so adroitly could play it straight with skill and conviction, so he prevailed upon Maxwell Karger, Metro's director general then in charge of the company's west coast studios in Hollywood, to engage Miss Lake as his leading woman in 'Boston Blackie's Redemption.'

"From that time on Alice Lake may be said to have been made. She appeared in another picture with Mr. Lytell, "The Lion's Den" and in one with Hale Hamilton, "Full o' Pep."

"Miss Lake next dipped back into comedy for a little time, appearing in short subjects for Christie. When Metro began work on "Lombardi, Ltd.", a Screen Classics, Inc., picturization of the Morosco stage success by the Hatton's, Alice Lake was given the part of Norah, opposite Bert Lytell, who was starred in the role of Tito Lombardi. In this part, which called for self-effacement and womanliness rather than strong emotional acting, Miss Lake made such a profound impression upon motion picture exhibitors, notoriously hard-boiled in their appraisal of screen talent that they urged Metro to sign her. This was done, Miss Lake affixing her signature to a contract giving Metro her exclusive services for five years."

Mid-West Hails Wm. Fox Special

"WHILE NEW YORK SLEEPS," one of the big William Fox special productions for the season of 1920-21, is reported by Fox Film to be reaping a box-office harvest in its travels from Coast to Coast. Directed by Chas. J. Brabin, who has done other notable things for Fox Film Corporation, this picture is creating a sensation wherever it is played.

On its way westward from New York—where, after playing ten consecutive weeks on Broadway at the Lyric and the Astor Theatres, it also drew record-breaking houses at the Fox Academy of Music, one of the largest theatres of its kind in the city and the Audubon Theatre up-town—"While New York Sleeps" has just completed full-week engagements in St. Louis and Kansas City.

At the Liberty Theatre in St. Louis the film drew a business bigger than anything the houses ever had shown including the greatest features of the past few seasons, it is stated. The newspapers of the city exceeded the New York press in their unqualified praise, state William Fox. "While New York Sleeps" took with it from that house a record which will probably require some time to eclipse.

In Kansas City, where, by special arrangement with the Messrs. J. J. and Lee Shubert, Fox Film Corporation played the Shubert Theatre, the picture did a far bigger business than did the spoken drama which occupied its stage the week previous, according to the Fox statement.

With the keenest sort of competition, the Fox special opened on Sunday to turnaway business. Chief of Police Scott Godley of Kansas City sat in judgment on the criminal element of the play's three stories. Accompanied by Chief of Police Sullivan of Omaha, Chief Godley was one of the most enthusiastic spectators throughout, and upon leaving the theatre declared to the management that it was a great production.

"You won't have much trouble filling the house this week," he said to Joseph M. Glick, Shubert's manager. "It's a great picture, and with conditions as they are to-day is a timely one.

George D. Baker, who has signed a contract to produce a special production for Sawyer and Lubin, same to be released by Metro

As the outcome of negotiations just concluded on the part of Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of S-L Pictures and George D. Baker, the announcement is made that the second S-L Picture to be released through Metro will be known as a George D. Baker Production, with Mr. Baker as the director.

This forthcoming Special production will be made at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street. The story selected is "Temple Dusk," by Calvin Johnston, which appeared in The Saturday Evening Post of the issue of October 16. This will be the working title of the picture, which is to be enacted by an all-star cast headed by the Anna Q. Nilsson. Mr. Baker will not only direct the picture, but will scenarioize the Calvin Johnston narrative.

Mr. Baker for long has looked forward to the day when he could offer to the public a George D. Baker Production, says Metro, and his present affiliation with S-L Pictures as the producing organization and Metro as distributors, is expected to result in a work for the screen that will enhance the already enviable reputation that Mr. Baker enjoys in the world of the cinema.

In the professional department of this issue of the News, there will be found an account of a recent interview with Mr. Baker.

Report Big Demand for Kerrigan Vehicle

The success of "The House of Whispers," the newest J. Warren Kerrigan picture to be released on the Hodkinson program, continues with unabated strength, declares W. W. Hodkinson. All over the United States this picture is being booked, and everyhere it is shown it is meeting with the same enthusiastic reception, it is stated.

The most recent bookings reported from the Home Offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on this picture is that of Pantages Louisiana theatre, New Orleans, which has put in "The House of Whispers" for seven days.

"The House of Whispers" has also been booked for a three days engagement at Phillips Egypt theatre, the famous matinee house of the Southwest.

The Crandall circuit, which embraces five theatres in and about Washington, D. C., have booked from the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation the newest J. Warren Kerrigan feature "The House of Whispers."

"A Beggar in Purple" Due November 7th

Pathe announces that the new Edgar Lewis production, "A Beggar in Purple", will be released November 7th. Pathe believes that in this picture it has "an outstanding feature production." It is the picturization of a novel of the same title by Andrew Soutar.

Mr. Soutar endeavors to point out Solomon's words of wisdom, that "Even a king without love is only a beggar in purple." The hero of his story is a self-made man, who raised himself from poverty to a position of power and wealth, but the revenge that for eighteen years has steeled his will to success had cheated him of love.

The cast is headed by Leonard O. Shumway and Ruth King. Betty Brice, Charles Arling, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Stanton Heck, Dorothea Wolbert, Ernest Butterworth, Louis Fitzroy, William F. Moran, Fred C. Jones and A. B. Millett also appear in the cast.

Goldwyn Re-Signs J. Hawks

Veteran Signs Contract to Remain at Head of the Editorial Forces

J. G. HAWKS, pioneer in the development of film technique and managing editor of the Goldwyn Studios, has signed a long term contract to continue as head of its editorial forces, it is announced by Goldwyn. Mr. Hawks is known in the motion picture industry as one of the ablest studio editors in the country as well as an expert writer of continuity and of original scenarios. His experience has extended over many years and has made him an authority in the preparation of stories and the editing of the film.

Mr. Hawks personally edited Goldwyn's production of Basil King's "Earthbound", Gouverneur Morris' story, "The Penalty" and "The Branding Iron", from Katherine Newlin Burt's famous story, all of which have found great popular favor. He has just completed the editing of two of Goldwyn's newest feature productions, "Bunty Pulls the Strings", from Graham Moffatt's Scotch comedy of the same title, and "Godless Men", the screen version of Ben Ames Williams' sea story directed by Reginald Barker.

In the time that Mr. Hawks has been head of the Goldwyn editorial department, he has helped Abraham Lehr, vice president in charge of production at the company's Culver City studios, in building up one of the strongest staffs of editors and continuity writers in the country. On its roster are the names of many distinguished authors, such as Thompson Buchanan, Cleves Kinkaid, Louis Sherwin, Elmer Rice, Charles Kenyon, Arthur Statter and others.

The Moroso story, adapted by Fred Myton, is a crook melodrama with a strong love interest and gives Mr. Warner a role and vehicle similar to the one in which he achieved his greatest stage success, Jimmy Valentine. Lillian Rich plays opposite Mr. Warner. Henry King directed the picture.

Two Sunshine Comedies Released in October

William Fox has released during October what is described to be two of the snappiest Sunshine Comedies ever produced. They are "An Elephant's Nightmare" and "Hold Me Tight."

"An Elephant's Nightmare" and "Hold Me Tight" have both been staged in a most sumptuous manner, says William Fox. The casts of comedians who supply the funmaking in these two comedies are declared by Fox to be the pick of comedy circles, each well-known and with a big personal following.

Campaign Book for "The Stealers" Is Ready

With its cover a striking pose of William H. Tooker and Myrtle Morse, two of the all-star cast of "The Stealers," the Robertson-Cole super-special, which was directed by William Christy Cabanne, and which is now released to the trade, the press and exploitation book on this picture is one of the most artistic and useful which this distributing corporation has so far published.

In orange, black and purple, just inside the front cover (which may be used by the exhibitor as a definite part of his lobby display) is a page devoted to the cast which includes besides the players on the cover, Walter Miller, Ruth Dwyer, Norma Shearer, Jack Crosby, Robert Keynon, Matthew L. Betz, Jack O'Brien and Eugene Borden.

"Kismet" Presented at Astor

"KISMET" was given its trade premier in the grand ball-room of the Astor on Monday evening, October 25th. This starring vehicle of Otis Skinner's made under the auspices of the Robertson-Cole organization was presented to an enthusiastic audience amid the most impressive circumstances.

Mr. Skinner was present, and just before the picture spoke to the great audience with the rays of a spotlight upon him. Edward Knoblock, author of "Kismet," also was present to watch the play which made him famous, given for the first time in its filmed form to the public. Close to three thousand persons of the dramatic, motion picture, newspaper, magazine and trade and fan-paper worlds sat in wrapt interest while "Kismet" unfolded.

The keynote of the showing was the great interest and enthusiasm displayed by the enormous crowds which flocked to the Hotel Astor. Viewing the assemblage, both that part of it which got in, and the hundreds who arrived late and could not be admitted, it seems probable that everybody who received an invitation used it.

The grand ball-room was completely filled on the first floor, the room being packed with extra seats. The grand tier of boxes was taxed to its capacity, and the upper balcony was completely filled. Hundreds stood near the entrance unable to find seats.

The first event of the showing was a dinner which was given by Robertson-Cole for representatives of the newspapers, trade papers and fan magazines in the Rose Room. Music ushered in the event. Close to half a hundred of representatives of a diversified press were seated at a long table with Otis Skinner, Star of "Kismet" as honor guest. This dinner lasted until the hour of the showing, when the diners were ushered to a special press section at the center of the hall.

Meanwhile the vanguard of the great crowd had begun to arrive. By the hundreds people were entering the outer door to the corridor leading to the grand ball-room. Inside this corridor, which was shielded from all eyes by Oriental rugs hung upon the glass doors, those arriving passed through a veritable Bagdad. On either side were hung thousands of dollars worth of beautiful Persian and Turkish rugs. The floors were softly carpeted and to the left and right sat beautiful girls garbed in Oriental costumes, kneeling after the fashion of the harem, upon pillows. Beside them were pearl-top tabaretes holding incense, from which poured forth clouds of perfume-laden smoke. A hidden orchestra played Arabian strains.

Following on to the ball-room, the crowd passed beneath an Oriental canopy, richly hung with fabrics of Arabian design and soft texture. Just inside this were other young ladies in Oriental costume, who passed out beautiful pictorial souvenir booklets to all comers. On the thousands of chairs were placed a novel program consisting of a reproduction of a Robertson-Cole twenty-four sheet on "Kismet" on one side, and a program of the presentation on the other.

At 8.30 sharp, James C. Bradford, head of the Robertson-Cole musical service, who was leading a large orchestra hidden behind a large hedge of palms, began the overture. Then there was flashed upon the screen a title which introduced Otis Skinner. In a very delightful speech, this foremost of American romantic actors told of his experiences in making this, his first motion picture. He made the audience laugh with him, impressed it by his splendid eloquence, and gave in his talk a promise of the picture which was to come.

As the lights flashed off, the orchestra began to play the musical setting which Robertson-Cole has had written by Mr. Bradford for "Kismet." Then the picture unfolded reel upon reel, telling the delightfully dramatic and quaint story of Hajj, the beggar of Bagdad, who in a single day was raised from his post where he asked alms before the Mosque of the Carpenters, to be revenged against his ancient enemy, to be dressed in silks, to see his daughter married to the Caliph, and then at sunset to go back to his wonted station.

Goldwyn Studio Activities

New Productions Are Reported to Be Under Way on the West Coast

THE Goldwyn company which is to produce Rupert Hughes' first original screen story, which bears the working title of "Mr. and Miserable Jones," left last Saturday for Catalina Island on location. Helene Chadwick is to act the principal role in the picture as a reward for her excellent work in two previous Goldwyn productions of stories by the same author—"Scratch My Back" and "The Cup of Fury." E. Mason Hopper, who is to direct the production, took along with the company to Catalina Island, fifty bathing girls who appear in the story.

An entire Chinese street is being built on the studio lot for "The Water Lily," Gouverneur Morris' first original screen story, which has just gone into production under the direction of Frank Lloyd. The Boxer massacre of foreigners in China will be an episode in the picture and Mr. Lehr and Mr. Lloyd have been very particular to have the Chinese architecture, costumes, furniture, etc., absolutely correct.

Active work on Gertrude Atherton's first story written directly for the screen is only awaiting the completion of a replica of the famous "Five Points" dive of New York City. Wallace Worsley, who is to direct the picture, and Vice President Lehr telegraphed to the New York offces of Goldwyn to obtain photographs of the "Five Points" section in 1870 a locality and a period which are touched upon in the Atherton scenario which bears the working title of "Noblesse Oblige"—so that every feature of the famous dive could be duplicated.

Reginald Barker last week began work on Goldwyn's next Reginald Barker Production, "The Bridal Path," from the play of the same name by Thompson Buchanan.

Mason N. Litson is directing the tenth of the Booth Tarkington two-reel comedy series, "The Adventures and Emotions of Edgar Pomeroy."

Fox News Enlarges Forces

Starts Second Year With Increase of Facilities for Bigger Service

FOX NEWS, just one year old, and already in the front rank among news reels, begins its second year by announcing enlarged facilities for news gathering, editing, laboratory work and distribution, of which the aim is to guarantee to the exhibitor perfect service in every direction.

The Program's most striking innovation, perhaps is the doubling of the camera staff—which it is hoped to accomplish by January.

These men are scattered all over the world, and are directed from the New York headquarters and recently established depots at London, Paris, Rome and Berlin. Thanks to a process of selection and recruiting conducted during the last year by the editors, each man behind a Fox News Camera, in Hungary or in Texas, in Seattle or in Calcutta, is an expert photographer with a nose for news and an eye for pictorial effect.

Another great advantage that Fox News has lies in the fact that it occupies part of the greatest film laboratory in the world. This laboratory, equipped with apparatus that is the last word in efficiency — capable not only of utilizing every photographic process known to science, but also of adaptation to new processes that may be devised from time to time by the research staff—can turn out more completed film in a given time than any other photographic laboratory in existence.

Another important development in the direction of perfect service is a large increase in the editorial staff of Fox News. This is in the interest not only of better titling and make-up of the reel, but also of news gathering. Two men of wide experience in national journalism have been added to the staff for the specific purpose of visiting all countries of the world and explaining to cameramen just what Fox News wants — just what real, live news pictures should be, and obtaining exclusive subjects.

A special service to exhibitors by wire has recently been inaugurated. By means of this the exhibitor will be notified whenever he may expect to receive subjects in the News concerning his locality. He will receive this information in time for him to advertise the showing of the local event, and thus he will have abundant scope for enterprising showmanship.

New Series Bring Inquiry

Educational's Announcement of New Two-Reelers Rouses Interest

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., reports that the brief announcement that it would release a series of two reel pictures with the country's industrial life as their background and pure entertainment, coupled with better Americanism as their purpose, has brought an unusual number of inquiries.

These pictures are produced by the Plymouth Pictures Corporation, which has been organized by Rufus Steele, Saturday Evening Post writer on industrial subjects. Mr. Steele is himself writing the stories and they are being produced under his personal supervision with Carlyle Ellis as director in charge of the studio work.

An unusual feature of the pictures is the complete absence of any "sets." Each production is to have some big industrial plant as their background, though extreme care is being taken that nothing of the commercial or advertising element shall enter into the productions. For instance, "The Kick Back," first of the series, was produced in one of the country's largest shipyards and the second, "The Big Idea," at one of the largest New England shoe plants.

The pictures have already received the heartiest endorsement of the Americanization Committe of the Motion Picture Industry and of many prominent men in the commercial life of the country. While they are offered strictly on their entertainment value, one of the purposes behind them is the making of better Americans and the alleviation of industrial unrest. Unionism and similar subjects are carefully barred, but incidents that may come into the life of any worker are used.

Heads of many large industrial enterprises are displaying their interest in these pictures and have made attractive offers for the film so that they may be shown to their workers, but these have been declined, says Educational Films, because Educational wants the exhibitors of the country to take advantage of these great ready-made audiences. Announcement of the release date of the first two pictures will be made in the next schedule issued by Educational.

Lytell Brings Back Good Reports of Metro

Bert Lytell just returned to New York from a two-weeks' jaunt through the South in the course of which he attended the gala opening of The State theatre, Marcus Loew's new picture and vaudeville house in Memphis, Tenn., brings back glowing reports of the enthusiasm displayed by Southern exhibitors towards the new Metro special productions.

Mentioning specific instances, Mr. Lytell said that Viola Dana's most recent production, "The Chorus Girl's Romance" is going great guns everywhere through the South. Alice Lake in "The Misfit Wife", by Julie Herne, and May Allison in "Held in Trust" by George Kibbe Turner, are also quoted by Mr. Lytell as pleasing southern exhibitors and public alike.

Universal Declares a Bonus

"Ash Can Dividends" Distributed Under Industrial Democracy Plan

THE first melon to be cut by Universal at its Fort Lee factory under the new Industrial Democracy plan, by which the workers share in the savings during their efficiency and economy, was distributed last week. It totalled to $962, and represented a bonus of 5 per cent of each worker's salary.

The Fort Lee employes call their bonuses under the Industrial Democracy plan "Ash Can Dividends," because they represent savings which previously have gone into discard. Announcement of the first "ash can dividend" was made amid great applause at last Wednesday's regular cooperative meeting of the factory employes and executives. The employes admitted they hardly realized they were making such striking economy cuts. They promised ever greater ones when they get the efficiency system working smoothly.

The third weekly meeting under Industrial Democracy was marked by an impressive ceremony in which John Leitch, father of the savings plan, officiated in "laying" the third cornerstone of the system. He actually placed a large wooden block in a conspicuous place in the factory. It is labelled "Economy." The first two cornerstones similarly placed were called "Justice" and "Co-operation." The fourth, to be placed soon, will be known as "Energy," and the last, representing the cap-stone, will be known as "Service."

The factory employes are rapidly nearing the completion of organization of a senate and a house of representatives to take official hand in the management of the Universal plant.

Big Technical Staff Busy

Vitagraph Exercising Great Care in Production of "Black Beauty"

"BLACK BEAUTY," Vitagraph's special production of Anna Sewell's classic now being filmed at the Western studios of that company, introduces the unusual circumstance of actually having more persons back of the camera than in front of it, according to a statement from the Vitagraph home office. And this, also, despite the fact that "Black Beauty" boasts one of the largest casts ever assembled for a Vitagraph production, declares the Vitagraph statement.

David Smith is directing "Black Beauty" and the technical staff surrounding him is said to be the largest ever organized by Vitagraph.

"Black Beauty" was planned for many weeks after the continuity was completed by Lillian and George Randolph Chester. There was wide investigation as to the dress, mannerisms and architecture of the period and the locality of "Black Beauty," it is stated. Since he has completed the animal continuity on this special, Director David Smith is said to have kept a group of continuity clerks busy keeping careful books on the scenes as taken, to match footage and production.

Jean Paige, who plays the leading role, and all other principal actresses have individual hairdressers on the set to see that the different styles of headdress are prepared as the scenes require.

School teachers have been assigned by the Los Angeles Board of Education to be present during the filming of the picture, declares Vitagraph, as the youngsters in the play must have their studies daily at the studio. Between scenes the teachers take the youngsters to their improvised school room, it is stated, and reading, writing and arithmetic, spelling, drawing and other studies are pursued.

W. C. Herrmann, the executive manager of the Big "U" Exchange, Universal's New York branch, has left New York on a three months' tour of inspection, during which he will visit every Universal branch exchange in the United States and Canada. He is accompanied by his wife.

Herrmann has before him the job of introducing into the management of all Universal exchanges, the business system he has built up in the Big "U" Exchange, and which is considered by film men and exhibitors to be one of the best in the country.

The system is based strictly upon business principles, and contemplates the handling of the affairs of a film exchange just as the affairs of a bank or a department store or any commercial enterprise are handled. He is considered one of the best efficiency experts in the film business.

James B. Kelly Appoints Sales Supervisor

The World Motion Picture Corporation announces through General Manager James B. Kelly the appointment of A. L. Selig as Western sales supervisor with headquarters in Los Angeles, handling their World's News Pictures as well as their features and short subjects in the far West territory.

In addition to establishing branch offices for the World Motion Picture Corporation in the Western territory, Mr. Selig will visit the editors of all the largest newspapers in the West to interest them in the news service that will be an adjunct to the news reel department, which is under the managership of David Murphy.

David Butler Starred in Catherine Curtis Film

David Butler, the well-known star, has been selected by Catherine Curtis for the part of "Bill Hendricks," the leading role in "The Sky Pilot," the feature picture based on Ralph Connor's novel of the same name. The picture is now nearing completion under the direction of King Vidor in the foothills of the Canadian Rockies, and is the first big picture to be made by the Catherine Curtis Corporation for which a First National release has been secured. David Butler was loaned to Miss Curtis for this production by D. N. Schwab productions, it is stated, in spite of the fact that he was under a starring contract.

Betty Compson Pleased at Johnson's Work

The excellence of Emory Johnson's work in Betty Compson's first starring picture, "Prisoners of Love," which is being distributed by Goldwyn, resulted in Miss Compson giving him an important role in her second production, as yet unnamed.

Next Glaum Picture Is "Love"

Fred Warren Announces Release Date as Dec. 5

F. B. WARREN, general manager of distribution for Associated Producers, Inc., announces from Los Angeles, where he is personally observing the progress of production of the units of the organization now working, that the title of the next J. Parker Read, Jr. production starring Louise glaum is "Love."

"Love" will be released throughout the United States and Canada December 5. It is said to be a story exceeding in dramatic strength any vehicle recently allotted to Miss Glaum. The scenario is by Louis Joseph Vance, author of more than a dozen stirring dramatic novels and screen plays. In "Love" Miss Glaum has a chance, better than any other hitherto afforded her, to display the wondrous gowns for which she has become famous.

J. Parker Read's reputation for sumptuous mountings is maintained in this production, which is now being cut and titled at the Read studios in Culver City, Calif. Prints of the production will be in all Associated Producers' branch offices early next month, affording exhibitors a chance to see in advance what Mr. Read has done with this unusual story.

Mr. Read's publicity representatives on the coast, in co-operation with the home office of Associated Productions, are working on an unusual exploitation and publicity campaign in which the best use will be made of the striking title of the picture.

Mr. Warren, in a wire to Oscar A. Price, president of Associated Producers' says he finds production in a commendable state of progress in the studios of J. Parker Read, Thos. H. Ince and Mack Sennett. Allan Dwan, whose first Associated Producers' production, "The Forbidden Thing", is now being shipped to all branch offices, is in New York on a vacation. "The Last of the Mohicans", Maurice Tourneur's first A. P. picture, is being given the finishing touches at his studio.

Letters and telegrams commending the first two releases of Associated Producers'—Thos. H. Ince's "Homespun Folks" and J. Parker Read's "Leopard Woman" starring Louise Glaum continue to come to the home office.

Among the most enthusiastic appreciation of "Homespun Folks" is that from Benjamin Apple, secretary and manager of the Illium Amusement Co., Inc., operating the American and King theatres in Troy, New York. Says Mr. Apple:

"We opened 'Homespun Folks' at our American theatre, Sunday October 17th, to the largest Sunday attendance since we opened the American. After doing a big business all week we closed with a record-breaking attendance Saturday. Of all the productions run at the American we have never received so much praise from our patrons as we did on 'Homespun Folks.' Any exhibitor who wishes a picture that will please all classes will make no mistake if he runs 'Homespun Folks'."

Marx S. Nathan, manager of the New York exchange of Associated Producers', and his salesmen have booked thirteen prints of "Homespun Folks" for showing during election week in the New York territory.

Star Begins Second of Series

Pauline Frederick on New Special; Ready Early in 1921

NOW that her first Robertson-Cole production has been finished, and is almost ready for distribution, Pauline Frederick has started work in California on the second of her new series of Robertson-Cole super-specials, not more than four of which she is making in the coming year. "A Slave of Vanity," the first picture, is based upon "Iris," one of the powerful dramas by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero.

After a survey of more than 200 plays and novels, selected from the international field, Miss Frederick has chosen one which contains one of the best parts in her career, and which she and her director, Henry King, are sure will make the basis of a production of very broad appeal. Work on this picture already had started, and delivery may be made early in the new year.

The difficulty in selecting a story for Miss Frederick lies in the fact that most of the plays, novels and original scenarios considered do not measure up to the proper emotional heights. Her new contract with Robertson-Cole calls for Miss Frederick's appearance in productions which reach fully the super-special grade, and stories of the proper dramatic and emotional quality are few and far between.

In "A Slave of Vanity," which is soon to be placed upon the market, Robertson-Cole believes exhibitors will find an unusual attraction, from the standpoint of artistic and commercial values. It is laid in England and on the Continent, its characters being drawn from one of the most exclusive circles of British life, and its questions are such as may arise among the most cultured people of the more leisurely class.

In "A Slave of Vanity," the finer instincts and qualities of womanhood serve as the dominant theme for the development of the story, declares Robertson-Cole.

Although Iris Bellamy, played by Miss Frederick, is introduced as a luxurious pleasure-loving woman, it soon becomes apparent that she is really the victim of circumstance, and when she does err it is through an earnest desire to do that which she believes the finest and best thing to do. The mental struggle which she undergoes, will not fail to elicit the sympathy of any audience, particularly the women, for few, if any women, have gone through life without at some time encountering problems such as confront Iris in this play.

The petted, pampered wife of an English clubman, showered with every luxury, she finds herself, after the death of her husband, the victim of his capricious will, which forbids her to re-marry, unless she sacrifice every penny of her fortune and her social prestige.

When she meets and falls in love with Laurence Trenwith, an upright young chap, who has nothing of the world's good to offer, she hesitates to marry him, not so much because she knows that it will mean giving up the luxuries to which she has been accustomed, but because she feels that she is not fit to be the helpmate of a poor man. And when later she loses her own fortune and is reduced to poverty, her pride restrains her from making herself a burden upon the man whom she would not marry when she had her wealth.

Her struggle is a keen one, the more so because of the temptation to accept the offer of Maldenado, wealthy merchant, who is madly in love with her. At the moment when it seems as though she is about to sacrifice herself for a life of luxury and ease, there is vouchsafed her the opportunity to visualize for herself the consequences of her relationship with a man like Maldanado. Though she lives through the most harrowing experiences, her finer character asserts itself, and she makes the supreme sacrifice for the man she loves.

At the end, Iris Bellamy proved to herself that all her palaces, silks and satins, have not brought her the happiness she finds with Trenwith, amid the pots and pans of her own tiny kitchen.

Juanita Hansen Greeted as Pathe Serial Star

Pathe reports that Juanita Hansen has been "greeted with acclaim" by capacity audiences in those theatres where the first episode of "Phantom Foe" has been shown. This marks Miss Hansen's debut as a Pathe serial star. Houses that have never before played serials have been won over by the Pathe serial, judging by this wire from the Pathe manager in St. Louis:

"Just closed two Orpheum circuit houses on Pathe's great serial, 'The Phantom Foe'. This will be the first serial ever run in any first class vaudeville house in this territory. 'Phantom Foe' will run first at the Rialto and then go into the Grand Opera House on a seven day basis. These contracts will be followed by more runs and larger rentals than any former serial release."

New Stanley House for North Philadelphia

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, on his return to Philadelphia from the West announced that the Stanley Company had secured from Jacob Hess the property at the northwest corner of Germantown and Lehigh Avenues, where a large photoplay theatre will be erected with a seating capacity of 2,500. The new motion picture palace will be equipped with all modern improvements, including a magnificent organ, large stage and numerous other devices.

Carl Morgan Signs Up with Boston Concern

Metropolitan Pictures Corporation, Boston's own producing company, has signed a contract with Carl Morgan, to supervise all forthcoming productions under that name made in this city. Stanley J. Worris, of Cambridge, Mass., author and scenario writer, who wrote the continuity of this concern's initial production, "A Thousand Faces," will act as assistant director. The production will run ten reels.

Last Scenes Taken on "Outside the Law"; Priscilla Dean Stars

TOD BROWNING has "shot" the last scene of the new Priscilla Dean photoplay, "Outside the Law," at Universal City. The production has been under way for many months, and is the first screen work Miss Dean has done since her spectacular Universal-Jewel production, "The Virgin of Stamboul."

One of her principal support in "Outside the Law" was Lon Chaney, recognized as one of the foremost character actors on the screen. Chaney says his role as Black Mike in the Browning production is by far the best part he ever played. The story was written by Browning himself for Miss Dean, and he made the role of Black Mike especially for Chaney.

It is in the role of a Chinaman however, that Chaney reached his high-water mark of impersonation. He made himself up as a Chinaman so well that many persons around Universal City were fooled into thinking he was a real Chinaman, imported from San Francisco's Chinatown to play an "extra" part in the Priscilla Dean picture, says Universal.

Among the other players who rendered good account of themselves are E. A. Warren, as a Chinese philosopher; Ralph Lewis, and little Stanley Goethals. The picture also contains a series of settings of unusual splendor, including interiors of a millionaire's mansion done in medieval Italian art, designed by E. E. Sheeley.

"Outside the Law" will be Universal's most important late fall release. It probably will be ready for exhibitors early in December.

Ship Dynamited for Scene

Three-Masted Sailing Vessel Is Blown Up for Realistic Effects

AFTER several weeks of careful preparation, during which every precaution was taken to guard against possible accident, The Lady Jermyn, a three-masted sailing vessel, last week was destroyed by fire and dynamite to provide some of the thrills in "Dead Men Tell No Tales," a new Vitagraph special production based on the novel by E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles" and other stories. It was a costly undertaking and a somewhat dangerous one, declares Universal, but the entire program went through without a mishap and the results were eminently satisfactory, it is stated.

The Lady Jermyn, originally the Hazzard, was purchased by Vitagraph especially for use in "Dead Men Tell No Tales." She was nearly two hundred feet in length, and while built in 1872, was still staunch. She was a little old-fashioned for present trade, but just the type of sailing vessel described in the story. When set afire she burned for hours, and while the heavy charge of dynamite caused the collapse of her masts and broke her in two, the hulk floated for some time.

The destruction of The Lady Jermyn quite naturally was the final scene taken for "Dead Men Tell No Tales," although the big scene occurs early in the picture. All the previous ship action was taken on her decks and in her cabins while the ship was anchored up the Hudson River, opposite Riverdale, N. Y. The scenes were taken at night, Director Tom Terriss desiring to get them just as described in the book. The ship was taken to a point off the Long Island shore, ten miles from Northport, for the final big scene.

Lytell in Novel Settings

Life in Mars as Taught by Science to Be Shown in Metro Production

FANCIFUL scenes representing life as some scientists declare it exists on the planet Mars will comprise one of the novel features of Bert Lytell's next Metro picture, "A Message from Mars." This will be a Maxwell Karger production. Work on the new production is scheduled to commence the latter part of this week at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street.

"A Message from Mars" will be Bert Lytell's first Metro vehicle under Mr. Karger's personal direction. It is the screen version of Richard Ganthoney's stage play of the same name in which Sir Charles Hawtrey starred some years ago. The story of the play revolves about a young bachelor named Horace Parker, who is visited in a dream by a strange emissary from Mars. The messenger has been banished from the other planet, and his sole means of return lies in his reforming the most selfish man he can find on this earth.

The initial scenes of the production are laid, therefore, on the planet Mars, and show the inhabitants—the Martians—in their native element. In this way unusual opportunity for novelty in scenic effects is offered the Eastern studios of Metro. Houses of fantastic structure will be shown, with their inhabitants moving about in the most outlandish of costumes, as well as some striking night scenes of the planet Mars depicting a state of civilization immeasurably superior to our own. The screen adaptation has been written by Arthur Zellner and Arthur Maude.

William Fox Releases "Drag Harlan"

"Drag Harlan," the latest William Fox production starring William Farnum and directed by J. Gordon Edwards, has just been released. This tale of the great west comes from the pen of Charles Alden Seltzer, and is a story full of the clean wholesome excitement for which Farnum's western productions have become noted, declares William Fox. Opposite Farnum, in the role of the ranger's daughter, is Jackie Saunders. G. Raymond Nye enacts the role of the heavy.

David Gale Is Making a New Comedy Series

A series of comedies, described as "most ingenious" are now being produced in Philadelphia under the direction of David Gale, who is making his headquarters at the Art Film Company, 923 Walnut Street, Philadelphia. Each picture is said to be a humorous treatment of prevalent "human failings" and ends with some practical everyday advice, which is so cleverly introduced as absolutely to eliminate any suggestion of preachiness. The title of the series is "Little Movies With Little Morals."

Prominent English at F. P.-Lasky Studio

Robert Loraine, the celebrated English actor, who has just arrived in this country after an absence of several years, visited the new Famous Players Lasky studio on Long Island with Jesse L. Lasky this week. Mr. Loraine remarked particularly on the fact that organization was running so smoothly so soon after the opening of the studio.

Fox to Release Another Frank Packard Story

William Fox is soon to release another story by Frank L. Packard, who was responsible for "The Miracle Man," "From Now On" and "The White Moll"—the last two being Fox productions. It is entitled "The Iron Rider," and stars William Russell.

History of Industry Is to Be Published Soon

A book of historical interest on the motion picture art and industry, and one that is likely to attract wide attention among people interested in the film, is soon to be published. "The Pioneer of the Photoplay" is the title, and while reviewing the history of the motion picture and the development of the film art and appeal, it tells of the career of J. Stuart Blackton, author and producer of "The Battle Cry of Peace" and many other internationally known screen plays, to whom the title refers.

This book deals entertainingly with such reminiscent material of the early screen days, and brings the record up to the present. The author of the volume is Felix Orman, formerly one of the editors of The Outlook, and at other times literary director of the Periodical Publishers' Association and staff writer for Leslie's Weekly.

Shirley Mason Star of "Girl of My Heart"

The latest William Fox production starring Shirley Mason, entitled "Girl of My Heart," is a screen adaptation of the novel "Joan of Rainbow Springs," by Frances Marion Mitchell.

"Girl of My Heart" has for its theme the philosophy that Divine love will meet every human need, and director Edward J. Le Saint is said by Fox to have succeeded in producing a story intensely human and absorbingly interesting.

"Race of the Age" on B'way

"THE RACE OF THE Age," the official two-reel picture of the race at Windsor, Ont., between Sir Barton and Man O' War made by Educational Films Corporation, is to have its premier showing simultaneously at the Strand theatre, New York, and the Brooklyn Strand, during the week of October 31st, according to announcement of E. W. Hammons, president of the Educational.

The contract, which is said to represent the largest amount ever involved in the booking of a two reel picture for a chain of theatres, also calls for the immediate showing of the picture at the Newark and Rialto in Newark; the Strand in Buffalo; Strand in Albany; Strand in Schenectady; Strand in Lynn, Mass., and Strand in Worcester, Mass.

It is expected that the picture will have simultaneous showings at leading theatres in principal cities through the country on that date, since Educational reports that there have been more inquiries for this picture than any it has ever released. All exchanges in the United States and Canada have been supplied with prints and accessories so that they can care for immediate bookings.

Managing Director Joseph Plunkett, of the New York Strand, is responsible for the statement that "The Race of the Age" is so far the greatest picture of the kind ever made, that it stands in a class alone, and he promises to give it a special presentation and unusual advertising. At the Brooklyn Strand, Managing Director Edward L. Hyman is preparing to make it the most talked of picture that has ever been offered to an audience in that borough.

If "The Race of the Age" needed any commendation or guarantee in addition to the certificate of exclusive permission to take the picture from the Kenilworth Jockey Club, which offered the $75,000 prize for the contest, this is supplied by newspaper accounts of the private showing of the picture on Saturday evening at Glen Riddle Farm, the home of Samuel Riddle, owner of Man O' War, at Glen Riddle, Pa. At this dinner a prominent group of millionaire horsemen saw the picture as a special compliment from President E. W. Hammons. It is said that the owner himself declared that he had learned new things about his wonder horse after viewing this picture, especially the remarkable slow motion shots.

One of the most remarkable portions of the picture is a panoramic shot of the entire race from start to finish that many expert camera men have hailed as one of the most remarkable pieces of photography that the screen has seen. At every point in the race the horses are directly in front of the camera, so that the audience has the illusion of the horses running immediately before their eyes. The picture itself supplies an incomparably better view of the race itself than any person actually on the track could have gained.

"I feel sure," said Mr. Hammons, "after hearing the comment of those who have seen the picture privately, that we have the most remarkable piece of film ever made. It is not merely the record of a horse race, but it is a stirring, dramatic work that I believe will live for many years. It will have an appeal even in communities where there is a feeling against racing, not only on account of its worth as a picture, but because of its moral value. And there is a striking lesson in it for every man, woman and child—that clean living, honesty, always trying and a stout heart will always send one home a victor.

"No exhibitor need fear competition from any other picture or from new reels which claim to have recorded this contest. There was not another camera of any kind in the grounds except the fourteen that were engaged in making 'The Race of the Age,' and exhibitors will do well to note that even those who are announcing that they have bits of the race do not claim that they have anything more than long distance shots taken with cameras outside the park—and including views that actually show the Educational cameramen close up to the track and in carefully prepared positions where they could get every moment of the contest from every angle."

Teaser Ads. Puts Over Picture

Bill Rudolph Breaks Records of Washington House

ONE of the most unusual examples of clever "teaser" advertising recorded in many a day, conceived by "Bill" Rudolph for Louis B. Mayer's picture "The Woman in His House," brought out the Washington, D. C. police to handle the crowds who stormed to see the picture when it ran for a week at Crandall's Metropolitan theatre in that city this month.

It was Mr. Mayer's intention to put across the feature without resorting to the commonplace sensational advertising which would emphasize the eternal triangle element in the picture. Mr. Rudolph was instructed to forget that the picture had a star, a director, or that he had a theatre in which to show it. In other words, the producer desired to prove to his own and the trade's satisfaction that "The Woman in His House," although it has Mildred Harris Chaplin for a star, and John M. Stahl for its director, could stand up entirely on its own merits. So Mr. Rudolph invaded Washington a week before the opening date, and without mentioning a single name—not even the name of the Metropolitan theatre—managed to break all records at the Metropolitan, as a letter from H. M. Crandall to Mr. Mayer testifies.

Mr. Rudolph started his campaign in the dailies on Monday. The space was about three inches in length and two columns in width. On the left was a simple picture of a house. On the left, the copy was written in verse in prose form, in the manner of the writings of Walt Mason appearing in a New York paper. It reads as follows: "This is the House, built by the Man, who had in his Mind, a beautiful plan, to make a fine Nest for a beautiful wife, to live happy therein for the rest of his life. The Woman he choose to live in his House was a sweet, loving creature, a demure little mouse, and both were as happy as happy could be. But Life is a strange thing as we shall soon see."

On Tuesday a second ad, appeared below the first. On the left was a picture of Ramsey Wallace,—"the man," but no name was mentioned. On the right ran another simply-written rhyme, starting off "This is the Man" etc. On Wednesday there was a cut of the star, still nameless, and another verse. The same was done on Thursday, with a picture of the baby; and on Friday with a picture of George Fisher—"the villain." On Saturday the name of the picture, theatre and opening date was added and the advertisement ran an entire two columns. The name of the star was not mentioned.

Harry Crandall tells the result very simply in a letter to Mr. Mayer. "Everybody proclaimed it the best they had ever seen—and thus in addition to breaking records financially, we broke all records for satisfying patrons." It is estimated that 50,000 people saw the production during the week's run.

Bill Rudolph's work did not end there, however. He started off at once to obtain endorsements of the picture from the elect of Washington. He obtained written endorsements from Mabel F. Boardman, one of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and head of the Red Cross; Mrs. Annette Abbott Adams, the assistant U. S. attorney general; Mrs. Mary O'Toole, president of the Woman's City Club; Mr. Admiral Robt. C. Koontz, Rev. Charles S. Cole, Rev. Dr. Luscius C. Clark, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches and Rev. Dr. C. C. McLean, who advised from his pulpit that his congregation see the picture.

A number of film executives and other notables attended the final showing of the picture.

Neilan Ties Up On "Dinty"

Ross Publishing Co. and Woolworth Chain of Stores in National Drive

THE publicity forces of the Marshall Neilan productions have effected a tie-up with the Ross Publishing Company, the Woolworth and other chain-store organizations, it is announced from the Neilan Productions headquarters. The tie-up is said to be national in scope and is intended to exploit the new Neilan-First National release, "Dinty," in which Wesley Barry, the juvenile star, is cast as the principal player. Following is the statement issued in connection with the announcement of the national tie-up:

"Simultaneously with the release of 'Dinty,' Woolworth and other stores all over the country will place on sale a little book on the life of Wesley Barry. Exhibitors playing this production are requested to consult with managers of local stores and arrange for window displays on this booklet using stills and lithographs as part of the display.

Published by the Ross Publishing Company of New York, the Wesley Barry booklet sold at ten cents is expected to meet with great demand among the motion picture public. The novelty of the product will further insure a large sale which will be a dircet advertisement for the forthcoming Neilan attraction.

"In addition to the sale of these booklets to the public via stores, the publishers are prepared to supply exhibitors direct with quantity lots at a nominal cost. As a souvenir the appearance of young Barry as a star in 'Dinty,' this article offers the exhibitor a particularly fitting advertisement for his theatre as well as the attraction for the booklet is something that will be passed around among the family.

"Arrangements for the publication of simlar booklets on Marjorie Daw, Colleen Moore and other Marshall Neilan stars have now been completed."

Good Cast for Barriscale

Strong Support for Star in New Production, "The Living Child"

THE next J. L. Frothingham production in which Bessie Barriscale will be starred has been made under the working title of "The Living Child." This was made from the story of that name by Mary Lerner and adapted to the screen by H. H. Van Loan. The direction is by Paul Scardon, who has been responsible for many great screen successes.

A strong cast has been selected by Mr. Frothingham for "The Living Child." Included in it one finds such players as Walter McGrail, who has appeared in a number of Selznick and National productions; Ethel Grey Terry, famous beauty of the screen; Eugenia Besserer, one of screendom's favorite delineators of aristocratic types; Pat O'Malley, who was seen as the energetic young reporter in Marshall Neiland's "Go and Get It"; Winter Hall, a player of distinction who appeared in "The Forbidden Woman," as well as in many Paramount productions; Joseph J. Dowling, featured in many Benjamin B. Hampton productions and to whom was entrusted the central role of "The Kentucky Colonel," a recent Hodkinson release; Lydia Knott, one of the ablest character women on the screen and Irene Yeager, a child actress of extraordinary charm and appeal.

In every way has Mr. Frothingham given Miss Barriscale a background worthy of her own art and ability, declares W. W. Hodkinson.

Read Opens Story Contest

Five Thousand Dollars in Prizes for Stories Chosen for His Star

WHAT promises to prove one of the biggest exploitation campaigns in the history of motion picture promotion has blossomed into reality. J. Parker Read, Jr., the producer; newspapers and magazines throughout the world; and W. W. Hodkinson's distribution of three Read productions, starring Louise Glaum, will be benefitted through the plan which already is in operation, announces a statement from the J. Parker Read offices on the Coast.

Five thousand dollars has been offered by J. Parker Read, Jr., in co-operation with these publicity media as prizes for original stories, suitable for production by him with Louise Glaum in the stellar roles. In addition to the $5,000 prizes, Read announces his willingness to pay $1,000 each for further ideas available for production in screen form. Here is the plan, as explained in the statement from the J. Parker Read headquarters:

"Each newspaper publishes the rules of the contest, appoints a member of its staff contest editor and organizes a local board of judges, usually consisting of the mayor, the superintendent of schools, a prominent legal light and a local literary authority. A regular course of instruction, prepared by J. Parker Read, Jr.'s staff is given and sixteen "lectures" written by foremost motion picture authorities are supplied, along with a service of photographs, cuts, mats, etc.

"At the conclusion of the contest, which has about eight weeks to run, the local judges segregate the scenario submissions and send on to the central committee at J. Parker Read, Jr.'s headquarters the five most suitable stories or ideas.

"Thus each newspaper interested will submit to the producer five stories. From these the prize scenarios will be chosen and with $2,500 as the first prize.

"Fifteen hundred dollars will be paid for the second award story suitable for use by Read and $1,000 for the third story, subject to the same condition.

"A number of thousand dollar prizes, as aforementioned, are available."

"Not for Child Primarily"

"The Soul of Youth" Has Powerful Appeal for Adults, Says Mr. Woody

"SOME exhibitors, who have not viewed the William Desmond Taylor special, 'The Soul of Youth,' apparently have a notion that the picture is primarily for the entertainment of children," says General Manager John S. Woody, of Realart. "This is not a true conception of the production," pursued Mr. Woody, "as those who have observed an audience of adults at a showing of 'The Soul of Youth' will affirm. While the picture is wholesome and delightful entertainment for children, it does not confine its appeal to them. The grown-ups laugh and chuckle with the youngsters, but the adult also appreciates the deeper human interest phases of the picture.

"The story of 'The Soul of Youth' is founded on a modern sociological theory and goes into the causes of juvenile delinquency and the most modern way of treating the youthful offenses. It takes us to the world-known Juvenile Court of Denver, where its founder, the beloved Judge Ben Lindsey, presides over a most delightful and thought-inspiring session. The problem is presented in such an appealingly entertaining story that even the most hard-hearted and cynical critic has not failed to feel its pull on his heartstrings.

"But reinforcing the story of the boy, and forming an admirable background, is a story of the love of a maid for a man and his dramatic and successful effort to make good."

Writer Lauds Charles Ray

Visualization of Story Pleases the Author of "Peaceful Valley"

EDWARD E. KIDDER, author of the story, "Peaceful Valley," which has been used as a starring vehicle for Charles Ray, witnessed the film presentation of his story at the Strand theatre, New York, as the guest of the managing director, Joseph L. Plunkitt. Following is Mr. Kidder's appreciation of the screen version of his story and the work of Mr. Ray in the leading role. Speaking of the star's interpretation of the principal character, Mr. Kidder says:

"He is more than a 'ray;' he is a dramatic X-ray, for he illuminates all he touches. The 'movies' are certainly wonderful. To obtain the effects they do without language is little short of a miracle, especially with a play like 'Peaceful Valley,' in which the dialogue has been a prime factor in its thirty years' success upon the legitimate stage.

"Ray is so earnest in whatever he does that one misses the spoken word very little. Of course, there are episodes in the play that I regret not to find in the picture; but to offset this, there are scenes in the film version that are much stronger vizualized than described.

"What wonder that the speechless drama has dealt such a terrific blow to the regular stage? But let us get back to Ray.

"Here is a natural-born actor."

Mae Brusch, who will appear in a prominent role of "Foolish Wives," Von Stroheim's new production for Universal

New Vehicle Selected for Earle Williams

Blending comedy and melodrama, Earle Williams' next Vitagraph feature will have amusing situations as well as thrilling action, declares Vitagraph. The picture is entitled "Diamonds Adrift," and is an adaptation from a story in a popular magazine by Frederick J. Jackson. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, purchased the story for Mr. Williams while he was on the West Coast a few months ago and had looked over the true locals of the plot with Mr. Williams. The scenes are laid along the Pacific Coast from Los Angeles harbor to Mazatlan, Mexico.

Chester Bennett, who has directed Mr. Williams in his last several pictures, has just signed a new contract to continue in this capacity, and will start the next picture immediately.

Betty Francisco Irvin Willat's New "Find"

Betty Francisco, Director Irvin V. Willat's newest "find," is a young lady of more than ordinary beauty as well as one who is possessed of histrionic power of the very highest order, declares W. W. Hodkinson. Miss Francisco has appeared in the Ziegfeld Follies, where her beauty and personal charm won her a foremost place.

Pioneer Secures "The Eternal Mother"

The much talked-of feature, starring Florence Reed and carrying the appealing title of "The Eternal Mother", has been acquired by the Pioneer Film Corporation, according to an announcement made yesterday by President A. E. Lefcourt at the Pioneer headquarters, 130 West 46th Street, New York.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Universal's Premier at Astor

Grand Presentation Is Staged for "Once to Every Woman"

AN elaborate presentation was staged by Universal in New York City the past week for "Once to Every Woman," the new Universal-Jewel production, starring Dorothy Phillips and directed by her husband, Allen J. Holubar. The showing was held in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Astor. Prominent exhibitors from the New York territory, leading men and women of the moving picture world, and hundreds of newspaper, magazine and theatrical people filled the hall.

The large crowd greeted the new picture favorably and acclaimed it the greatest piece of work ever done by Miss Phillips and her husband-director. Especial praise was meted out to the star for her ability in handling the series of varying characterizations made necessary by the story. She at first acted the role of a high school girl, then that of a young music student, later a successful prima donna, and finally a matured woman chastened by sacrifice. Her artistry in handling these widely separated phases of feminine character stamps her as one of the greatest screen actresses, it was the consensus of opinion.

Much credit was also given to Holubar for his direction of the picture. In the staging of an entire grand opera—singers, orchestra and audience, for a single sequence of scenes in "Once to Every Woman," Holubar won commendation as a doer of big things for the screen, declares Universal.

The Hotel Astor presentation was especially notable because of the musical accompaniment. The story of "Once to Every Woman" written by Holubar himself, recites the aspirations and romance of the music world, and of the progress of a rising young opera singer. An orchestral accompaniment compiled and directed by James V. Bradford, added much to the general effect of the picture. This accompaniment was especially effective during the scenes depicting the action of a grand opera first night.

A prologue song was sung by Miss Mabelle Nash, a lyric soprano. It was "Ben Bolt," the old favorite. This song is an intimate part of the heart appeal in "Once to Every Woman," and although simple and unostentatious, it made an ideal prologue for the photoplay. Miss Nash, a protege of William Thornton, noted impressario, and who at one time was the most popular prologue songster on the First National Exhibitors' Circuits in the Middle West, sang several verses of "Ben Bolt" before the presentation.

"Once to Every Woman," brings a new "mother" to screen prominence. She is Mrs. Margaret Mann. Many of those who saw her last Thursday united in saying she is one of the most sympathetic and lovable "mothers" yet seen in photodrama. It is her mother-love which binds the varying action of the picture into a dramatic and forceful whole.

Other high-lights in the Dorothy Phillips film were the realistic theatre panic scenes, staged by Holubar, and the unusually picturesque subtitles.

Universal was highly pleased with its first invitation showing. Paul Gulick, Director of Publicity, and Charles Rosenweig, general sales-manager of the New York Exchange, who arranged the showing, united in saying that the success of the presentation has convinced Universal that "Once to Every Woman" will eclipse by far the success of Miss Phillips' previous screen hits, among them "The Heart of Humanity," and "The Right to Happiness." The film company is driving in every part of the country in a campaign to popularize "Once to Every Woman" among the patrons of every Universal exhibitor.

Wm. Fox Film Activities in Brief

New Productions and Engagements Are Announced

WILLIAM FOX announces that "Partners of Fate," a tale of society and the seas by Stephen Chalmers, has been purchased as the second vehicle for his new star, Louise Lovely. This will follow "The Little Grey Mouse," Miss Lovely's recently completed film. The supporting cast engaged includes Rosemary Theby, William Scott, Philo McCullough, George Stigmann, Richard Cummings and Eileen O'Malley.

As soon as Tom Mix finishes supervising the cutting and editing of his latest special Western, "Prairie Trails," he will begin production work under Lynn F. Reynolds on "Happy-Go-Lucky," in the William Fox West Coast studio.

Carol Holloway, the magazine cover beauty, and long identified with Vitagraph special productions, has been engaged by William Fox for an important role in the new Buck Jones production to follow "Just Pals," now in the making.

J. Searle Dawley has been assigned to Pearl White as the first star to have his direction under the William Fox banner.

Clyde Cook, whose initial Fox special comedy, "Kiss Me Quick," received such wonderful reception by New York audiences when first shown at the Strand and Rialto theatres, is now making his third production—bearing the title, "All Wrong."

"Over the Hill," the great William Fox success, is entering the third month of its run on Broadway, where it is playing to capacity houses at every performance.

Robert Elliott, well-known stage and screen artist, after a very brief absence from the screen, will again make his appearance in the silent drama in support of Pearl White in a special William Fox production now in the making.

George Fisher and Ruth Stonehouse will divide supporting honors in the newest Eileen Percy starring vehicle for Fox, "The Land of Jazz." This photoplay promises something unique.

William Farnum will shortly return to the West Coast studios of Fox to start work on the filming of a famous stage success.

Mark Twain's classic, "A Connecticut Yankee At King Arthur's Court," is approaching completion under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn. This picture will probably have its initial showing on Broadway within three months. The all-star cast includes Harry C. Myers n the role of the Yankee; Rosemary Theby in the role of the wicked princess; Pauline Stark as Sandy, the favored one; Charles Clary as King Arthur; and William V. Mong as the Court Magician. The entire production is being staged at the William Fox West Coast studios.

"Her Dog Gone Wedding" and "Pals and Petticoats" are the names of two new Fox Sunshine Comedies which will be issued in the near future. The famous Sunshine widows have the support of long-established comedians of the screen in both these productions.

Edward Sedgwick is making rapid progress on the first few episodes of the second William Fox serial, "Fantomas." One thrill follows another in this famous mystery story, says William Fox, and the players include Edward Rosemon as Fantomas, Johnnie Walker as the protecting lover of Edna Murphy, the girl; Eva Balfour and John Willard.

Following completion of the famous Frank L. Packard story, "The Iron Rider," William Russell will start work on an original story entitled "The Cloth of Gold."

Virginia Lee, who has just finished playing the leading role in the initial Cayuga production

Completing Metro Specials

Four Productions Nearly Finished at Company's West Coast Studios

FOUR special Metro productions of the most widely varied character are nearing completion at the company's West Coast studios in Hollywood, California.

Most spectacular of the group is "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," a colossal picturized version of the famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez. A corps of experts that includes military men, artists, costumers and historians are working with Rex Ingram, director, and Miss June Mathis, who prepared the script for this special. Nearly 12,000 men and women will participate in the production, either as performers before the camera, or in some of the many phases of preparatory work that has been carried on ever since Metro purchased the picture rights to the world-famous novel.

"The Offshore Pirate," the second story by F. Scott Fitzgerald to be filmed by Metro, is a sea story with plenty of salt but none of the 'sailorisms' that usually are supposed to be essential for such a tale. As the audacious ward of a misguided millionaire, Viola Dana has proved a capable ally of the two Fitzgeralds—F. Scott, the author, and Dalllas M., the director—in putting the tale across, says Metro.

Native Hawaiians in a real Hawaiian setting furnish the proper atmosphere for Doraldina, the famous dancer, in her first Metro starring picture, "Passion Fruit," by Carey Wilson. Edward Earle, "the O. Henry Man" is playing the leading male role in this production. Other players having important parts are Stuart Holmes Sidney Bracey, William Bainbridge and Florence Turner.

May Allison's latest starring vehicle, "The Marriage of William Ashe," dealing with the political and social life of the inner circles of London, is a screen adaptation of Margaret Mayo's stage version of the widely known novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Edward Sloman is directing the picture. The all-star cast which is supporting Miss Allison includes Wyndham Standing, Frank Elliott, Lydia Yeamons Titus and Clarissa Selwynne.

Sentiment in Sennett Film

Serious Touches Are Mingled With Fun in "Love, Honor and Behave"

MACK SENNETT'S latest big picture, "Love, Honor and Behave," is said to have qualities that will appeal to every type of picture patron. A quality not usually associated with Sennett comedies is that of sentiment which abounds in this new plot. It is not held up for smiles or hearty laughs, but is injected with sincerity and emotional effectiveness, says First National.

Marie Prevost appears as a young bride. The bridegroom is George O'Hara, and the tangle that is woven in their domestic affairs provides this picture with its plot. The bridegroom is held in the mesh of circumstantial evidence, and the bride is too willing to believe the worst. They take their case to the Judge, whose nature partakes of the wisdom of Solomon and the wit of Portia. He settles their differences. In order to do this, "Judge" Murray tells the pair a story purporting to be the narrative of his own experiences when he, too, was a bridegroom and his bride was likewise over-jealous.

The value of circumstantial evidence is given a resounding wallop in the plot; the credibility of unsupported testimony and the veracity of coincidents are challenged by the jurist until Marie is persuaded that, like the Judge, her husband has been the victim of cruel circumstances.

"Judge" Murray's story provides the episodes of the picture. Beautiful Phyllis Haver, as leading woman in the Judge's story, is revealed as a bride whose experiences parallel those of the piquant Marie.

It is said by those that have seen this picture that the injection of a real purpose, the development of an authentic plot and the projection of a sound moral do not interfere at all with the hilarious movement of a typically Sennett story.

Garson Has Novel Ad on Young Picture

An attractive brochure has been issued and will be given to all exhibitors who book "Hush," the first of the Clara Kimball Young pictures which will be released through Garson Productions. The advertisement is made up of clever pen and ink drawings and well written catch lines and teasers on the theme of the picture. J. H. Mayer, of the Garson Productions, announces that a campaign book will soon be ready.

Baseball Picture Wins First Run Bookings

"The Great Baseball Scandal," the slow motion photography exposure of how baseball games are "thrown," recently released for the State Rights market by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is reported by Joseph Friedman of Celebrated Players Film Exchange, Chicago, to have bookings in a number of the leading first run houses in his territory.

An important production, entitled "Tiger," will be started at Universal City within a few days, Universal announces. The story is by Max Brand, and it will serve Frank Mayo as a starring vehicle. Jacques Jaccard, who has just finished directing Mayo in "Honor Bound" will supervise the production of "Tiger."

Jacques Jaccard has selected a strong cast to support the Universal star. Fritzi Brunette will play the feminine lead; Walter Long has the heavy role; Al Kaufman, star of the squared circle, has the part of a "bouncer" in an underworld resort; Herbert Bethew appears in a colorful character role, and others in the cast will be Eleanor Hancock, Charles Brinley and Willis Robards.

"The Great Redeemer," Metro's super-special release, Maurice Tourneur's production of H. H. Van Loan's greatest story, was presented at the Rivoli theatre, Broadway and Fiftieth street, New York, on Sunday, October 24, for a week's showing.

The world premiere of the picture took place not long ago in the New California theatre, Los Angeles. The success it achieved there is now so much film history. The New York presentation, Metro officials believe, will confirm, by a showing in the East, the fact that this striking drama of regeneration is undeniably "one of the master-pictures of the decade."

Kellerman Film at the Capitol This Week

"The Art of Diving," the Annette Kellerman slow motion picture and the third of the single reel specials released through Educational Exchanges, is being featured on the anniversary program of the Capitol theatre, New York, this week. After seeing this picture, which is made by the Cinal process, S. L. Rothapfel asked that the New York release be held back so that he could include it in his celebration of the end of the Capitol's first year.

In this picture the "modern Venus" is said to reveal the secrets of her diving that has made her one of the greatest drawing cards in all vaudeville. First her feats are shown with the standard motion camera and then the movements are analyzed by slow motion.

Goldwyn Secures Story by Charles Kenyon

Goldwyn has added another story by a famous American author written directly for the screen to the three previously announced as ready to go into production at its West Coast studios, and two others for later picturization. It was written by Charles Kenyon, the well known dramatist whose greatest play, "Kindling," won popularity on the speaking stage.

His first story written directly for the screen is entitled "The Alibi," and Goldwyn is planning to give it an elaborate production.

Westminster Abbey Is Produced in Film

Four of the most pretentious reproductions of historic places which have ever been made in a motion picture studio will furnish settings for some of the scenes in "The Great Adventure," the third Whitman Bennett production starring Lionel Barrymore for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., declares this distributing organization. These four settings are faithful reproductions of portions of Westminster Abbey, one being the east end of the South Ambulatory; the second the chancel looking toward the High Altar; the third the gallery looking down on the chancel and the fourth the organ loft.

Busy Days for Lasky Forces

THE work done on two big scenes in the productions now being filmed by Cecil DeMille and George Melford is described in a statement emanating from the New York headquarters of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The big scenes were "shot" at the Lasky studio on Friday, October 1st. "Mr. DeMille, working on 'Forbidden Fruit'," reads the Paramount statement, "has a setting that occupies one entire stage, the largest in the studio, known as the 'open stage' or 'stage four-open', in the sense that it has no roof, but is covered with canvas diffusers. The great tank, the scene of so many already historic dramas of the screen, was covered by the setting, while every available foot had something on it in connection with the scene.

"Hundreds of extras were employed, in striking costumes, for this scene which will be one of the big features of the picture. A small army of carpenters, 'prop' men, light-men, stage-hands, grips, assistants, etc., were on the job, while a battery of cameramen shot the scenes. The first day was given over to rehearsal, and the actual taking was done the next. Among the noted players appearing are Forrest Stanley, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts, Kathlyn Williams, Theodore Kosloff, Clarence Burton, Shannon Day and many others.

"Mr. Melford's job was on location, and the street in front of the studio was literally packed with motor cars, extra people, cameramen, stage-crew and others. Many big vans carried the extra people to location, while dozens of private autos conveyed the principals and the staff. These scenes will show the big feature of the William Vaughn Moody play, 'The Faith Healer.' The leading man in this production, Milton Sills, also wrote the continuity in collaboration with Mrs. Moody, widow of the late dramatist. Ann Forrest is leadwoman and there is a strong cast in addition. The picture is shaping up well, according to report, with compelling situations and dramatic moments piling up on one another.

"In addition to the above production," continues the statement from Paramount, "several others are in process of production, including Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in 'Brewster's Millions', directed by Joseph Henabery and adapted by Walter Woods; and Mary Miles Minter, who has space at the Lasky studio for her Realart picture, "All Soul's Eve,' directed by Chester M. Franklin.

"Shortly several other important pictures will be under way, such as William DeMille's production, 'What Every Woman Knows', which Olga Printzlau is adapting from Barrie's play and in which Lois Wilson and Conrad Nagel will have the leads.

'Wallace Reid will soon begin on a new film for Paramount as yet untitled and to be directed by Frank Urson, until recently assistant to Cecil B. DeMille and now a director in his own right.

"Much interest is manifested at the studio in the announcement that Sir Gilbert Parker will shortly arrive at Hollywood to arrange for the production of one of his original stories for Paramount. Another famous figure to arrive shortly at the Lasky studio will be Penrhyn Stanlaws, the noted illustrator and artist, who has been studying the technique of pictures at the New York studios of the company. The exact details of his work on the Coast have not yet been made public.

"In every respect it looks like a busy fall and winter season at the Lasky studio, and preparations are under way to accommodate the many sets and provide facilities for the great number of scenes that are to be made in the near future."

Release "Earthbound" at Once

ALTHOUGH the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation believes that Basil King's picture, "Earthbound," would unquestionably bring tremendous returns as a road show, or from runs in legitimate theatres, it is officially announced that this production will be released immediately to exhibitors.

This means that exhibitors of the country are to reap the full immediate benefit of the prestige achieved by the production through extended runs at theatres in key cities, says Goldwyn. The nationwide publicity that "Earthbound" has received is in the opinion of Goldwyn officials worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. Rumors that, because of the magnitude of the picture, Goldwyn would reserve it for road show or legitimate presentation, are set at rest by the statement that it is released to picture theatres with a value to exhibitors of 100 per cent.

This announcement comes as the culmination of a great advertising campaign launched by Goldwyn in August when the picture was presented simultaneously at the Astor theatre, New York, and the Playhouse, Chicago, at $2.00 top followed by a run at Miller's theatre, Los Angeles.

The benefit to be derived from the publicity that "Earthbound" has received during the past three months is very great, says Goldwyn, not only in the territories immediately effected, but in the country at large. Important newspapers in all large cities have given space to the new photoplay art revealed in this production, and there is scarcely a national magazine of note that has not brought it to the attention of its readers. Besides many papers have run accounts of the big crowds it has attracted.

Furthering the advertising gained by special engagement additional indefinite runs are scheduled for the Imperial, San Francisco, Oct. 24; the Strand, Seattle, Nov. 6; Ascher's Auditorium, Dayton, O., Nov. 7; Massey Hall, Toronto, Canada, Nov. 5; the Columbia, Portland, Ore., and the Victory, Tampa, Fla.

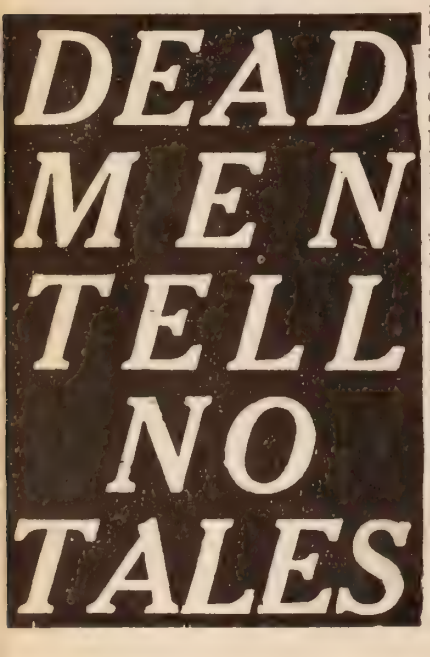
Here are two scenes from the forthcoming feature "Life," with which William A. Brady returns to the producing field after several months' absence

Showings will soon be given of Betty Compson's first personally-produced starring picture, "Prisoners of Love," according to an announcement emanating from the Goldwyn offices. This production will have its initial showing at the Capitol theatre, New York City, during the week of November 21, and prints are now on the way to the various Goldwyn exchanges throughout the country.

"Prisoners of Love," which introduces Miss Compson as a screen star, will mark her first appearance since George Loane Tucker's "Miracle Man" elevated her from the realm of comedies to straight

Paramount Cameraman Honored for Work

Arthur Miller, cameraman for the George Fitzmaurice productions for Paramount, has received word from officials of the Roual Photographic Salon in London that his photographic study of Mae Murray, entitled "The Dancer," was judged one of the best twelve studies hung recently. The picture was made during the filming of the Fitzmaurice production, "Idols of Clay." Mr. Miller also had five other pictures hung in the salon, all of them exterior views.



Engagement Pleases Kipling

Randolph Lewis in London Cables That Author Likes His Commission

RANDOLPH LEWIS, who has been sent by Pathe to advise Rudyard Kipling on screen technique and the details of motion-picture production, has addressed a cablegram to Paul Brunet, president of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., in which the statement is made that Mr. Kipling is enthusiastic over his commission to write a series of stories direct for the screen under contract with Pathe. Mr. Lewis' cablegram also conveys, according to Pathe, the thanks of the famous British author to Mr. Brunet for the latter's personal attention and interest in the engagement.

Immediately upon his arrival in London, Lewis went to the Kipling home, and the following day work was begun on the first draft of the initial story to be produced by Pathe. These stories will be reborn on the screen under the direction of Robert Brunton.

Mr. Brunton has already made a number of notable successes for Pathe. The more recent of these is "The Devil to Pay", a big feature production. He also made "Daredevil Jack," the serial starring Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion of the world; "Double Adventure", another serial not yet released by Pathe, starring Charles Hutchison; and is now producing "The Avenging Arrow", a chapter play with Ruth Roland starring.

Soon after the script of the first Kipling story is received in the United States, work upon production will be inaugurated in the Brunton studio. Plans have been laid for the issuing of the initial Kipling special early in the coming year.

Japanese Commend Vidor

High Standards in "The Jack Knife Man" Win Favor of Japanese Censor

IT is rathher unusual for an American producer of motion pictures to be singled out and held up for admiration by any particular nationality residing thousands of miles away from Hollywood, but that is exactly what has happened in the case of King W. Vidor who is producing special feature attractions to be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., says First National.

Prior to the showing of "The Jack Knife Man," Vidor's latest release through Associated First National, the "creed" of the young director was published broadcast in Japan. It evoked considerable com-

Consequently, King Vidor was not as surprised as he might have been when, shortly after "The Jack Knife Man" had been shown in Japan, he received a letter from G. Tachibana, Chief Inspector of Films, Metropolitan Police Board, Tokyo, Japan. This letter again took occasion to praise Mr. Vidor's high standards and at the same time enclosed a memorandum showing just what the Japanese will not tolerate on the screens of their country.

It appears that there are sixteen angles in films which will not pass muster at the Nipponese metropolis. According to First National the tabooed pictures include those that:

Concern the Imperial Family or ancestors; endanger the prestige of the nation; incite radical changes of government, or principles, or social disorder; endanger the "reputation and honor enjoyed by great men and sages, dead or alive;" suggest methods of crimes or means of escape; injure international relationship; represent "too cruel or atrocious acts or ignominious or obscene conduct, adultery or vulgar love affairs; criticise current events, or suggest or discourage any personal affairs of individuals; tend to discourage learning and lawful business, or to "make people roughhearted and frivolous;" lead children to "play mischievous sport;" tend to injure the dignity of school masters; "broken or defaced films, or films that shake too much because of harm to eyes;" "contradict morality and consequently the principle." Good brings its own reward and the devil its punishment.

William Brady Finishes Filming "Life"

William A. Brady announces the completion of his latest motion picture production "Life." "Life is a picturization of the melodrama of that title written by Thompson Buchanan and Mr. Brady. It scored a great success when it was produced by the latter on the stage of the Manhattan Opera House some seasons back. "Life" was directed by Travers Vale and photographed by Frank Kirby.

H. Thompson Rich Heads Hodkinson Staff

One of the most recent additions to the W. W. Hodkinson organization is H. Thompson Rich, a writer of unusual ability. Mr. Rich has been associated in the past with Vitagraph, Metro and Goldwyn and has been intensively trained in every branch of the business. While he is perhaps best known as a continuity writer, he is also an author of no little repute. Mr. Rich will head the Literary Department of the W. W. Hodkinson corporation.

"Twin Beds" at Strand Week of October 31

Sunday, October 31, has been definitely set for the presentation of Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in the film adaptation of "Twin Beds" at the Strand theatre, Manhattan. The picture will continue there during the entire week. The very near future will witness also the first showings of this picture in many other parts of the country.

New Twist Is Given to a Regulation Plot

Stuart Paton is giving an entirely new twist to the familiar "girl-on-an-island" plot in "Out of the Sunset," a new picture starring Eva Novak, it has been announced by Universal. "Out of the Sunset" is from the story by George Rix. It was scenarioized by Philip Hurn. Supporting Miss Novak will be Jack Perrin, Oleta Otis, Lawrence Shumway, Jack Curtis, Harry Carter, and Bert Apling.

Loew Pays Tribute to "Madame X" Film

Goldwyn submits a copy of an advertisement used by Marcus Loew in the New York newspapers of October 19 to announce Pauline Frederick in "Madame X." Here is the tribute paid by the prominent theatre-owner to the Goldwyn release:

"Marcus Loew personally calls to your attention one of the greatest pictures of all times, "Madame X," a drama which will live in your memory forever, featuring Pauline Frederick, will be shown in all the Loew theatres in Greater New York this week and next week. Watch for dates."

Dead Men Tell No Tales

Live Notes from the Studios

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

ABOUT DIRECTORS

IT has been generally considered that fan mail is of no value other than to take the place of applause heard by actors on the speaking stage but it remains for William Duncan, the director star of Vitagraph serials, to find an important use for the thousands of letters he receives. By securing admission figures from a given locality Duncan has been able to arrive at almost definite figures of the number of fans who write letters in comparison with the number who witness the showing of the given picture. By securing such averages from several different localities he can gauge the general attendance of a given subject which makes his views on the popularity of a picture almost as accurate as a tabulation of admissions from the theatres of the world.

"The American serial," says Mr. Duncan, "has taken the whole civilized world by storm. Even the semi-civilized nations are daily paying huge sums into foreign box offices to see American serials. Letters from Siberia, the Caucasus, Turkestan and the Tartar regions of Russia show that the semi-civilized nationalities are serial mad. An abnormal demand has been created for the chapter plays in Europe, South America and the Orient and many movie houses of these countries are holding their screen patronage with serials much the same as many magazines pile up enormous circulations by means of continued stories.

"The American feature picture may meet with all kinds of Italian, French, German and English competition in Europe but the American serial is supreme and meets with little domestic opposition. Many American producers, studying the shadow fields of Europe and South America have found, greatly to their surprise, that the serial actors and actresses are better known than some of the most exploited feature players."

Because of the popularity of American serials Duncan has decided to remain in serial productions indefinitely. He is now working on his seventh episode play, as yet unnamed, which is the first production under his new contract which has a long time to run.

That the timing of action in motion pictures is a vital factor often overlooked, is a firm conviction of Dallas M. Fitzgerald, of the Metro staff, who is directing Viola Dana in her new starring picture, "The Off-Shore Pirate." Mr. Fitzgerald also directed Miss Dana in "Blackmail" and "Cinderella's Twin," her two most recent stellar productions. Previous to these productions, he directed Bert Lytell in "The Price of Redemption."

Mary Miles Minter as the wife-model in "All Souls' Eve," a Realart production

Mr. Fitzgerald is a close student of the many little details frequently neglected that go to make up a successful production and in his opinion the timing of action is one of the most important.

"Such a detail as establishing the tempo of a picture is often overlooked," said Mr. Fitzgerald. "Yet the motion picture audience is much more critical than those in the industry realize and generally can notice whether the rhythm of the action corresponds with the story, because there is a sudden jump when the picture does not run smoothly."

Mr. Fitzgerald never plans his action without allowing time for each member of his company to do his part, leaving no time to produce a lull or a rush.

"Many pictures are spoiled," he added, "simply because the action is worked up smoothly to the climax and then, in order to impress the big point, action is allowed to drag and thus throw it out of meter. It often happens that in a long scene where several persons are moving about, one will have to stop for a moment in order to allow the other to catch up. These little details may seem trifling, but they all contribute to the success or failure of a picture."

"The Off-Shore Pirate," from the short story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, was adapted to the screen by Waldemar Young.

Lucius Henderson, supervising director of American Cinema Corporation, has a word or ten to say regarding the prevalent high cost of living, since the price of pastry seems to be eliminating the heretofore common "fat boy type."

"Her Majesty," now in the course of production, in which Mollie King will appear in the title role, calls for a fat boy, early in the course of action. For more than a week Mr. Henderson had been looking over and around plump applicants without finding one rotund enough to even excite a corporation smile. About to change the character to a "skinny," Miss King's sister, Nellie King, found the solution of Mr. Henderson's problem. In a pastry shop, she happened upon a sweet tooth "hound," a boy not more than four feet in height, who was found to tip the scale at 180. And with becoming a moving picture actor, and being assured the best pastry would be used for his scenes, the fat boy followed the "bait," and while his share of the script's action is said to be brief, it is also predicted as one of the best comedy reliefs in the picture.

ABOUT PLAYERS

The feminine lead in "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," featuring Gaston Glass, will be played by Vivienne Osborne, who has joined the company on location in Calgary, where exteriors will be made, under the direction of Henry MacRae. Both Mr. Glass and Miss Osborne are to be congratulated upon their appointments, negotiated by their manager, Arthur H. Jacobs.

Virginia Valli, the demure little leading lady, who is winning considerable popularity, will be seen in "The Plunger" and in "The Spendthrift," forthcoming Fox productions. Both of these pictures are in a comedy vein of the George Walsh type and a direct contrast to the highly emotional role portrayed by Miss Valli in "The Better Way," starring Hope Hampton, in which Miss Valli is said to give an unusually good performance.

Olive Tell has been specially engaged for the forthcoming Eugene O'Brien picture, opposite the popular leading man. Miss Tell recently completed her work in "Clothes," Metro, and needs no introduction to film enthusiasts.

Rose Tapley, for several years one of Vitagraph's most popular players and associated with Famous Players-Lasky, in exhibitors' cooperative work for three years, is shortly to return to the screen. Miss Tapley has a wide acquaintance among theatre managers, her activity for Paramount forces bringing her in direct contact with many exhibitors of prominence during the past three years. And as an actress she is well remembered.

A picture with all Canadian cast, which will depict the life and development of the great northwest, is said to be in formation, the masculine element already decided upon, including Gordon H. Standing, Rockliffe Fellowes and Frank C. Badgley. Mr. Standing should be well acclimated for the part, since he has recently finished work in another Canadian story, "The Foreigner," for First National release. Mr. Fellowes may truthfully boast of never having played other than a leading role and Mr. Badgley, who made his debut in motion pictures under D. W. Griffith's banner, plays the "heavy" in Dorothy Gish's newest picture, temporarily titled "The Ghost in the Garret."

Mr. Edward Earle, who played opposite Doraldina in her first Metro starring vehicle, has ventured to return to the uncertain climate of New York, where he will again be seen upon the legitimate stage in a new play written by Earl Carroll. Mr. Earle left for the coast especially for the Doraldina picture in which he will be seen in the lead.

William N. Bailey, completing his work as leading man opposite Juanita Hansen, in Pathe serials, shortly is to make a tour of personal appearances in theatres showing the episodes. Prior to joining the Essanay company a few years ago, Mr. Bailey was well known upon the legitimate stage.

Martha Mansfield has been selected for the envied role opposite Conway Tearle in the next superspecial in which the star will appear, a most flattering assignment, even for the beauteous Martha.

Mollie King plays a dual role in the new American Cinema Corporation's production of "Her Majesty." As twin sisters, the star has an opportunity for portraying diversified characterization. One girl is country bred, the other a society butterfly with the attendant variety in background manners and costuming. Elizabeth Ethel Donoher wrote the story. The supporting cast is yet to be announced.

Mme. Olga Petrova, who is known in every end of the amusement world, is now making a twelve weeks tour in vaudeville. And besides being in a class by herself, as an actress of the screen, she is also a composer. She is at present using "The Road to Romany" as a part of her forty-five minutes entertainment, one of her own compositions, published by M. Witmark & Sons. Her success in her own song has been so pronounced that Witmarks are now bringing out her latest effort, "A Golden Day in June."

A terrific battle took place early this week at the Long Island studio where "The Voice of the Blood" is being filmed. The participants were Alice Brady, star of the production, and Edith Stockton, principal female support—but the "battle" was just a scene in the story. It was a real hair-pulling match, however, and stirred even the hardened studio hands by its intensity, for the actresses gave their all to the scene.

The reality of this individual incident gives great promise for the picture since this is the critical situation in the story, showing the actual physical battle between the two chorus girls—depicted by Miss Brady and Miss Stockton—over the man whom they both want. The scene takes place in a remarkable replica of the most popular jazz restaurant that flourished on Broadway in the year 1 P. V. (Pre Volstead).

Incidentally, the engagement of Edith Stockton for Miss Brady's support is a concrete indication of Realart's lavish production, since Miss Stockton is a star in her own right, having recently completed her third Plympton Epic Production entitled "Through the Storm."

About three years ago Percy Marmont made his screen debut in Elsie Ferguson's first picture for Famous Players, and since that time Marmont has appeared opposite a varied array of feminine luminaries. Now it comes out that he has signed with Famous to create the leading masculine role in a special production. Within the last few months Mr. Marmont has played with Marguerite Clarke, Billie Burke, and in Vitagraph productions, opposite Alice Joyce and Corinne Griffith; with Norma Talmadge in "The Branded Woman" and recently with Hope Hampton in "The Better Way." His work at Famous will follow a vacation at Paul Smith's camp in the Adirondacks.

Creighton Hale, one of the best known juvenile leading men of the screen, has been engaged by American Cinema Corporation to play opposite Mollie King in "Her Majesty," already in the course of making. Mr. Hale won his first renown for his share of the several Pearl White serials for Pathe a few years since, which have been shown in every country boasting of a picture house. Recently, he was seen in D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East," to great advantage. In "Her Majesty," Mr. Hale has the role of Ted Harper, a part presenting a wide scope, traveling from early episodes of boydom on a farm to a wealthy society man, in the later reels. The picture is under the direction of George Irving.

Film Activities in France Take Big Spurt

THE French government, which is at present battling with all its might to restore its financial position, must be credited with a veritable inspiration for the scheme which it has adopted to popularize the new State Loan that is being launched at present. In conjunction with the powerful newspaper, the Matin, and following the example already set in the United States, the government has opened up an original and highly interesting cinema competition to which are attached prizes amounting to one hundred and fifty thousand francs offered by the Matin. The scheme is simple but eminently practical. The idea is to obtain by popular vote the best reason with which a French citizen should be inspired to subscribe to the new Loan. For this purpose a special film is being prepared composed of seven scenes or subjects. These subjects include: 1. The Desire for a Good Investment; 2. Desire for a Sure Investment; 3. Desire to subscribe through Prudence; 4. Through Duty to one's Country; 5. Because one must sow in order to reap; 6. So that France may gather in the Fruits of Victory; 7. Through Motives of Sentiment.

The public, by an arrangement with the directors of all cinema theatres throughout France and the colonies, will be provided with voting cards, and the prizes will be awarded to those who approach the nearest in their forecast of the number of voters of the winning subject.

The film itself has been entrusted to one of the most eminent directors in the French cinema world, while the artists include a powerful phalanx of the country's cinema actors, among whom may be noted Signoret, Andre Brabant, Marguerite Deval, etc. An important role will also be confided to the French aviation ace, Captain Fonck.

While the Government anticipates valuable economic results from this original scheme, the French cinema world, including both directors and artists, are applauding the idea as destined to advance the cause of the cinema in France not only artistically but practically.

One of the most remarkable and original films ever produced has just been shown in Paris. It is entitled "The Mysteries of the Heavens" and is the work of the distinguished journalist and writer, Louis Forest. Taking as his text the question, "Will our earth ever be extinguished like some of the stars in the night skies?" the author has revealed on a series of astonishingly well reproduced plates of remarkable beauty the successive discoveries of astronomers throughout the centuries.

The public was enabled to wander through the lovely landscapes of the moon, to gaze on Mars and its strange canals, to watch the movements of the planets and comets and to study the sun's spots and atmosphere.

At times, descending from the ethereal to the terrestrial, the series of views revealed the human side of the history. One saw the first astronomers at work—the Chaldean Shepherds of the Bible watching the movements of the planets in search of the Star which was a sign of the coming of Christ. Then succeeded the mediæval astronomers and their ancient lore, including such names as Copernicus, Kepler, Laplace, whose patient and laborious studies resulted in such valuable and far-reaching deductions in astronomical science.

The whole was a remarkable exhibition of science and art and technique — the technique of the film. Many ingenious devices have been adopted for showing comparative movements of size and force and the result is a valuable educational film which does honor to the great inventive and artistic French mind.

The latest and not the least significant innovation in the French film world is the founding at Nice, which glories in the title of the "Los Angeles" of France, of a society known as the "Inter-Cine" for the purpose of supplying a long felt want. Previous to this, Nice was conceded to be splendidly equipped climactically, geographically and atmospherically for the production of films, while to these natural advantages was added a number of splendid studios to which the most skillful producers and the finest artists flocked. The practical end, however, was incomplete for there frequently lacked many of the accessories essential to film production, such as furniture or costumes of a particular style or period or the latest devices in photography or lighting systems.

The "Inter-Cine," composed of a group of eminent cinema personalities, undertakes to supply the trade, both producers and artists, with all and everything in the way of material for film production. This society is the first of its kind in France and is welcomed by everyone concerned.

It has just been announced that the capital of the Gaumont Company has been increased from five to ten million francs by the issue of fifty thousand new shares of a hundred francs offered to the shareholders at a hundred and fifteen francs per share.

In connection with the recent transformation of the Pathe Company, it is learnt that the company's film rights department has been sold to a newly established society with a capital of twenty million francs. Pathe however is to receive a part of the profits or a minimum of two million francs. The same arrangement is being carried out with both the British and American branches of Pathe.

France is the country par excellence of museums and historical collections. The last word in this species of artistic achievement is the establishment of a Cinema Museum, which already contains many miles of films, principally educational, dealing with the social and economic life of the country. The museum, which owes its foundation to the generosity and originality of a wealthy Frenchman, is situated in a magnificent park at Boulogne on the Seine, near Paris. It is destined eventually to be handed over to the State and preserved and increased as a national institution.—F. J. TUCKFIELD.

Robert G. Vignola

THE practice of some exhibitors to cut feature pictures to fit their programs regardless of the picture itself is again in the limelight. Robert G. Vignola, one of the screen's foremost directors, and producer of special Vignola Productions for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, protests against the practice and declares that it is working to the ultimate disadvantage of the exhibitor himself.

"It is a pernicious habit," said Director Vignola, "and it is injurious to the whole industry. It does more to alienate the public from the motion picture than any other factor. Recently I had occasion to visit several neighborhood theatres in New York to see productions that I had seen in the Broadway theatres. I am interested in the exhibitors' problems and I wanted to see the difference in presentation, projection, etc. I received the surprise of my life. I found in every case that the exhibitor, evidently desiring to get in as many shows as possible, had slashed the picture to fit his program and had done the job so poorly that much of the value of the picture was destroyed. In other words, the pictures that I saw at these half dozen theatres were not the same pictures I had seen previously at the big downtown houses, regardless of the fact that they bore the same brand name, the same title, and resembled the other. While I have always been aware of the fact that some exhibitors took liberties with productions they showed, I was not aware that the practice was so widespread. It revealed to me an evil that should be eradicated as soon as possible for the good of the screen.

"I have a great deal of admiration for the exhibitor as a showman. But I also believe that every man ought to stick to his trade. I do not recognize the average exhibitor's qualifications to improve upon a director's work. I believe that when a producer releases a picture it is complete in every detail. It is unfortunate that a man who knows little or nothing about the picture itself should come along and be permitted to slash it right and left, cut out its fine points, etc., for the purpose of squeezing it into a short program. Might as well cut a book to make it fit into the bookcase, or slice a toe to make it fit into a shoe.

"What is the result? The public finding out that its particular neighborhood theatre is in the habit of "editing" pictures it shows, finally refuses to patronize that theatre and transfers its allegiance to the exhibitor who shows a picture as it has been turned over to him, regardless of its length. It's the old story of the traveling theatrical company. When the public discovered that the traveling show wasn't the same as the big town show, it refused to patronize it until the evil was remedied. The same condition confronts the exhibitor.

"As a director I suggest to the exhibitor that he play only pictures of suitable length. If a picture is too long for him let him leave it alone. It is unfair to the public, to the producers, and to the exhibitor himself in the long run, to play a big picture and cut it to fit in a small program.

"Quite recently I went to see a neighborhood theatre's presentation of my first Vignola Special for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, 'The World and His Wife,'" said Director Vignola. 'I found that the exhibitor had taken several unusual liberties with the production, and one of them was the eliminating of the footage giving screen credit to my assistant director, Phil Carle, for his work; my cameraman, Al Liguori, for his, and so on.

"It is unfair. A director's staff is very important. A poor staff is a hindrance. A good staff is extremely valuable. I am fortunate in having a very good staff and I want to show my appreciation for their assistance by giving them due public credit. Every director feels as I do about it. That's why screen credit is given. But when an exhibitor for some reason or other cuts out this credit we have no means of telling the general public how much others besides us deserve acknowledgement for the production.

"The footage taken up by screen credits is so small that no exhibitor can claim its elimination is an advantage to him in any way. I know that the exhibitors aren't doing this for any other reason than that they think it speeds up their shows, and I am taking this opportunity of answering them and trying to show them that screen credits are very important and that as a matter of fair play they should not eliminate them."

George D. Baker

"TO my mind the short story is the best foundation for successful pictures."

This is the opinion of George D. Baker, director, who has just been signed by Metro, and who, among other decidedly creditable productions, will soon add "Heliotrope" and "Proxies' to his long list of releases.

"If the short story in point has run in one of the popular magazines —so much the better," states Mr. Baker, "for in this way it has already acquired publicity values that are worth money to the producers. This story should have one big central idea, not too many characters and not too many complications. The director can elaborate and round out, instead of losing sleep over the problem where he can safely cut and still not maim."

"'Heliotrope,' taken from the short story 'Heliotrope Harry,' by Richard Washburn Child, will bear me out. There is an intensity in the action of this well knit short story that is not found any too often in the discursive action of a book. Of course, sometimes it is met with, there. I will say, too, that in my opinion the late scramble after celebrated books and plays is rather on the wane and in many instances has brought about disastrous results. The mere fact that a story is well known does not always mean that it will make a good picture.

"In the adaptation of the novel and the stage play, authors are not always treated fairly. Not often, I should say. If a story needs to be re-written and reconstructed, the place for it is in the fire. Personally, I like to give an author a sympathetic rendering of his story. My personal preference for a story is one with something of an uplift."

Mr. Baker, who directed the long remembered "Revelation," starring Alla Nazimova, and numerous successes recently had indulged himself in a vacation. Instead, however, of spending his time between pictures in recreation, Mr. Baker started on a tour of the principal cities of the country in order to study the likes and dislikes of theatre patrons in each locality in order that the George D. Baker productions shall appeal to the majority of motion picture audiences. Speaking of this Mr. Baker said:

"I find it a decided advantage in my endeavor to produce better features to analyze the preferences of the exhibitors throughout the country. Therefore, while not occupied in the actual direction of my productions, I make a point of studying the picture market as reflected in the opinions of the audiences. The time and money I have spent in thus getting closer to the people who are the final judges of the worth of my features has been more than repaid in the vast fund of valuable audience knowledge that I have acquired. And it has given me an opportunity to know, personally, the exhibitor. Mutual cooperation between the exhibitor and the individual director is, in my estimation, one of the most beneficial assets that a director can have in his work of producing box office successes.

Jerome Storm

"THE type is the thing" says Jerome Storm, now casting his first production starring Lillian Gish for the Frohman Amusement Company, and "acting experience is only secondary consideration," when the former director of Ray pictures is looking for people to characterize different roles, reversing the traditional rule that a player to win success on the screen must first of all be a good actor.

In the fourteen Charles Ray productions which Mr. Storm directed he formulated the rule "the type's the thing," and proved it to general satisfaction. He has spent three weeks scouring New York for the right types of character for the Lillian Gish picture and to date has determined only on the leading man. During this time he has interviewed virtually every player, not working, in New York City, and the number is said to be five thousand.

"Directors have been criticized for insisting upon 'types' rather than actors," says Mr. Storm. "It is claimed that a good actor is not limited to type. Granted that a few players have the virtuosity for assuming various characters, I still contend that the type is the thing—principally.

"There lies the difference between the stage and screen. On the stage an actor does not depend so largely upon his own personality. He may have heavy lines of dissipation and yet play a young Sir Galahad, because there are no close-ups. Distance, lights and make-up give illusion. And he can give an inspirational quality to his voice. On the screen this same man would never get by as an idealist. No matter how well he acted, we wouldn't believe him. We understand too well that a man's deeds and thoughts are the sculptors of his face. Inversely, we know that a man with the imprint of the materialist is not an idealist. There is no way to put over the illusion.

"The camera reveals character more accurately than the eye. No amount of make-up can fool it. I believe that the real character of a man can be determined much better by seeing that man on the screen than by meeting him in real life. In life we constantly are on guard. We surround ourselves with a certain reserve. Before the camera, however, we must be absolutely real or we fail to convince.

"Another point in favor of the argument for type is the screen's demand for extreme youth. We expect it of our heroes and heroines. I believe that soon there will be more plays built about people of middle age. But youth always will predominate because we all like to see it.

"Here again is a problem peculiar to the screen. A woman of thirty-five or forty may appear very youthful on the stage, but on the screen she would not be accepted as a girl of eighteen. There may be exceptions. I can think of only one. To expect great acting ability of a girl eighteen or twenty is unreasonable, therefore I believe in picking a girl who is, or at least looks, the character rather than one whom I think might be able to act it.

"In the picture which I now am casting, I need a number of distinct types. Most of them are young people. I have interviewed at least two thousand players here in New York and to date have accepted but one. The fault I found with most of the players I interviewed was artificiality. I know of young girls who have come from the country and made an instant hit in New York. Directors picked them out and gave them a chance because they looked 'real.' They were individual. A few months later and the same girls were not considered. Why? Because they had put on paint, peroxide and other Broadway counterfeits.

"In searching New York for types, I have not troubled about acting ability. I do not think a great deal is required for the ordinary part in a picture. Naturalness is the prime requisite. And a girl of ordinary intelligence can soon learn the rule of technique if a director is willing to instruct. I happened to notice a stenographer in an agent's office in New York. She was just the type I wanted. I asked her if she would consider it. She seemed surprised, because she had no experience. I tried her out with a score of girls who had experience, and she proved by far the best in the role. That answers the question. I'm also giving an opportunity to a girl whom I saw in a dramatic school. I preferred her to all the pretty pupils. If she proves pliant under direction, she will have commenced her career."

To facilitate in the making of this part of the film which required thousands of extras, fifteen experienced directors were engaged to direct under the supervision of Ingram. The directors were costumed so that they could appear in the picture and continue direction while the camera was in operation. An entire French village was destroyed in a portion of these scenes and this included a most magnificent French castle in which had been built a complete pipe organ of unusually large proportions.

The absence of Bayard Veillers from the Metro studio will not interrupt production activities in the least for all companies have been assigned to future productions. Veillers is spending several weeks in New York searching for new stories suitable for the screen.

INCE

Hobart Bosworth is to appear in Thomas H. Ince's Associated Producers productions according to announcement made this week, this producer having selected the original Carey Wilson story "Pearls and Pain" as ideal for Bosworth in as much as it gives him the role of a rough seaman which is so ably characterized in "The Sea Wolf" and "Behind the Door." Joseph Franklyn Poland has written the continuity, Roland Lee will direct and J. O. Taylor will be in charge of photography. The story deals with pearl smuggling and has an atmosphere of Singapore, Cairo and the South Sea Islands. For the past several months Bosworth has been working in J. Parker Reid productions.

The Governor, one of the largest passenger ships plying between Pacific coast ports was used for a two day cruise by the Ince company filming "The Magic Life" which co-stars House Peters and Florence Vidor. Reports of some very sensational shipwreck scenes made at night come from the studio. John Griffith Ray is directing this picture and other principals are Joseph Gilgore and Margaret Livingston. Miss Bradley King is responsible for the screen adaptation.

A Charles Belmont Davis story has been purchased by Thomas H. Ince and is to serve as a vehicle for Lloyd Hughes and Miss King and Del Andrews are now preparing the continuity. No release title has been selected.

INDIANAPOLIS

Gustav G. Schmidt, president of the newly organized Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana and also head of the city council in Indianapolis, is being talked of for the Republican nomination for mayor in the spring municipal primaries. Mr. Schmidt has gained wide prominence in the city through a number of investigations of conduct of certain officials of the present administration and of the affairs of public utilities. This has taken so much time away from his own business of operating the Crystal and several neighborhood houses that he has not had all the time he desires to devote to the affairs of the theatre owners' organization, he states, but hopes to be able to see a complete gathering of photoplay forces of the state before January when the fight for favorable legislation from the Indiana state legislature begins.

The string of Famous Players productions which the Ohio has been running exclusively for several weeks was broken the week of Oct. 25 with Numa's "The Revenge of Tarzan."

Movies are to break into the winter season at the Murat, the Indianapolis Schubert house, for the first time in the theatre's history the week of Oct. 31, when Fox's "While New York Sleeps" will be shown. Manager Nelson G. Trowbridge turned to the films when he found it impossible to book a suitable legitimate attraction.

T. W. Barhydte, capitalist and former owner of vaudeville houses and lessee of the Grand Opera House in Terre Haute, announces that he has sold his holdings in the Hippodrome of that city and will construct the largest photoplay theatre in Indiana outside Indianapolis in the heart of the business district soon.

Managers and owners of photoplay houses in Vincennes, Ind., are running their own machines as a result of a strike of union operators for a wage scale based on an hourly rather than a weekly scale. The theatres are running as usual.

A number of important deals affecting the ownership of Indiana picture theatres have been consummated recently or are under contemplation. It is announced that J. D. Adams has completed and is now operating the new "Columbia" at Columbia City. The Hornbeck Amusement Co., of Lafayette has purchased the Alhambra and Strand at Knightstown. It is also reported that Clarence Brannigan and Billy Connor, owner and manage, respectively of the Luna-Lite and Marion at Marion, Ind., are about to swing a deal by which they will add the Royal at Newcastle to their string.

H. P. Wolfberg, district manager for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was in Indianapolis last week attending the organization meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana and inspecting the facilities at the new Famous Players Indiana exchange.

J. Russell Powell, son of a former chief of police of Indianapolis, is a member of the supporting cast in "The Soul of Youth" shown at the Alhambra the first half of this week.

Mme. Olga Petrova, who recently left the "movies" to return to the legitimate stage, was headlined at Keith's this week. Petrova is the wife of Dr. John D. Stewart, formerly of Indianapolis, and was the center of several important receptions given by the socially prominent during the week.

The new Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana organization, perfected last week, is alive and growing fast. President Gustav G. Schmidt, of the Crystal, Indianapolis, reports that the members are having substantial success in the campaign to raise the $3,000 financial quota and to line up the exhibitors of the state 100 per cent solid in order to carry on not only the national movement but also to go into a strenuous battle before the next session of the state legislature to obtain laws favoring the industry.

MILWAULKEE

According to rumors current in Milwaukee that city is to have two new motion picture theatres as a direct result of prohibition. The world famous Schlitz Palm Garden which is an immense hippodrome filled with hundreds of tables and chairs and where the stuff that made Milwaukee famous used to flow into immense steins is to be turned into a photoplay palace in the near future. The Palm Garden is well adapted for a motion picture theatre and could be turned into one with very little expense.

Another Milwaukee institution which thrived in the "good old days" is the Gargoyle restaurant, one of the pet projects of the Pabst Brewing Company. This restaurant is at present dark and it is stated upon good authority that Saxe Brothers, Milwaukee, have taken a short option on the site with a view to securing it and neighboring store buildings for another theatre in the heart of Milwaukee's down town district. The Gargoyle restaurant site is adjacent to the Saxe's Miller theatre.

Attendance records in Milwaukee were completely shattered during the showing of "Humoresque" at the Butterfly theatre in that city. Heretofore Milwaukee theatres felt they were doing a banner business when a production lasted for two weeks, but "Humoresque" fooled them all and played to capacity houses for three weeks. At no time during the twenty-one days was there a let-up of business.

OMAHA

According to a recent article appearing in the Omaha Bee, the Hostettler Amusement Company has filed with the state bureau of securities an application for permit to issue and sell $250,000 in common stock, some of which will be sold in Iowa. The application states that the company has purchased and expects to purchase a line of motion-picture theatres. The main theatre, it is said, will be erected in Omaha at the corner of Fifteenth and Douglas streets. The Rialto, Sun and Liberty theatres of the Princess Amusement Company of Lincoln are mentioned as being among those houses already purchased.

Well informed film men in Omaha say that the Hostettler Amusement Company expects to erect a theatre either on the southeast corner of Fifteenth and Douglas streets or in the middle of the block, east.

A recent announcement of the Overland Amusement Company of Kansas City, Mo., states that it will extend its circuit of theatres to Omaha soon. Erection of an Overland Amusement house will be at Fifteenth and Farnam streets, according to Morris Milder, vice president of the company.

Headquarters of the Hostettler Amusement Company will be in Omaha, well informed film men say.

E. C. Rhodin, manager of First National Circuit office in Kansas City, Mo., spent a week in Omaha en route to a hunting camp along the Platte river. He was a guest of C. E. Holah, the "human dynamo" while in Omaha.

A. R. Pierson has accepted a position as assistant manager of the Strand theatre.

C. O. Kingsley, manager of Realart at Omaha, has been instrumental in placing Realart productions in downtown houses in long succession. "Food for Scandal," starring Wanda Hawley; "The Soul of Youth," featuring Louis Sargent; Constance Binney in "39 East," and "In the Heart of a Fool," have been run in the past four weeks at either the Rialto or the Sun theatres.

Edward Holland, exploitation representative for Mayflower, leaves Omaha this week for New York City for orders on special exploitation work in another territory. Mr. Holland's stay in the West has been replete with timely publicity work originated by him.

E. J. MacIvor, manager of Goldwyn at Omaha; E. C. Jensen, mid-West district supervisor for Goldwyn and Harry Lorch, publicity director for Goldwyn in the middle West, made up a trio of popular film men in Omaha last week. Mr. Jensen and Mr. Lorch stopped in Omaha on a tour of inspection of Goldwyn's branch offices.

H. L. Lefholtz, manager of Universal in Omaha, is on a tour of popular movie towns in his district. Last week he visited Lincoln, Grand Island, North Platte and Kearney, Neb., whence he extended his trip into South Dakota territory.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

"The bow-knots of matrimony oftimes loosen and come untied, and twentieth century married life becomes a rollicking, merry-go-round of dizzy varicolored mistakes.

"The pen of the author, dipped in imagination's ink, has written 'Parlor, Bedroom and Bath' to entertain you. The situations are what might be attendant upon your own case should you feel the traces of double harness loosening.

"But, after all, you will find this little burlesque on married life a palatable antidote for the blues, and a humorous swan song in which Cupid plays in discords of snarps and flats and tears, finally merging into a crescendo of harmony and laughs."

Palmer Slocum wrote it.

CANADA

The special feature, "Open Your Eyes," dealing with the so-called "social evil," has had an interesting time of it during its comparatively brief career in the Province of Ontario. The picture was formally approved by the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors and was publicly screened in Windsor, Ontario, last summer. The picture was taken to Toronto, where it was scheduled for showing in the Massey Hall, Toronto, the large concert auditorium of the Ontario Capitol. The run was being extensively advertised when announcement was made that the Provincial authorities had recalled the feature. It was intimated that the approval of the censors had been rescinded by Hon. Mr. Drury, Premier of the Province.

On October 22, announcement was made that the picture had once more been approved for public presentation in Ontario, but this time by Hon. Peter Smith, the Provincial Treasurer, under whose jurisdiction the censor board is conducted. The feature was booked for presentation during the week of October 25 at the Strand theatre, Toronto, this being one of the large downtown houses in Toronto owned by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation. The feature was produced by the United States Public Health Service, it has been announced. Prior to its presentation at the Strand, Toronto, the picture had received the endorsement of a number of prominent Canadian medical authorities and social workers.

The application of the Canadian Educational Films, Limited, of Toronto, for an injunction to restrain the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Toronto, producers of the British-Canadian Pathe Weekly, and the Strand and Regent theatres, Toronto, from distributing or presenting the moving pictures of the big horse race between Man o' War and Sir Barton for the $75,000 purse and the $5,000 gold cup at Kenilworth track, Windsor, on October 12, was refused by Mr. Justice Middleton at Osgoode Hall, Toronto. The Educational Films Corporation had secured the exclusive moving picture rights for the big event and had prevented all camera representatives of other companies from entering the Kenilworth Jockey Club on the day of the race. In spite of precautions pictures of the race were presented at the two Toronto theatres on the day following the event.

Counsel for the defendants, Mr. A. C. McMaster, informed the court that the pictures involved in the case had been taken from lorries on the outside of the jockey club park and he claimed that no trespass had been committed in the taking of the pictures in this manner. He was upheld in this contention, it is said, by the judge, who refused to grant the restraining order. The views consist of pictures of the two horses in training for the race, detectives guarding the horses and several flashes of the race itself, which, apparently, had been taken with the telescopic lens. There were also pictures of the big crowd entering the grounds and of the officials in charge of the race.

Loew's seventh theatre in Canada will open at Ottawa, the Canadian Capital, on Monday, November 8, according to an official announcement. The opening attraction will be D. W. Griffith's "The Love Flower," and it is the intention to have a number of prominent moving picture stars present for the opening ceremonies. The Loew chain now comprises theatres in Toronto, Hamilton, London and Montreal, as well as Ottawa. The Ottawa house has been under construction for the past sixteen months, progress having been very slow on account of scarcity in materials and labor.

The magnificent new Pantages' theatre in Toronto, which is credited with being the largest theatre in Canada, with its 3,700 seats, is to have an organ. A Hope-Jones instrument is being installed.

A new departure in moving picture trade circles of Canada is the establishment of a "Photoplay News Service," with headquarters in the Hermant Building, Toronto. This service syndicates a column of moving picture news to Canadian newspapers each week and an attempt is made to give real news of the trade in addition to announcements regarding pictures and stars. News was released recently regarding the establishment of the Canadian Educational Films, Limited, the extension of the Allen Circuit of theatres, the taking of pictures of the big horse race at Windsor and other items.

The Famous Players Canadian Corporation recently opened a brand new theatre at Oshawa, Ontario, an automobile manufacturing center of 12,000 people. According to General Manager Thomas of the F.-P. Canadian company, the new theatre there is one of the most beautiful and complete houses to be found in a city of this size in the whole of Canada. A veteran exhibitor has been placed in charge of the new Regent theatre in Oshawa in the person of Mr. I. S. Smart of Port Hope. Members of the Boston film colony came to the fore in a worthy movement when they furnished pictures used at the benefit performance for the family of the late James W. Mullaly of Cambridge. Mr. Mullaly, a gate-tender at the North Cambridge railroad crossing, lost his life in an attempt to save that of Mrs. Emma Osgood, an aged woman who had wandered in the path of a speeding express train. The benefit was staged Sunday, October 31, at Gordon's Central Square theatre, Cambridge. James Sayre, the manager of the house, supplied vaudeville.

At the Majestic theatre, D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" is closing a successful run of over a month. The picture was shown to filled houses for this entire period with prices ranging from fifty cents to $1.50. William H. Jenner, who opened the New England agency of the Associated Producers, Inc., at 28 Pedimont street recently, reports that the new films are being well received in the biggest houses in New England. Mr. Jenner was formerly connected with the United Artist Company.

"The results of the pictures received at the Boston office are very encouraging, and managers are loud in their praises," says Mr. Jenner.

The Boston operators are granted an increase of $12 a week, which brings their salaries up to $57.50 a week. The new increase which the union demanded was met by the exhibitors with very little dickering.

Mr. Albert Sottille, of the Pastime Amusement Company, Charleston, S. C., is building a new theatre in Charleston. It is now well on the way to completion, though it has not as yet been named. It will seat twenty-three hundred people, and will have several features that are quite new to southern theatre patrons. One will be a nursery—one of the largest and most complete in the South. Three expert trained nurses will be on duty in this nursery to care for the kiddies and amuse them, while their tired mothers see the pictures.

S. A. Lynch, by his purchase of the Palace, Princess and the old Macon theatres, completed his conquest of Macon, Ga. It is reported, unofficially, that the purchase price in this deal, for the three theatres, was $150,000.

It is estimated, conservatively, that 171,666 people attended the reopening of the Lyric theatre, Richmond, Va., as a picture house, when Thomas Meighan made a personal appearance. Mr. Meighan had a busy day of it—he appeared at three shows, spoke to the Boy Scouts at the Hotel Jefferson, addressed the Kiwanis luncheon and shook hands so much that he finally had to use his left hand to finish up. Although the State Fair was in active competition, there were, by actual count, 2,500 more paid admissions to the Lyric than there was to the fair.

Doris Kenyon and her company of thirteen, with Director Johnson, are at work in Knoxville, Tenn., filming scenes for "Footsteps," which will be Miss Kenyon's next picture.

PROV., R. I.

The Rialto theatre, of which William J. Mahoney is the manager, celebrates its first birthday during the week of October 11. For the occasion Norma Talmadge in "Yes and No," and Bert Lytell's "The Price of Redemption" have been booked. During the year just ended some excellent photoplays have been presented at this theatre, and it may truly be said that the year has been a profitable one.

Samuel Bomes, an architect in this city, is building a new theatre on Broad street, in the residential section. It will be called the Liberty theatre and will be completed about the first of the year.

The Rialto theatre in Providence "blossomed" out on Columbus Day with a new sign, much larger and with a greater decorative scheme than the old one. The former one was removed to the new Rialto Hotel, which will cater to theatrical folk.

The Victory theatre played "Youthful Folly," starring Olive Thomas, during the week of October 11, playing to capacity houses. The press agent made considerable out of the recent unfortunate death of the young woman, and possibly this had something to do with the attendance.

LANSING

Michigan picture fans are watching with considerable interest for the forthcoming release, "Over the Hill," a screen dramatization of Will Carleton's poem of the same name. It is a William Fox Corporation production.

Coincident with the production of the film is the meeting the last of this month at Hillsdale, Michigan, of the Will Carleton Memorial Association. This association plans to place bronze markers at the old home of Will Carleton, near Hudson, Michigan, and at other points made famous by his poems.

A sizable amount has already been secured for a Will Carleton Memorial fund, to assist needy students at Hillsdale College, at Hillsdale, Michigan.

Carleton is one of the few Michigan poets. His "Over the Hills to the Poor House" was his best known—so well known in fact, through two or three generations that the expression "over the hills to the poor house"—is a household vernacular.

Carleton is the first Michigan poet to have one of his compositions taken for adaptation to the screen. He was born at Hudson, Michigan, Oct. 21, 1845.

"Stage and Screen," a new publication for the local theatregoer, had its first appearance during the past week here. It is distributed to patrons of the Gladmer and Colonial theatres here and a mailing list in Lansing and the surrounding territory is filled weekly with it. The publication contains the programs, news and general information about both the Gladmer and Colonial theatres. Harry Guest is editor of "Stage and Screen."

DETROIT

A state convention of sub-franchise First National holders in Michigan has been called for November 4 in Detroit.

Two new residential theatres have just opened, the Holbrook and the Grand Victory. Both are small but well built and prettily decorated houses and each opened to capacity, one with "45 Minutes from Broadway" and the other with "Help Wanted, Male."

The Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association has filed a complaint with the Detroit News over the publication of a story which ascribed an attempted hold-up of an oil station by a small boy to moving pictures. The boy said he was just playing a game, and pictures had nothing to do with it. The News is understood to have so slurred the picture industry in its news and editorial columns that the theatres have retaliated. No theatre gives the News more than a two-inch display advertisement on Sunday and a one-inch daily card. Some of the theatres do not use the News at all.

John H. Kunsky has purchased the Michigan rights on "Madonnas and Men." It will be shown at the Madison the week of October 31 and will be preceded by an advertising campaign.

Detroit now has a new first-class motion picture theatre in the Majestic, which re-opened its doors recently, the principal film attraction being Thomas Meighan in "Civilian Clothes." The house was taken over by Phil Gleichman and was re-decorated and refurnished with new scenery, carpets, electrical fixtures, organ, projection machines and everything else essential to a modern photoplay house.

Mr. Gleichman was in receipt iof several score telegrams from motion picture stars and producers, including Adolph Zukor, Thomas Meighan, Roscoe Arbuckle, Alice Brady, Gloria Swanson, Cecil B. De Mille, and others. Will M. Elliott is house manager and Francis A. Mangan, production manager. A $5,000 advertising campaign preceded the opening, every medium available being employed with the result that the first week saw capacity audiences at every performance.

The Majestic will change its programs every Saturday, which is an innovation so far as Detroit is concerned, the bill running for a week.

Kimmell Brothers have purchased the Royal theatre, at Royal Oak, a suburb of Detroit, from Edward Beardslee. The house seats 600.

W. T. Snowden, formerly publicity man for Robertson Cole in Detroit, has joined the Standard Film exchange forces.

Independent Master Films, Inc., have purchased the state rights exchange, operated by Joe Horwitz.

OKLAHOMA CITY

Okmulgee, Okla., may boast of having the finest amusement palace in the entire southwest, none of the larger cities excepted. Oil was primarily the cause of its erection as the owners, F. A. Young and John A. Feeney, have been so fortunate in their drilling operations in the Okmulgee neighborhood that they felt indebted to build some sort of a monument to the future success of that city. They have spared no expense in building the monument, as it was constructed at a cost of $525,000.

The building, which is called the "Hippodrome Amusement Palace," was formally opened September 30, at which time dancing, high-class vaudeville, and other amusements were enjoyed. The structure has a seating capacity of 2,000 and is provided with a natatorium, size 50x100 feet; a dancing pavilion, 100x 100, and with a roof garden around the entire dome of the dance pavilion. It has also a large café and soft drink parlor, and is equipped with the largest stage in the southwest.

Ed. Turner has sold his interest in the Mutual theatre at Meeker, Okla.; to Messrs. Elmer Walker, J. G. Walker and T. L. Oehmke. At the same time he and his brother bought a picture at Cashion, which will be run by Leonard.

The Queen theatre at Ranger Texas, owned by R. J. Stinnett, was destroyed by fire recently.

A new $5,500 Wurlitzer orchestra piano has been installed at Rogers, Ark., by C. E. Robertson in his Victory theatre. The machine is a duplex U style and is operated by a two horsepower motor which supplies a good volume to the five sets of pipes.

The Palace theatre at Terrell, Texas, is being remodelled throughout and a number of new seats installed.

The Dreamland theatre at Canton, Texas, has been sold by C. L. Beard to C. G. Bailey.

Hot Springs, Ark., is soon to have a theatre for the exclusive use of negroes, and the building when completed will probably be the finest institution of its kind owned and operated by negroes in the country.

The Vapor City Amusement Company has been incorporated with a capital of $100,000 stock to build the theatre. The company is headed by some of the leading negro citizens of the community. B. C. Truman is president; Josephine Claridy, vice president; L. R. Wilson, secretary; Clara Truman Clerk and H. L. King, stock salesman. The location of the proposed theatre is just south of the Pythian bathhouse on Malvern avenue and will cost about $75,000.

NEW ORLEANS

The Harcol Film Company observed New Orleans' annual moving day, October 1, and now has its laboratories and salesrooms occupying the whole of a four-tory building, 330 Camp street. The concern formerly was above the Tudor theatre. It formerly had its laboratories on Broad street, considerable distance from the office and salesrooms. It is distributor in all Southern States for the DeVry projector and has branches in Atlanta and Louisville. A. Harrison, Jr., former newspaper man, is president.

Col. T. C. Campbell, manager of the Tulane (Klaw & Erlanger) and Walter Kattman, Loew's Crescent, attended the opening of Loew's new theatre in Memphis, Tenn.

E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, spent most of the summer touring Europe with President Julian Saenger, has returned to New Orleans. Mr. Richards and Secretary L. M. Ash came to New Orleans from New York by boat.

Wylie Pope, former Goldwyn Exchange manager, will leave New Orleans about the middle of this month to take charge of his new theatre in Americus, Ga., in partnership with Arthur Lucas, of Atlanta, a former district manager for Goldwyn. Mr. Lucas heads a string of about fifteen theatres.

New Orleans theatres are in another charity campaign, but this one they are more willing to assist than some others because it is for the local society. Four minute speakers and special songs are being provided.

SAN FRANCISCO

Leon Levy, former assistant manager of the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, has been promoted to the managership due to the vacancy caused by the acceptance by Harry David, former manager, of the managership of the "State" Theatre in Oakland. Mr. David was with the California and Portola theatres for nine years. Sol Pincus, formerly publicity director at the Imperial is now house manager and treasurer in Mr. Levy's former position.

The stars include William Farnum, Tom Mix, George Walsh, Louise Lovely, Shirley Mason, Buck Jones and William Russell. The bookings include super-specials, 26 Sunshine comedies, 104 editions of Fox News and 52 Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons.

L. Sturm, personal representative of the Fox Entertainments, was here this week and closed the year's contracts with C. E. Stilwell, manager, and Walter Fenney, assistant manager. The super-special "When New York Sleeps," said to be one of the most pretentious pictures ever produced by the company, will appear at an early date. It is an all-star production depicting in three episodes the night life in New York, giving glimpses of suburb life, the gay white way and the tragedy of the East Side.

The Marshall-Neillan Film company of Los Angeles, Cal., was through Spokane recently enroute home from Glacier National park, Montana, where the company has been making pictures. There were nearly 60 in the party, which was in charge of Thomas Held. The company has been making pictures in the park, employing 300 of the Blackfeet Indians there in scenes for "Custer's Last Stand."

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.

Walter M. Merkle, formerly manager of Poli's theatre at Hartford, Ct., for a time with the Selznick Motion Picture Studios, recently assumed the management of the new Capitol theatre in this city, succeeding George H. Dumont. Prior to entering the theatrical field, he was a newspaperman, having served as dramatic critic of the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram and later he was connected with the Boston Traveler. MOTIOGRAPH DE LUXE

It has well been said—THE MOST IMPORTANT UNIT that goes into your theatre is the PROJECTING MACHINE. As the buyer, you have the right to insist that the projector be of uniform high quality. For years, the "MOTIOGRAPH DE LUXE" has set the standard of quality.

THE MOTIOGRAPH is the only projecting machine on the market that does not use a single die casting.

THE MOTIOGRAPH was the first projector to be equipped with motor.

THE MOTIOGRAPH ball bearing perfect take-up has made it possible for the Motiograph to handle three to four thousand feet of film perfectly in one continuous run.

THE MOTIOGRAPH framing device can be removed and replaced in a very few seconds.

THE MOTIOGRAPH has many other pronounced features, and it has well been named.

Theatre Lighting and Projection Featured at Hamilton Palace

IN designing the projection room of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, both Managing Director Meyer and architect Frederick G. Mueller have taken into consideration size, comfort and handiness which all make for the best efficiency of the man behind the shutter. All persons connected with theatrical circles and interested in projection have acclaimed it to be as good, if not better, designed and equipped as any projection room in this vast United States. That may be putting it a little strong; nevertheless, it is a fact. The following will serve as a description of the most important features of both the theatre and projection room.

The size of the projection room itself is most surprising, the length being 24 feet, the depth 13 feet, with a 9-foot ceiling, and is built of hollow tile and concrete with sand finished walls. The projection room equipment consists of two latest model, type S, Simplex Projectors, a Martin rotary converter with a capacity of 7½ k.w., or in other words, giving an amperage range of from 60 to 100 amperes per arc. The converter is also equipped with an emergency A. C. Service that can be brought into use merely by throwing double-throw switches, which have effect on one arc independently of the entire number of lamps. A crescent spot lamp, equipped with six space color wheel, is also part of the equipment.

Films which go to make up the performance of any particular program are kept in an air-tight, fireproof Gilmore safety film cabinet. This film cabinet has been improved in a novel way. The original film cabinet was one of the hanging wall type, but believing that this would be slightly unhandy, the following feature was added: A special stand was secured and the film can fastened to the top of this stand, thereby allowing the projectionist to roll this cabinet to any part of the projection room where it is to his best convenience. It usually stands directly behind and between the two projectors. A work cabinet seven feet long has been especially designed with a set of six drawers large enough to take care of tools, slides, and smaller supplies which might be lost or misplaced in the regular supply room. An automatic motor rewind of a modified design is mounted thereon. The supply room, 6x6, has been built in addition to the projection room proper, for storing oils, additional intermittent movements, large tools, carbons, amp leads, and all additional films which are not part of the particular program of the present showing; also the projectionists' library, which consists of the latest works of authorities on electrical and projectional knowledge.

Fred S. Meyer, Man. Director Palace Theatre, Hamilton, O.

Above the projection room there has been installed an exhaust fan similar to the larger type manufactured by the American Blower Company for auditorium ventilation. To this fan is connected a 12x24-inch metal pipe, which, in turn, connects with the projection room and also the lamps on the projectors, thereby delivering all the heat from the projection arcs and the room itself to the roof of the building. As a result of this feature it is no uncommon thing for the projectionists to be on duty in white shirt, collar and tie. On the front wall of the projection room are a series of switches and dimmers which control diffused lights, footlights and curtain, all of which is used during the showing of the program. Every precaution has been taken to eliminate noise from the auditorium by the use of plate glass in observation and machine port-holes so constructed that they may be opened or closed at the will of the projectionist.

The lighting system of the Palace is unique to the full meaning of the word, in that all lights used during the performance are controlled from projecting position and the remainder from a panel board conveniently close to the machines. In the ceiling of the auditorium is a polyhedral trough, 24 inches wide, faced with diffused glass. Behind the glass of this trough there are three independent circuits of various colored lights, which tint the auditorium with a color harmonizing with that of the film production.

In addition to these, there are three independently controlled footlight circuits, all of which are used during the overtures, and special musical settings. Old Man Palace believes that the screen should not be seen by the public while not in actual use. Therefore, a large plush curtain—the type that opens from the center—covers the screen during overtures and special offerings. As previously mentioned, this curtain is automatically controlled by the projectionist. By a combination of a spot flood lamp with various colors, diffused lighting system and footlights, a most wonderful lighting effect can be produced in conjunction with overtures and special musical settings. During the presentation of several extraordinary productions, a beautiful lighting effect was originated by flooding the different scenes with a tinge in contrast to that of the film. Neither time nor money has been spared by Managing Director Meyer in laying at the finger tips of the men responsible for the screen results of the Palace, any equipment, special or otherwise, that would go to make for the convenience and greater efficiency of delivering superb projection. The men responsible for the unusual presentation of de luxe features are G. W. Betz, Chief Productionist, and W. G. Bisdorf, Assistant Projectionist, both members of Hamilton Local I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. No. 136.

"Before" and "After" Photos Show Changes Made in Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee

Color Scheme Changed Completely, Rest Rooms and Lobbies Altered to Make Them Attractive

THE difference between ordinary management and theatre direction of the highest type is shown by the accompanying photographs of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, before and after it was purchased by Ascher Brothers, Chicago. When the Ascher interests acquired the Merrill theatre it was fairly popular, had a certain clientele, but in the words of a prominent Milwaukee showman, was doing "a nice, quiet business."

When the theatre was taken over by the Aschers, S. L. Rothapfel made a survey of the house and instituted certain changes. As a result of his directions the Merrill theatre stepped into the leading rank of Milwaukee theatres. Starting with the canopied entrance to the theatre, Mr. Rothapfel, with the help of Manager Rouda, effected changes which marked the difference between good and indifferent management. An electric sign directly over the box office was removed and the one sheet card announcements considerably toned down. Hanging baskets of growing flowers and boxes filled with plants added considerably to the entrance of the theatre.

The color scheme of the long lobby was completely changed.

Two of the accompanying photographs show the decided improvement which was made in the women's rest room of the theatre. Ordinary wicker furniture was replaced by a sumptuous black walnut set, even the mirror on the wall being improved upon. Reading lamps, a small fernery and bound magazines added to the charm of the rest room. Another pair of photographs show how the back of the theatre, just inside of the entrance, was handled.

Glaring posters announcing coming productions were removed together with more of the wicker furniture. In their place Director Rothapfel substituted artistic furniture and pleasing tapestries. The bare bowls used for indirect lighting were considerably beautified by the use of artificial vines.

Even in the auditorium of the theatre considerable changes were made. About ten feet in front of the stage grand draperies of painted canvas were suspended across the entire theatre, hiding colored border lighting used in producing various lighting effects. The side panels on the walls were covered with tapestries, while short distances above the heads of the audience boxes of imitation nasturtiums were arranged on either side.

Needless to say, the Merrill theatre as it now stands is one of the most attractive photoplay houses in the middle west, and is a decided credit to the string of Ascher houses. It stands as but one more example of the splendid results which may be attained in the modern motion picture theatre through the expenditure of a little money and thought.

Libman Establishes Frame Company

WILLIAM F. LIBMAN, one of the best known lobby display experts in the country, has just opened his own office in the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, New York city, for the purpose of serving theatres throughout the country with a line of lobby display frames and decorations.

Mr. Libman was formerly associated with the old company of Menger and Ring. Several years ago he was instrumental in establishing the Stanley Frame Company and he has through service rendered to the foremost theatre men in the country, established a numerous following.

Practically every big city in the country and innumerable of the smaller cities have theatres that bear the imprint of Mr. Libman's splendid ability in designing lobby frames. He has designed and supervised the execution of frames for the Marcus Loew theatres, William Fox theatres, Stanley houses in Pennsylvania, Crandall houses in Washington, F. & D. houses in California, the Ruben & Finklestein houses in St. Paul and Minneapolis and the Tony Sudekum Signal Amusement Company houses in the South, and many others in a list far too long for this listing.

W. F. Libman, who has organized his own firm for the manufacture of lobby frames

Because all of this work has had Mr. Libman's personal supervision he feels that by establishing his own office he will be able to render even better service than he has been able to up to this time. Not only is the evidence of his ability seen in the new theatres, but he has also done a great deal of work in the renovation and improvement of older houses. Mr. Libman feels that his new arrangement, giving him absolute independence to work out his own ideas, will enable him to get closer to the needs of many more houses than has been possible heretofore. He has already opened his new headquarters in the Godfrey Building.

Progress on Victory Theatre

FOUNDATIONS are being poured for the new Victory theatre at Evansville, Ind. The project calls for an outlay of $1,000,000 and a stock company, headed by Marcus Sonntag, president of the American Trust and Savings bank here, is behind the building. All stock has been sold and construction work will go forward actively with a day and night shift of men at work.

The new structure is located at Sixth and Main streets, in the heart of the city's business section, and will replace two and three-story buildings which have been razed.

The theatre will extend along the Sixth street side of the building, with the entrance at the corner of Sixth and Main streets. A fancy lobby will be arranged,

And many of you know that of all materials, Terra Cotta has been the one which has most effectively aided architectural success in theatre design.

A Terra Cotta front makes any theatre known to every possible patron, and creates a popularity that means "success" in terms of dollars and cents.

Look at this popular Kansas City motion picture theatre. Terra Cotta gave it its columns, its arched doorways, its modelled details—they're all Terra Cotta, richly colored and permanently beautiful.

The Terra Cotta lettering imparts a note of refinement; the festive ornaments, the symbolic figures, the variety and repetition of ornament—all are made possible by the moderate cost of Terra Cotta.

and the theatre lobby also will be connected with the hotel lobby. The Main street side of the building will be used as storerooms.

The theatre, when completed, will have a seating capacity of 2,500.

The stage of the new theatre will be large enough to accommodate the largest road attractiions, but motion pictures will be specialized upon. It is probable that concert numbers will be arranged for in addition to the regular picture programs.

The indirect lighting system will be used in the theater, but the globes will be arranged in such a manner that the hanging shades can be dropped down so that the house can be brilliantly lighted for legitimate attractions.

The hotel will have its own heating plant and light plant, and will supply both heat and current to the theatre.

The interior of the theatre will be finished in marble and mahogany. There will be rest rooms for the women and a large lounging room. Works of art will decorate the walls, and the stage span will be decorated with fresco work.

Boxes will be arranged along the front of the balcony instead of at the sides of the theatre, due to the fact that motion pictures appear distorted if seen from the side thus detracting from the popularity of the ordinary boxes.

A Description of the Modern Theatre Equipments in Pacific Coast Houses

The First of a Series of Articles by Charles Butte of the Butte Elec. Equipment Company

THE present day demands of the public for high-class places of amusement, particularly in line of the motion picture industry, have placed a demand upon the architect for edifices that are highly monumental. The many conveniences that are now provided and the architectural beauty that must be embodied within the interior has made the designing of structures for theatrical purposes a special art, and the architect, to fulfill all requirements, must have had a wide experience in the designing of buildings for that purpose. The architect must design the structural details and artistic embellishments most pleasing to the eye and must at all times bear in mind that the display of the interior embellishments should be of such design and character that they appear to the public pleasantly in a dim as well as a brilliant light. The interior decorative scheme must meet these conditions, and it requires much study to evolve satisfactory results. The problem would be insignificant with only one condition imposed, but the fact that the auditorium must be dimmed during the operation of the picture and again brilliantly lighted at the termination of the pictures makes this problem solvable only by an expert.

The exterior of the theatre must attract attention and individualize the location of the theatre. The results that must be obtained in this respect are equally as important during the day as at night. The details of the exterior ornamentation must harmonize with the height and width of the building and must be equally as attractive directly in front of the building as from a distance.

The seating arrangement of the balcony and auditorium in relation to the structural details that must be provided for the carrying of the loads, is an item of vital importance to the success of the theatre. Columns that interfere with the vision of the patrons must be avoided. The angle of vision of the seats close to the proscenium arch must be so arranged that the view of the stage or picture is not cut off from these seats. The comfort of the patrons in relation to the space allowed between the seats when properly placed will prevent many aggravating scenes in so far as the passing of the patrons in front of one another. The restfulness of the chairs and foot space allowed will create a feeling of satisfaction to the patrons. The elevation of the seats and the pitch of the auditorium and bancony floors must be properly arranged to allow the patrons to see the stage without interference from the patrons seated in front of them.

The details of ornamentation of the proscenium arch and the relative arrangement of the curtain and screen thereto, if not designed by an architect particularly adapted to the designing of theatre buildings, may result in a serious disappointment upon completion of this portion of the interior. The patrons of the theatre during the period of attendance will at all times look at the proscenium arch. Any harsh designs or clashing decorative scheme that exists will detract from the performance on the stage or on the screen and result in dissatisfied patrons no matter how well the actors may perform or how high the character of the picture may be.

The arrangement of the musicians' pit in relation to the level of the auditorium floor and the stage is becoming a point of vital importance, particularly as the demands made upon motion picture houses for orchestral numbers is increasing. The architectural details surrounding the pit must harmonize with the general scheme of the proscenium arch and make a pleasing appearance to the eye of the patron.

Considerable discussion has taken place in regard to the arrangement of the entrance and entrance lobby leading to the auditorium proper. The consensus of opinion where conditions will permit has been to provide an outer and an inner lobby as long as the size of the property will allow. The arguments advanced in favor of the long lobby, and which have been borne out by actual structures have proven that the long lobby is an advantage in many ways. This arrangement is particularly of value to a theatre displaying motion pictures as the patrons on entering the outer lobby meet an illuminated area of the same intensity as the exterior light, and upon entering the inner lobby meet a graduated illumination that is equal to the auditorium lighting upon entering the auditorium. It can be readily seen that the eye strain of a patron caused by immediately entering the auditorium from the brilliantly lighted street or daylight is avoided by the long lobby. The reverse of the above holds true when the patron leaves the theatre, and the eye strain caused by the leaving of the dim auditorium and entering the brilliant street light is avoided by the graduated illumination of the lobbies provided.

These requirements cannot always be met as the structural conditions prevailing will not provide for a long lobby. Aside from the advantage to the patron in the case of the long lobby, provision is made therein to take care of the waiting patrons and avoid the congregation of the patrons at the entrance door.

The arrangements of the rest rooms on the mezzanine floors are designed to create a homelike surrounding, and in many of the theatres the interior hangings and furniture of this portion of the theatre are exceedingly elaborate.

Novel Display in Plaisance Theatre

THROUGH the combined efforts of Jack Miller, a well known Chicago exhibitor, and the designing department of the Consolidated Portrait and Frame Company, manufacturers of "Bilt-Rite" display cases, the Plaisance theatre now boasts one of the most artistic and practical lobby equipments in the city.

Jack is a firm believer in letting his patrons know what is coming, not only for tomorrow, but for five or six days in advance. To do this in a practical, yet artistic way, was the problem.

The accompanying photos show just what was accomplished. Four pieces compose the whole outfit, which is quite complete in all respects.

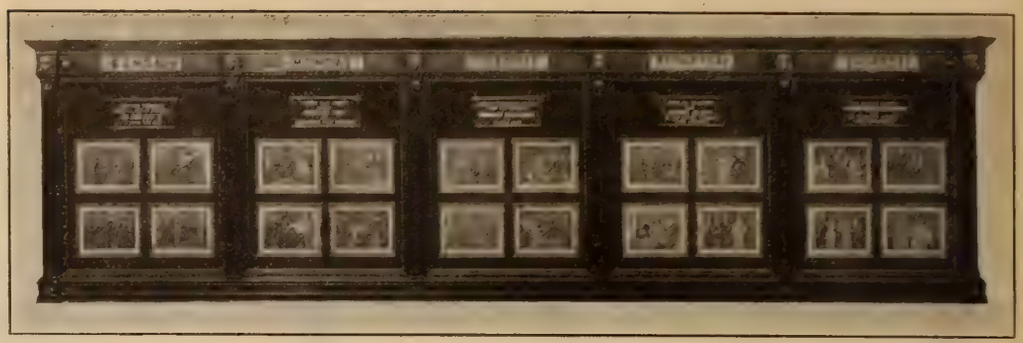
On the north wall of the lobby a massive case is used which is divided into five panels, each panel displaying one day's show. The show for tomorrow always appears in the panel farthest to the left and the following day's shows follow consecutively in the case. Each panel has a removable back board so that as the days go on the whole display is moved from one compartment to the other, which does away with the dressing of the frame every evening. The only paper that has to be fit is the one compartment which has been emptied by stepping each compartment up to the next day.

On the south wall a case similar to this one is used except that instead of displaying photos and announcement bulletins it displays one-sheets. Here too the progressive display system is used, that is the one-sheets are stepped up from one opening to another from day to day.



Display case in north wall

On the street a corner case is used which displays one-sheets and 11x14's. The street side of this case always contains today's show while the lobby side contains tomorrow's show. As the one-sheets pass through the various days in the week in the lobby case inside of the house they eventually end up in this street case on the day that the production is being featured at the theatre. In this manner every picture of merit is advertised for a week straight in the lobby before it finally reaches the theatre, so that by the time the production is featured the desire to see it has been created.

The whole lobby set is finished in hand-rebber mahogany with ornaments laid in dull Roman gold,

Season of New Equipment Catalogs

WITHIN the last few weeks two excellently prepared equipment house catalogs have been received. They were issued by the Lucas Theatre Supply Company of Atlanta, Ga., and by the Exhibitors Supply Company of Chicago.

The Lucas catalog consists of 176 pages of well arranged and printed matter describing the complete line of Hakilu products. It is copiously illustrated and boasts of a beautiful cover embossed in three colors. The commendable feature in connection with this catalog is the fact that it was printed, bound and mailed within the walls of the Lucas establishment.

The Esco catalog consists of 213 pages covering much the same ground as the Lucas publication, since many of the products handled are similar. This book also has had considerable careful attention, as evidenced in each of the printed pages.

Both catalogs have a complete index for ready reference.

Study Lessons for the Projectionist
Armature Construction

The motor armature consists of a series of coils of wire wound on an iron core such that a constant torque is maintained between the field poles and the poles set up by the flow of current in the armature windings.

In the discussion of the dynamo or generator it was shown how a single coil of wire set up an unsteady current, so that in order to obtain a steady flow of current it is necessary to have an armature made up of a number of coils which continually cut the magnetic field. This same fact is true in the case of a motor.

The armature of a direct current machine is made up of the following parts:

The core,
The winding, and
The commutator.

The core of the armature is a support for the windings and also forms a path for the magnetic flux from the pole faces.

The core is made up of stampings of wrought iron in the form of discs. The discs are then rigidly fastened to the shaft by means of a key, since it is through these disc stampings that the torque produced by the windings is transmitted to the armature shaft and thus connected to the desired work to be performed.

In order to cut down the eddy current losses in the armature it is necessary that the discs be insulated from one another, and this is accomplished by means of a coat of insulation varnish, which altho forming a very small space between the discs is sufficient to obstruct the path of the eddy currents.

Armatures are made up in two different types, namely: smooth core and slotted core.

In the smooth type of core the armature windings are placed on the surface of the core, while in the slotted type they are placed in slots in the outer surface of the core, and thus reduce the length of air gap in the magnetic circuit and the windings are also protected from injury.

For small types of motors the stampings are made from a solid piece of metal, but for large machines the stampings are made up in parts and held in place by means of a spider. In order to obtain the best design the tooth width is practically equal to the width of slot, several shapes of tooth are used depending on the design of the machine.

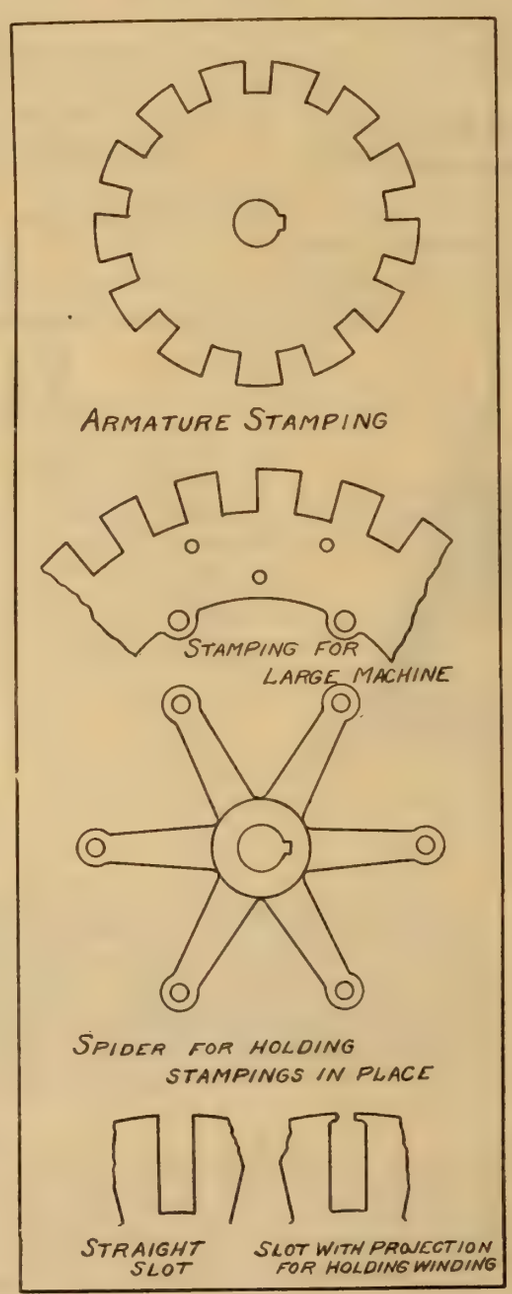
The Armature Winding

There are two general types of windings used on armatures, which are the ring and drum types.

In the ring windings the wires are wound on a ring-shaped core which necessitates that the conductor pass through the interior of the core, and since this position of the conductor is not effective in performing work there is a large amount of wire which is not in actual use. Also due to the difficulty in the winding for such types of armatures this winding has been replaced by the drum winding.

The drum winding in the case of smooth cores is placed entirely on the surface of the armature, and for slotted armatures is placed in slots so spaced that the current flowing in both branches of the loop will be effective. The proper spacing of the loop is dependent upon the design of the machine and the numbr of field poles, one end of the loop is connected to a commutator bar the conductor then passing through the proper slots and the other end is connected to the adjacent segment.

When the armature has been wound the windings are held firmly in place by means of binding wires in order that they may not become loosened from the slot.



ARMATURE STAMPING
STAMPING FOR LARGE MACHINE
SPIDER FOR HOLDING STAMPINGS IN PLACE STRAIGHT SLOT
SLOT WITH PROJECTION FOR HOLDING WINDING

The Commutator

As was explained in the case of the dynamo, the object of the commutator is to produce a steady flow of current. In the case of the motor the commutator so directs the current that the proper polarity will be produced in order that a torque may be set up between the armature windings and he field coils.

The commutator is made up of a series of hard copper segments placed around an iron hub. These segments are L shaped in order that connection may be made between the winding and the extending lug. The segments are insulated from one another by strips of mica which are cut slightly below the surface so that they will not interfere with the brush contact and cause sparking.

The number of commutator segments depends on the type of winding and the number of slots in the armature core. In the construction of a commutator the segments are placed in position and firmly clamped. The inside is then bored for the hub and the notches cut for the locking nuts. The hub and locking nuts must be carefully insulated by means of mica tube and washers.

The bars are then held by the locking nuts and the outer surface turned true and the mica insulation between the segments cut below the surface. The commutator is then mounted and rigidly fastened to the shaft and core.

In order to prevent over-heating of the armature it is necesary to provide for ventilating ducts which will allow a current of air to circulate due to the rotation of the armature. This is provided for by means of spacers placed at intervals and in large machines by a passage thru the center of the armature.

Newman Reports on Business

The Lyric theatre of Lima, Ohio, is using velour-covered ropes, brass frames and railings made by the Newman Mfg. Co., of Cincinnati. Kick plates, also guards and pulls for doors have been contracted for.

To-day, Sept. 9th, Messrs. Midelburg and Hyman of Logan, W. Va., visited us, and found it advisable to order artistic metal poster frames instead of the less durable wooden frames they had in mind. They also contracted for a brass ticket-rail.

The Wilson theatre, Tyrone, Pa., figures that their lobby will be improved 100 per cent after the Brass Unit-Frames ordered have been installed.

Brass railings made by the Newman Mfg. Co. will be installed very shortly by the Windsor theatre, Canton, Ohio, and by Mr. Harvey N. Johnson of the Twin City Amusement Co., Norfolk, Va.

These items are to be used for the improvement of M. & H. theatres at Beckley, W. Va., and Hazard, Ky.

Projection Room of Toledo Pantheon Contains Only High Grade Equipment

Projectionists in Charge of Simplexes Keep Machines in First Class Order

AMONG Toledo's well-known theatres, is the Pantheon, located at 372 St. Clair street, in this well-known city of the "Buckeye" State. The Pantheon, of which Mr. J. Kumler is manager, is but 6 months old and has already been placed in the category of really successful houses. The Pantheon is one of five well-known theatres operated by the one theatrical enterprise, and besides its beauty of construction and luxurious appointments, it is noted for its perfect projection and high class features.

This is, no doubt, due to the fact that the projection room which is under the supervision of two unusually high-class projectionists, is at all times kept up to its highest efficiency as regards equipment and maintenance.

This room which is approximately 30 feet long and 12 feet deep, is well ventilated and extremely roomy, one of the unusual features about it being the large, full-sized windows that are cut into the back wall and that face directly onto the street, providing not only a constant supply of fresh air, but sufficient day light as well, thus doing away entirely with the customary and obnoxious system of compelling the projectionist to work either in the semi-gloom or dimly lighted booth interior which so many otherwise up-to-date projection rooms call for.

A fully equipped panel board controlling all electrical circuits in the theatre is another feature, conspicuous because of its perfect construction and comprehensive design. Included in the panel board equipment is an unusually large system of "dinner controls," these being operated by the house electrician, who, for five minutes preceding each performance, creates most unusual lighting effects upon the stage setting surrounding the picture screen.

Two type "S" Motor driven Simplexes take care of the projection at the Pantheon and their glistening appearance together with the manner of their wiring and installation, speak volumes for the type of men who have charge of the projection here. A spot light, likewise well-kept, as well as an electrically controlled rewinder, completes the projection room equipment.

Outside of the projection room proper, is the rheostat room in which are located the rheostats controlling the projection equipment, these being installed upon specially designed fasteners located high up on the walls of the room. At the other end of the projection room is located the work room, which is also lighted by day light made possible through the use of full-sized windows leading directly to the open air. In this room is contained a work bench with all necessary tools and appliances for effecting any mechanical or electrical repairs to any of the projection room equipment.

Most of the credit for the spick-and-span appearance of this remarkable projection room is due to the projectionists, P. W. Woodrow and L. A. Moorehead, respectively. Mr. Woodrow, who has long been active in Union affairs is the present Secretary of the Local Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union of Toledo, while Mr. Moorehead is likewise an active member of the Union in question. Both of these men represent the highest type of progressive Union projectionists, who feel the responsibility attending the up-keep of the important projection room equipment under their charge, and are indeed a credit to the craft of which they are members.

Novel Cement Holder Invented

Novel film cement holder and spreader has been invented by Harry Couillard, operator at the College theatre, Los Angeles. The invention consists of an ordinary small oil can with a spreading attachment or device which permits the cement to flow from the spout in a ribbon about a quarter of an inch in width. It is necessary to press the sides of the can and rub the end of the spreader across the portion of film which is to be cemented.

Gets Good Projection at 235 Feet

The Kansas City Times, Saturday, October 2, 1920, carries the following news item: "More than four thousand shriners and members of shriners' families saw last night in the Convention Hall motion picture reproductions of scenes taken when the Kansas City Delegation of 265 were en route to and from Portland where the Mystic Shrine Imperial session was held last June; 6,000 feet of film were shown. The pictures which showed the delegation marching in Kansas City, then entraining here and at various other points along the road, were projected 235 ft. upon a screen 35 x 40 ft." The notice then goes on to give details of a general nature, but we are ablt to furnish a few facts concerning this installation which was supplied by T. F. Cole, Manager of the Kansas City Machine & Supply Co., Kansas City, Mo., distributors of Power's Projectors in that section.

"The distance and the size of the picture are approximately correct. For this exhibit we used one regular Power Rheostat for each machine, using two 6B machines. It was necessary to procure switches that would carry approximately 200 amperes of current. We used 9½ condensers. Some of the photography was very dark but we managed to secure excellent projection under the circumstances. It was necessary to trim the arc after every reel, as we used 1" carbons and 9/16 holdark below. Nine reels were run without a break or a stop. This projection which was viewed by a number of exhibitors secured considerable favorable comment for Power's and was handled by J. L. Herring who has been on our staff for a long time."

Film Waxer Making Many Friends

According to reports from R. J. Lacey, president of the Magic Film Waxer Company, the film cleaning machine of that name is finding many new customers amongst theatre owners and projectionists.

The Magic Cleaner, as shown in the illustration, consists of a plate on which are uprights supporting two sticks of wax and an idler. To use the device the plate is clamped on the rewind table between and in line with the rewind reels. The film is passed from the full reel down under the idler up over one set of waxers and down under the next and then to the empty reel The feed of the wax is adjusted so that only the perforations are touched.

It is a simple device and should give satisfaction.

New Equipment for Coliseum Theatre

Installation of the two new Powers 6B machines with Peerless Arc Controls and Weaver Automatic Dousers has been completed at the new Coliseum theatre, ninth and Clement Streets, San Francisco, by the Theatre Equipment Supply Co. This company has also received contract for reequipment of the entire T & D circuit, according to reports, with the new roller pin bearing Powers Cameragraphs. for which it is the western distributor. The equipment in each case includes Peerless arc controls.

In addition to the above, the same supply house will furnish a Westinghouse generator set for the new Kinema theatre at Fresno.

Stereoscopic Motion Pictures*

By C. Francis Jenkins

A somewhat newer method consists in projecting the stereoscopically made pictures through a vertical grating hanging a few inches in front of the screen. This grating was made of threads having, as near as could be obtained, a uniform diameter, from top to bottom, and so spaced that the distance between adjacent threads was the same as the diameter of the thread. The right eye picture frames are all on one film and the left eye frames all on another film, the right eye film projected from a machine placed some distance to the right of an imaginary line drawn from the center of and perpendicular to the surface of the screen, and the left eye film from a machine located on the left side of this line. The two machines superimpose their pictures and run synchronously. The grating has the effect of splitting up the projected picture from, say, the right machine into thin vertical slices or segments with a shadow (of the thread) lying between each adjacent picture segment. The left eye picture projected by the other machine is also cut up into vertical slices, each of which falls on the screen in the shadow of the string in the light of the right projector. The result is a composite picture consisting of alternate right eye and left eye vertical picture-segments, the segments entirely imperceptible to the observer. One may, therefore, view this screen picture from such an angular location that the right eye sees only the right eye vertical segment and the left eye only the left eye vertical segments, the picture as a whole in stereoscopic relief, and without any artificial aid, i. e., any device over the eyes. It is obvious that one may view the picture stereoscopically only from certain zones, the angle of the eyes from these zones being approximately the angle of projection of the two machines. So, again, we fall short of practical attainment.

But certain kinds of pictures can be obtained which appear stereoscopic to the unaided eyes, in fact appear so viewed with but a single eye. These are obtained by carrying the camera on a train, boat, automobile, or hand truck, the lens pointing at more or less of an angle to the line of travel of the camera-supporting vehicle. There is no doubt but that where appropriate this method puts interest in a picture which might otherwise be dull. In spite of the fact that pictures of this kind base lines of 25, 50 and 100 feet when viewed in a stereoscope, and what practical application can possibly be made of it. have been made for many years past, patissued thereon recently, which would seem to indicate that patent examiners don't go to the "movies."

A method devised some five years ago consisted in moving the background, and depth is fairly simulated, but roundness of nearby objects is purely mental delusion. We are prone to imagine solidity, shape, and other characteristics because, when we recognize the object, we recollect its form and unconsciously clothe it with its true mass contour. This is not true stereoscopy, and is valueless when applied to strange objects or scenes.

In the last two schemes mentioned just a plain ordinary motion-picture camera is sufficient, though it may be useful to some of you when you take up the problem to learn how the camera was constructed to secure right and left pictures of the same object in single line sequence on a single standard negative film. The most satisfactory form employed consisted of a standard type camera having two right-angle prisms, one mounted (on the front of the box) on each side of the lens and so placed as to reflect across the camera front any view of object in front of the camera. Just in front of the lens and in axial line therewith, two smaller prisms were mounted, to reciprocate vertically, the travel being the thickness of one of the prisms. The prisms were crossed, and the reciprocating crank (run at half shutter speed) so timed that the prisms were alternately brought into position before the lens in time with the opening and closing of the shutter. Obviously such an arrangement reflects into the lens a view from first the right prism and then the left prism, so that the negative, when developed, carries alternately right and left eye frames.

The exact distance of the centres of the outside (stationary) prisms is a matter of no particular moment, though 3 inches is convenient and perhaps the best distance. To place them close together exaggerates the size of objects; placing them farther apart makes objects appear smaller, for the base line of the angle photographed is, in the mind when we look at the resultant picture, assumed to be the base line of the angle of vision, that is, the width between the pupils of the eyes.

Doubtless from this thought your mind has run ahead of me questioning, in anticipation, the effect of pictures made from

This question I will answer for you if I find sufficiently valuable pictures I am making for cameras located at the wing tips of a flying machine, and simultaneously exposed. It seems probable that these will be useful in conjunction with map-making cameras because it will give a relative idea of the heights, of known and unknown objects, and if further work proves the scheme has merit I shall be glad to lay the matter before you in detail, perhaps at our next meeting.

The End

Harmer Leaves Soon for Europe

J. Justice Harmer, president of the Sun-Light Arc Corporation, is leaving for England and the continent October 23. It is Mr. Harmer's intention to visit every producing center of importance in western and central Europe, studying lighting methods and problems. Incidentally, he hopes to be of assistance to any producer abroad who may be struggling with knotty questions of light.

Until Mr. Harmer discovered the possibilities of the Sun-Light Arc and adapted it to studio use, he was engaged in color printing. In that field he made himself one of the most successful and best known masters of color press-work and his achievements became known in Europe.

Since identifying himself with the motion picture field, Mr. Harmer has become recognized as an authority on the matter of lighting. He has personally installed many of his lights in American studios and has given demonstrations of his theories of lighting which have not only surprised but satisfied directors and cameramen alike as to their soundness.

Further Development of Dye Process

By F. E. Ives

In my original communication of this process, I recommended a bleach made with equal parts of potassium ferricyanide and chromic acid, and stated that if made of sufficient strength a transparent image was produced. When a merely "dye-tone" image was wanted, a more dilute bleaching solution was indicated, or clearing and reducing in extremely dilute soda bicarbonate solution. In a second communication, I stated that a much more dilute bleaching solution would yield transparent images if made with two parts of chromic acid to one part of potassium ferricyanide.

The use of weaker solutions has three obvious advantages: (1) lower cost, (2) shorter washing to clear, (3) elimination of the soda bicarbonate clearing bath.

A further improvement consists in still further reducing the strength of the bleaching solution, so that even with the larger proportion of chromic acid the image is translucent instead of transparent, dyeing to any desired color with mixed dye baths for dye-tone effects and

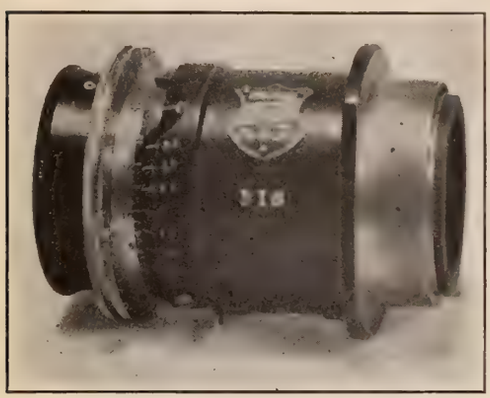
Micro-Vernier Focusing Lens Plans

By J. H. McNabe.

CONSIDERABLE interest is being centered by motion picture cameramen and photographers in a recent invention of Mr. A. S. Howell of the Bell & Howell Company, who has applied for a patent covering an improved focusing device for camera lenses.

This new focusing mount is a combination of the micrometer and vernier type, and is intended, primarily, for use with lenses of motion picture cameras—although not limited to this alone, as the principle is readily applicable to lenses used in "still" photography.



New Micro-Vernier Focussing Lens

It is a well-known fact that the adjustment of the iris diaphragm has an effect upon the focus of the lens; that is, the focal adjustment of the lens along its axis, which is correct when the iris diaphragm is wide open, is not correct when the iris diaphragm is partially closed for the focusing of the lens upon an object at a given distance from the camera; and that, as the iris diaphragm is closed the distance between the lens and the ground glass, or film, should be increased to effect an accurate or critical focus in the several diaphragm stops.

The main feature of the new invention resides in the provisions of means whereby the adjustment of the focus of the lens—both with relation to the distance between objects to be focused and the camera, and with relation to the adjustment of the iris diaphragm—may be predetermined to permit such focal adjustment of the lens accurately and quickly.

It will be observed from the accompanying photograph that the diaphragm stops are engraved upon the outer lens holder carrier in fixed relation to the diaphragm stops engraved upon the lens holder, from which the readings are obtained when manipulating the diaphragm operating sleeve.

tion or a critical focus. By merely setting a resilient expansion ring with indexed stops corresponding to the diaphragm stops on the lens holder there ensues an automatic correction of the focusing to a point of exactness which has previously been unattainable due to the fact that lenses have always been scaled on a common diaphragm stop.

An added feature of the lens mount which is proving highly satisfactory is the markings or graduations of the diaphragm stops and footage scale which are now so engraved as to be observable from the rear of the camera, thus greatly facilitating adjustment when it becomes necessary during the course of operation.

derneath (which of course is looked at first by the reader); when that moment arrives in the regular action, the reader unconsciously says, "There's the part—the exciting moment has arrived." Then that would be another way of making a Prologue. But on the other hand, the whole story might be one of some distinct mood. Say dire tragedy, utter forlornness, bitter disappointment. Then the Prologue might establish that Mood—with a scenic drop that concentrated the effect of despair, with music that accentuated it, in the orchestra, or the organ, or the singing or dancing novelty. In the colors—gray and black—with a living figure lying prone upon the stage, in a fit of weeping and sobbing, or in utter melancholy—or just a close-up of a sorrowing distraught face, moving about, always in that attitude. There is another way of introducing the picture with a Prologue. Or, in the same picture, the showman might feel that the Influence of some Character stands out predominant. Thus the heroine might be under the care of a person who appears but a moment, or under the seeming protection of God or Fate. Then the showman, being of a picturesque turn of mind, might create a Prologue which attempted to bring that Great Influence to the attention of the audience.

So I might go on without end, over a single feature picture. The way we might summarize the Prologue opportunities is as follows:

The Prologue can be used to create the feeling of the locale—the climate, the place, the time, the historical epoch, the geographical distance; for instance, northern lands, tropical lands, the nationalistic feeling—French, Italian, Swiss, African; aboriginal or ancient moods, a diagramatic effect showing how far the place is from the scene of the theatre; the costume effect of the period; the historical characters of the decade, etc.

It can be used to bring forward the dramatic climax of the play—either in the freak of nature or man or fate—thus, earthquakes, floods, etc.; the change of sentiment, the birth of a mob spirit, etc.

It can be used to establish the dominant mood of the picture—tragic, comic, farcical anger, hatred, revenge, forgiveness, misunderstanding, quaintness. You can make the audience laugh at once and expect to laugh; or you can put long faces on them at once and keep them so even during the beginning of the play where the story is getting under way. It can be used to lift out some character if the heroine is of a particular mould, personality, direction of mind or action, or is under some particular ban or hardship.

Next week the Music Editor will outline some of the big things which are happening in Music, which are worthy of the exhibitor's attention. The article is called "Musical Movements at Work."

The Coming "Movie" Music Conference

By C. M. Tremaine

Director of National Musical Advance Bureau

(Editor's Note—Mr. Tremaine is one of the most useful men in America—being the driving force of musical interest in hundreds of communities.)

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS is to be congratulated upon two things—inaugurating a special section in its magazine devoted to music and placing it under the direction of Charles D. Isaacson.

The importance of music to the "movies" has been recognized by the progressive manager for a number of years. Now, however, it is being forced on the attention of those whose custom it is to wait for the other fellows to do the experimenting. There are naturally some in every industry who trail all along the line. These people have been slow in introducing music, slow in improving it, slow in extending it. The demonstrated facts are now proving even to the skeptical the value of music as a money-making asset.

I would like to pay tribute to Charles D. Isaacson for his success in spreading music among the general public. That, however, can come at another time. The subject of this article is the "Motion Picture Conference." The time is ripe for such a gathering for many reasons, one very adequate reason being the phenomenal increase in the music loving audience.

It is obvious that the manager who can attract those who come for the music as well as those who come for the picture will have a larger clientele than if he caters to but one of these groups. Then there is a large public which as yet is unconscious of the music appeal. Although these people would not voluntarily go to hear music their enjoyment is increased by good music and they gravitate toward those houses which provide it in combination with the picture. Evidence abounds everywhere that we are coming into a music era and that the association of music with motion picture performances is inevitable.

Shakespeare divided the life of the individual into what he called the "seven ages of man," giving in a few sentences a clearly defined picture commencing with his entrance into the world and extending to his final exit. No one has attempted an equally graphic and condensed portrayal of the story of the human race as a whole. We can piece together but part of the picture—that which has already transpired. History, which haltingly tells us of many ages of man, takes us from the stone age through the age of Greek philosophy, culture and art, Roman militarism, feudalism and medieval decadence, the age of chivalry and religious fanaticism down to the ages of more material progress known as the mechanical age, electrical age, etc. We are on the threshold of another distinctive age—which will witness the marvelous development and utilization of aeronautics.

There are still other forces which are certain to serve us. In passing from the despotism of autocracy to the full enthronement of democracy, mankind as a whole has developed latent powers which heretofore have not been attributed to the masses. In educating each individual unit, civilization as a whole has moved forward and the new forces have been uncovered one by one.

Life has become more complex as the power, the desires and the efficiency of the individual have grown. A harmonizing influence is needed both to relieve the tension and to so act on the physical and nervous organism as to satisfy the natural craving for a counter influence, created by the conditions, and to provide a pleasurable relaxation. It has been abundantly proved that music has supplied and is still supplying this need. It therefore would be no stretch of imagination to prophesy that we now may be entering upon a music age and that music will be universally recognized as a necessity in our daily lives as never before.

It behooves the motion picture manager to take cognizance of the evidence before him and adjust his plans so as to profit thereby. How he can profit most and what his plans will be are questions to be considered, and it is for this reason that the coming music conference is being called. Someone had to take the initiative and as it is the province of a trade journal to lead the way in its particular field, so it was to be expected that a motion picture magazine should issue the call.

Both the industry and the public are to be felicitated upon Mr. Isaacson's constructive aggressiveness. The leading spirits in the screen world will undoubtedly put their full influence back of the movement and make it the success the conditions unquestionably warrant.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEWS

My Dear Mr. Isaacson:

The success at the Brooklyn Strand of the experiment in interpretative music as translated with the aid of the screen, has impressed upon me that there is much yet to be accomplished before music in the motion picture field reaches the top peak of perfection.

It falls upon such men as yourself to point the way for such triumphs as "Music in Motion" and for that reason I am writing you to encourage you not to falter in pushing to a consummation the contemplated conference relative to improved music for motion pictures.

The lasting success of the motion picture depends upon the utmost development of it, and the upbuilding of the music by-product is one of the promising factors of potent importance in that development.

You realize that I stand firm for anything that will make the art of motion picture as lasting as the hills. There is no doubt that music—brought home to the maximum in the most telling way—will serve as the agency to that end.

From a Leading Artist Agency

It is not often that one reads such a concise, intelligent, interesting article on any subject as Mr. Johnston has written in your issue of October 9. As far as I can see, there is not a wasted word in it.

Of course, it goes without saying, that I agree with everything he has written. As a matter of fact, it might interest you to know that more than a year or a year and a half ago, the scheme that you are working on now, I tried to start with Mr. Riesenfeld at that time. He told us then he did not think the time was ripe, and I know you will not take it amiss when I say I think we were better equipped to have a bureau to supply this demand under our control than anybody else in the business, and that was my original idea with Mr. Riesenfeld. I have also written him lately on the subject, but I rather imagine from his answer that he is apparently awaiting development from your work.

If there is anything in the world that we can do to help the scheme along, let us know.

From 2,000,000 Club Women

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Your idea for a music conference of Motion Picture people is a very good one and I am more than casually interested. One of my plans is to have a standardized list of selections similar to that adopted by the clubs for Music Memory Contests, and ask the clubs to endorse that and encourage the use of these selections in their movie houses.

Massachusetts has already experimented with such a list and I expect to have a report of their work soon.

With best wishes for the success of your plans,

Sincerely,
ANNE F. OBERNDORFER,
Chairman Music Committee,

Biggest Event of the

From a Broad-Minded Producer

I have read the many endorsements by noted music authorities of the proposed conference, and it surely makes one feel that he is not fighting alone. As for the one dissenter, John H. Kinsky, I might mention what you already know, viz: that the Kinsky houses are using more music and concert numbers now than they ever did. Some weeks ago, while I was out in Detroit, they had a New York tenor who came from the Capitol and was making as much of a sensation as the picture. Whatever they may think about music personally, the fact is they realize that a few musical numbers will increase their box office receipts.

I repeat that your proposed conference comes in the nick of time. This country was never as music-mad in its entire history as it is now. Witness the appearance of so many opera companies and community choruses in every town and hamlet. If exhibitors will insist on being blind to the demands of the public, so much the worse for them. When the use of organs and orchestras was first thought of, the majority of exhibitors threw up their hands in holy terror at the expense involved. Now you will scarcely find a fair sized theatre without its organ or orchestra. The investment in music has paid the exhibitor in the past and it will pay more so in the future. We all know of several first run houses whose reputation has been earned and maintained on the strength of the music they offer, and not particularly on any other feature.

The need of more music is inevitable. A theatre cannot supply its patrons with a full two or three hours of pictures. For one thing, there are not enough pictures on hand, and for another, there must be variety. The picture-music combination is the natural transition from the vaudeville period. The past few years has seen the building of a phenomenal number of new first run houses for the presentation of motion pictures, and not for vaudeville. This fact is a symbol of the times, and should convince the most obstinate exhibitor that this is an age of music.

Finally, the development of public taste makes the necessity for better music all the more pressing. There has been a great boom in the music field. The popularity of concerts is universal. If the exhibitor will not satisfy the public appetite, another agency will. That is why I am with you in this musical conference and venture the prophecy that it will be the germ of many others in the future.

With heartiest wishes for your continued service, I am,

J. I. SCHNITZER,
Equality Pictures Corporation,
Aeolian Hall, N. Y. City.

Frederick J. Ireland, who has been vice-president, production manager and a member of the board of directors of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation since its organization, has resigned all of these offices and has entirely severed his connection with the corporation, according to a statement made by him just previous to his departure from Chicago for the West Coast on October 16th.

Mr. Ireland, it is understood, has received several flattering offers to direct pictures for some of the largest producing companies, but will go into production for himself after his arrival at Los Angeles. He has been an active factor in the industry as a producer for several years and was widely known as the head of the Emerald Film Company of Chicago, which made Billy West, Alice Howell and other pictures previous to the merger of that company with Reelcraft.

Mr. Ireland also is widely known to showmen throughout the country as before becoming interested in motion pictures, he was a prominent actor and had been featured in plays presented throughout the United States, Australia and the British Isles.

Six Productions Completed for Reelcraft

Six more productions have been completed for the exclusive short subject program of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation and delivered to the general office in New York.

For the single reel comedy series in which Billy Franey is featured Director Thomas LaRose has completed three more pictures, titled "The Referee," "In and Out" and "The Dummy." William L. Roubert and Al Young, who are producing the "Romances of Youth," featuring Matty Roubert, have completed their schedules of releases up to and including January 1, with the following three pictures, "A Bold Bad Pirate," "Summer Days" and "Sunshine."

Canyon Reports A Big Sale

Enterprise Distributing Corp. Buys Series for Southern States

ONE of the most outstanding transactions of the past week was the sale of the entire series of six western five-reel productions to the Enterprise Distributing Corporation by the Canyon Pictures Corporation for the territory embracing Georgia, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Alabama, and Florida.

The pictures included in this transaction include "The Galloping Devil", and five other productions which are to follow.

There has been much lively bidding in this important Southern territory for the rights of the series, states Canvon, and the Enterprise Distributing Corporation sent E. A. Fair as their personal representative to New York to see the initial releases. So impressed was Mr. Fair, after viewing the pictures, that contracts were signed the same day that he arrived, and within a few hours he was on his way home again.

Arrangements are being made in the Enterprise Distributing Corporation offices in Atlanta for the immediate exploitation of "The Galloping Devil." Franklyn Farnum has a large following throughout the country and the advent of the series in the Southern territory is looked upon as an event of great interest.

Both Jack Weinber and Joseph Goldstein of the Canyon Pictures Corp., expressed themselves as delighted with the great success which the Franklyn Farnum series is enjoying as a state rights offering. With the southeastern section of the country gone, there remains but a few important territories yet unsold.

A scene from "The Invisible Ray," the Jan's Pictures Corp., 15 episode serial

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation reports the closing of a large contract with a Japanese film renter, for seventy-five American productions for physical distribution throughout Japan. This is said to be one of the largest sales ever made for that country.

Under the terms of the agreement, the buyer takes over the territorial distributing rights to a series of forty World Pictures, twenty Black Diamond comedies, nine special productions, six Paralta Pictures and five World Comedies.

Louisville Exchange Has Varied Program

The Big Feature Rights Corporation, Inc., of Louisville, Ky., one of the largest independent exchanges in that district, now has an attractive list of State Right pictures to offer the Kentucky and Tennessee exhibitor. Col. Levy is president of the company and Lee Goldberg, secretary and treasurer.

Among their pictures are "Hush" and the four following Clara Kimball Young pictures "The Stranger," "Sins of the World," "Neptune's Bride," "That Something," "The Sport of Kings," "The Greater Sinner," "The Golden Trail," "The Window Opposite," "Conquered Hearts," "Human Clay," "Daughter of Hate," "Who's to Blame?", "Wanda's Affair," "Sins of Ambition," "Babbling Tongues," "Married in Name Only," "Fool's Gold." "A Desert Scorpion," "Wolves of the Street," "The Chamber Mystery," "Husbands and Wives," "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives," "The Still Alarm," three Rex Ray Westerns, and "The Son of Tarzan" serial.

For Kentucky only they offer eight Neal Hart Westerns, four Shorty Hamilton pictures, and "Frivolous Wives." For Tennessee only they have "The Jungle Princess," "The Tiger Band," and "The Lost City."

Staff of Next Hemmer Production Chosen

Edward Hemmer has engaged Charles Osborn Seessel, who has gained distinction in the picture world as art director, to design the scenic and art effects for the next Hemmer production. Others, whom Mr. Hemmer has signed to assist him, are William F. Haddock, who has been prominent in the making of productions in many parts of the country. William T. Tuers will have charge of the photography. John Ward and Charles Druiett also are members of the staff.

"Honeymoon Ranch" Is Selling Rapidly

Bert Lubin announces that territory on his five reel western feature, "Honeymoon Ranch," is selling very fast. To date he claims to have practically closed on fifty per cent of the territory and to have received offers for the foreign rights and the remainder of unsold territory.

"My campaign on 'Honeymoon Ranch,'" states Mr. Lubin, "is just four weeks old today. In that time I have sold a good block of territory, have offers for the remainder and already have made shipments of prints, press-books, posters, etc., to buyers. What I claimed in my first announcement is true—there is a ready market for good independent pictures."

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"A Dangerous Paradise"
(Selznick—Five Reels)

THERE is not much substance to this story, which treats in a satirical way the idea that woman is the aggressor in matters of love. In fact, it is exceedingly light and vapid, and its lack of incident or moving moments causes us to wonder how it ever appealed to its sponsors as five-reel material. It is a sugar-coated recipe, the flavoring of which has been sprinkled with a little spice. The risque note, however, is apt to be a trifle dangerous to impressionable girls, if they adopt the plan of the protagonist.

The heroine, piqued over the fact that the man in the case fails to respond to any woman's advances unless she is married, is determined to capture him by establishing herself as a bride. An effort has been made to give it color and vitality through the subtitles. But nothing is gained. In fact, the title editor kids the life out of the story and really takes the sting from it. He is clever in poking fun at stereotyped captions such as "the next evening," or "at dawn." He left out that ancient wheeze, "a few days later."

The picture is really spineless, but since it is not meant to be taken seriously any criticism of its merits and demerits seems like a waste of words. The offering would look better compressed into two or three reels. It failed to hold the crowd at the Broadway because of its length. The players have nothing to do except be caught in groupings—either against pretty backgrounds or making their entrances and exits. Any exhibitor who books it should find some "hefty" short subjects to give strength to his program. It is a picture which will not get over by itself.—LAURENCE REID.

"Hold Me Tight"
(Sunshine Comedy—Fox—Two Reels)

THE first reel of this comedy is ordinary. It jogs alone with some new gags which are original without being spontaneously funny. The second part is much better, and a great deal is made of a windstorm sequence, when houses, trees and automobiles are blown away. By means of trick photography, an entire set appears to be lifted into the air, and flies along with the landscape moving underneath. A roof of a house is lifted by the cyclone, not by one sudden wrench, but first gradually loosened and then jerked skyward. It is very skillful work and shows infinite care. Moreover, while not funny in the strict sense of the word, it will be appreciated by an audience as a distinct novelty.

The story, such as it is, concerns a wealthy hired girl on a farm whose hand and fortune are sought by the hired man and also by a hamfat actor. A masquerade party is introduced with some good "hick" types, a robbery follows, and finally comes the chase and cyclone. Slim Sommerville is the hired man, and does especially good work when a spider is dropped down the neck of his coat as he is proposing to the girl. Ethel Tearle plays the girl and looks very attractive.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Friendly Breast of Earth"
(Artcolor—Special Pictures—One Reel)

HERE is an attractive nature study which appeals through its excellent composition of scenes and the poem used for the titles. The idea is expressed that Nature is ever generous and kind. The friendly rays of the sun, the friendly call of mountain, stream, forest and open spaces suffice to bring warmth into anyone's soul no matter if he may feel an outcast or possesses a troubled conscience. The cameraman has shot the picture from many angles and he has caught vistas which are as enchanting as they are majestic. The backgrounds invite you. The spectator may wonder at the grandeur of the scenes and still feel that the whole wide world belongs to him. Max Handshiegl attended to the color process and his work stamps him as an artist. The offering is ideal in lending dignity to your program. It would make an excellent prologue for any photoplay of the big outdoors.—LAURENCE REID.

"Twin Crooks"
(Two-Reel Century Comedy—Released Through Universal)

CHARLES DORETY, assisted by a good cast of funmakers, inject enough action and comedy into this two-reeler to make it a welcome addition to any program.

The opening scenes show Dorety and his "animals" being thrown out the stage door of a theatre because of a bad act.

These scenes are amusing because of the bewildered expression on the face of the comedian and the indignation of the "animals," which include a donkey, dog, horse and trained geese.

In trying to round up his "cast," Dorety does some very amusing stunts with a trained goose on one of the principal thoroughfares.

From this on action abounds, caused by the comedian's desire to make love to a married woman, whose jealous husband throws him out of windows and doors.

But he always returns and is found by the husband at the side of his wife talking in a confidential manner.

To add a little flavor, chorus girls are also introduced in a rehearsal number.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Flap Jacks"
(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox—One Reel)

A HUMDINGER—funny from beginning to end, clever and original in its idea. "Flap Jacks" is the best Mutt and Jeff Cartoon in many a day. It is a burlesque of the industrial or educational subject. Mutt and Jeff give an illustrated lecture on the method of making flapjacks used in their factory. A title reads, "Mixing the Batter." Jeff pours the flour into a gigantic frying pan, turns on the hose, and stirs it up from the back seat of a bicycle as Mutt drives around the rim of the pan. "Shaping the Cakes" is illustrated. This is done by a steam roller, which, incidentally, rolls Jeff as well as the flapjacks. An intricate machine is shown after the title, "The Finished Product."—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Her Secret Still"
(One Reel Universal Comedy Featuring Dorothea Wolbert)

DOROTHY WALBERT will certainly amuse an audience when they see her in this one-reeler.

Her droll ways and her ability to put over a comedy situation are a novelty to witness, especially in these days when "slapstick" and bathing girl comedies hold the screen.

As the designing maid who tries to inveigle the butler into a marriage, only to be rebuffed in her efforts, she gives a pleasing performance.

The opening scenes, depicting an employment bureau with its various characters, are funny indeed.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Beggars and Fakirs of India" and "A Chinese Orphanage"

THESE two short features contain plenty of interest and are strong in educational value.

The first, brings the beggars and fakirs of India close to our observation and although some of the scenes are rather revolting, they are instructing and for this reason are well worth seeing.

The camerawork is exceptionally well done, and the cameraman has not spared himself in selecting and drilling the natives in many of the scenes,

One particular amusing scene shows a beggar rolling himself along the main thoroughfare, his body lying flat upon the ground. He is said to have rolled half across the country.

The latter shows many interesting views of a Chinese orphanage run by the French. Little Chinese girls are instructed here in the making of lace and many other important essentials.—FRANK LEONARD.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Mountain Madness"
(Republic)

"MOUNTAIN MADNESS" is an illustration of what may happen to good workmen when the tools they handle are deficient.

This production has a splendid cast and is well directed but is sadly lacking in story material.

The author starts off with a rather original idea but in the process of development appears to have abandoned his characters with the result that the scenes are never completed.

For instance, two pairs of lovers are introduced in the opening scenes. To give contrast, one is of the elite and the other of the ordinary or "mountain" variety.

The heroine of the first pair becomes dissatisfied with her sweetheart because he possesses none of the "cave man" instincts and refuses to be rough with her.

When a big mountaineer appears she falls in love with him. The feeling is mutual and when opportunity presents itself they do not hesitate to embrace. The mountaineer's sweetheart appears to have a liking for the "gentleman," although she does not take so kindly to his love making.

Nothing develops out of these scenes, however, for the author switches to a train robbery and the excitement that attends the usual holdup is predominant.

When the mountaineer is accused of being the leader of "the gang" and goes into hiding, his new found sweetheart risks danger in an effort to locate him.

Her former lover finds her in the woods and gives her a shaking. This brings the exclamation, "why didn't you do that before?"

In the meantime the "outdoor" man proves his innocence and is seen happily in the embrace of the mountain girl.

The story ends abruptly without any attempt at explanation.

In the cast are Mignon Anderson, Harry Miller, Ora Carew, Edward Coxen, Grace Pike, Stuart Morris and Edna Pennington.—FRANK LEONARD.

Willing Captives
(Urban)

A KINETO REVIEW, showing the opposite side of "the bird in a gilded cage" question. Seldom does it occur to the visitors at the zoo, or sympathizers with the birds and animals in forced captivity, that these objects of pity might have fared worse. Nevertheless, when it is considered, as the subject brings out, that these captives are often more fortunate than their furred and feathered relatives, it puts a different angle on the matter. These animals, birds and objects of sympathy are fed and watered regularly. They have no fear of the hunter. They need not search for winter quarters. All these things are provided for them. After all, they are only deprived of their freedom to roam the hills and fly the air. They soon become accustomed to the confinement and, judging from the scenes showing their playful moments, make the best of a bargain and become willing captives.

Preceding the specimens of live birds and animals in captivity are some views of "make believe" ones. Some are statuary of great renown in famous parks. Some of them are mounted specimens. And, through all, there is the same respect for sequence which identifies Mr. Urban's short subjects from others of less merit.—LILLIAN GALE.

Dead Men Tell No Tales

"The Spirit of Service"
(American Red Cross)

THE title of "The Spirit of Service" tells the tale. It is a motion picture produced by the American Red Cross, for the purpose of furthering interest in the coming Roll Call for the renewal of membership.

The scenario was written by Hamish McLaurin, author of the well known Red Cross Roll Call picture of two years ago, "The Greatest Gift."

This is a single reel subject which will fit into a program almost anywhere, since it is an appeal for humanity and the work of the Red Cross has earned the right to command a place. The settings are of particular merit, while exteriors were taken on one of New York's most palatial estates.

The picture was produced under the direction of Tefft Johnson, with Arline Frederic as "Service" and Logan Paul as "Wisdom." The artists generously contributed their services, and because of this the Red Cross was able to produce the picture at a nominal expense.

Introducing the symbolical figures of War, Pestilence and Famine, which have been born as the result of wars, the story carries convincing reason for the need of enrolling in the Red Cross, year after year. The patriotic exhibitor will take pleasure in running the subject, with the hope of inspiring his patrons to respond.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Little Outcast"
(Industrsal Film Co.—State Rights)

THIS picture will probably hit the mark at which it is aiming. It has no well known star, author, director, or producer in back of it, and there is no pretense of elaborate production, but presenting as it does, a simple, rural story in a sincere way it should keep the interest of the patrons of the smaller houses.

It is announced as "a modern story suggested by 'Silas Marner.'" Instead of making the lonely old man a weaver, Paul Price, who wrote and directed the picture, has made him a blacksmith, living only for gold. When his money is stolen, he adopts the little waif, whom Fate has thrown across his path, and raises her to girlhood. Em Gorman, who was a well known child actress, not so long ago, plays the title role—the most attractive part in the story. The picture gives her many opportunities to display a natural and attractive screen personality.

The story opens when an adventuress makes a conquest of a rich college lad. In order to make her hold upon him secure, she adopts a dying mother's babe, claiming the child for her own. For ten years she blackmails the man, raising the child in a loveless, indifferent way. Then she dies and the embittered blacksmith brings up the lonely little waif. After a few years the girl is about to be taken from him by the man who believes himself to be her father, when the truth is made known.

Alex Shannon is effective as the blacksmith, but the remainder of the cast with the exception of Em Gorman, do not impress as favorably. With the exception of the forge scene, there are chiefly country exterior scenes. The titles are written in a dignified style, some of them making very good reading.

There seems to be a renaissance of the rural drama to-day, and this fact will aid "The Little Outcast." There are errors in detail, and padding to allow Em Gorman her "cute" scenes, and some crude acting in places by the minor characters, but none of these flaws destroy the interest. Length, 5 reels.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Mamma's Boy"
(Hal Roach—Vanity Fair Comedy—Pathe)

IF one could meet a flock of wild women dressed au naturel or clothed in bear skins (not intended as a pun) and tiger rugs during vacation time, one would feel like "blowing the whole works" and staying in the wilds for life. Here is "Mamma's Boy" for example. Eddie Boland, the comedian, is seen summering in the woods. His valet and chef attend to his every want. He is mamma's boy with a moustache. Girls do not interest him—not even when they tease him attired in their bathing suits. Provoked at his indifference and lack of manliness they put on the wild animal skins and resort to cave-woman tactics. Eddie is kidnapped, but when a real bear walks on the scene, the girls revert to type and run for their lives, while the "daffodil" stays his ground and feeds the beast thinking it a bird dog. That's about all there is to "Mamma's Boy." However, the girls are pretty and more than jaded bald-head and youngster will rise to remark—"They're there!" Everyone is pleasingly plump. And as for Boland he offers a good contrast. His comedy style is effective.—One Reel.—LAURENCE REID.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

"THE DEVIL'S GARDEN"
(Bennett-First National)

Rather Grewsome Story, Well Produced and Acted

"THE DEVIL'S GARDEN," Whitman Bennett's newest offering starring Lionel Barrymore, is going to strike some people as a very daring departure from accepted screen ethics. In all probability many picturegoers will revolt over its harrowing realism—provided they have come to expect that the screen must be ever sugar-coated in its semblance to life. But if the photoplay is to advance one must be ready to accept a departure now and then. "The Devil's Garden" may not read like good screen material if one takes into consideration that its theme and characterization is apt to be grewsome.

The very fact that Mr. Bennett has been faithful with the book by concentrating upon its realism is proof that the screen hasn't necessarily got to be a medium of saccharine sentiment. If he had made one radical departure from the narrative he would have spoiled the entire psychology of the theme and ruined the characterization. Maxwell's story is an exceedingly vivid document—one that may appear unnecessarily brutal to a sensitive reader. But perhaps this same reader may realize that the author has something to say. What is said in the book is well emphasized in the picture. And the result is a gripping offering. It brings into play the idea that man cannot sit in judgment upon the wrong of a fellow-being unless he is above earthly desires.

The protagonist is a figure who condemns his fellow creature without taking into consideration that he may be guided by the same uncontrollable impulses. Dale, the character enacted by Barrymore, is a plodding working-man. It falls to him to punish a trespasser against his home, even though the guilty man is responsible for helping him to success. After the murder is committed, Dale hears the voice of conscience. He is guided by fear for his rash act—fear of the future for his soul and fear for his own freedom in life. A day comes when he is placed in the identical situation as his victim and realizes his own shortcomings. Tortured with conscience he finds solace by self-sacrifice. The character of the passionate girl who is ignorant of the meaning of sex hasn't been developed in keeping with the book, but is planted well enough to carry out the idea. The action is told in terms of graphic scenes and builds a deal of cumulative suspense because of its correct tempo and the ability of the players to play in character. Mr. Barrymore makes the role of Dale a vivid study. Take the punch out of this picture and one would see a rather stupid affair. Bennett has substituted startling action for words.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

William Dale.....Lionel Barrymore
Mavis Dale.....Doris Rankin
Lord Barradine.....H. Cooper Cliffe
Norah.....May McAvoy

By W. B. Maxwell.
Directed by Kenneth Webb.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

W. B. Maxwell's gripping story of human desires, of man's inhumanity to man, "The Devil's Garden," will be the feature attraction at the ———— next ———— with Lionel Barrymore as the star. This is a powerful subject which created wide discussion as a novel and adapted to the screen it brings into play with vital and vivid strokes the idea that man cannot sit in judgment upon the wrong of a fellow being unless he is above earthly desires. William Dale, the part enacted by Mr. Barrymore, is a rugged, hard-working man. It falls to him to punish the trespasser, Barradine, even though the latter is responsible for helping him to better himself. Then the voice of conscience is heard.

Dale is guided by fear for his rash act—fear of the future for his soul and fear for his own freedom in life. A day comes when he is placed in the identical situation as Barradine. He is unable to control his passion. So he finds solace in self-sacrifice. Thus his desire to die that others might live brings compensation to his conscience. The picture is told in terms of graphic sequences and moves with a power which builds the utmost in action and suspense. The star is thoroughly in character and his talent enables him to catch the psychology of the plot and characterization. Assisting him are Doris Rankin, H. Cooper Cliffe, and May McAvoy, players who also render perfect studies. The picture is directed by Kenneth Webb.

PROGRAM READER

Lionel Barrymore, the eminent star of stage and screen, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Devil's Garden," an adaptation of W. B. Maxwell's powerfully gripping story of the same name. This tale presents man's inhumanity to man, and is told in terms of tense and often exciting drama. The role interpreted by the star is that of a man who condemns his fellow creature without taking into consideration that he is guided by the same uncontrollable impulses. A fascinating story, it makes an equally fascinating picture—a picture charged with breath-taking moments, pathos, humor and passionate romance. The supporting cast is an adequate one.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have the combination of author and star to exploit in getting this picture patronized. Perhaps many of your patrons have read the story. If so they haven't forgotten it, since it is thoroughly gripping. You might use the soft pedal in detailing the plot for the benefit of the uninitiated. Some of the tender picturegoers might be offended over the realistic sequences—the vivid scenes which are flashed. But bring out that it offers a fine study in the weakness of human nature—of man's inhumanity to man—of his willingness to condemn others for the very impulses which guide and control his character. The big angle, however, is the star's name. Concentrate upon that angle and the fact that the picture is a tense and gripping drama. Feature the other players.

CATCH LINES

He condemned the man who ruined his life; he condemned his wife for her faithlessness, disregarding the fact that her motive was guided by her interest for their welfare. What happened? See Lionel Barrymore in "The Devil's Garden."

"KISMET"

Otis Skinner Gives Superb Performance in Lavish Production

THE long heralded production of "Kismet," with Otis Skinner making his screen debut in what is considered his greatest role, certainly lives up to one's expectations. This play by Edward Knoblock which visualizes Bagdad of a thousand and one years ago offered picture possibilities through its rich backgrounds, its array of colorful characters, its genuinely dramatic conflict and its compelling action which rises with a crescendo through bizarre and intimate scenes, and these possibilities have been fully realized through a perfect adaptation and direction marked for its atmosphere and detail—values which truly transport the spectator and make him feel an actual participant.

The play depicts a single day's adventure in the hectic life of Hajj, the beggar, one of the most vivid and interesting characters ever presented on screen and stage. Certainly Skinner gives it life through a perfect adaptability which combined with his superb skill at pantomime makes the part stand out like a cameo—one of the richest portrayals that ever graced the silver sheet. He should continue to lend his personality to a screen which is in need of an artist of his capabilities. And his assistants have caught some of his magnetism, so enthusiastically do they play their parts.

"Kismet" offers a complicated story of Oriental cunning and intrigue, but one which is easily followed because of the clearly defined characterization. Hajj rises to high estate and sinks to his level between dawn and sunset. Though he struts and poses and steals and uses his wit to serve his whims, he never forgets that he is a beggar. He is used as an instrument of intrigue by connivers for the throne, but the wit born from begging stands him in good stead. And when the day has vanished, there sits Hajj, contented as he was in the beginning—to beg alms "for the love of Allah." A picturesque philosopher, a fatalist, a humorist and play-boy. Counterplots furnish contrast to the main narrative. Space forbids detailing the individual scenes, but suffice to say that the majority of them are rich in dramatic values. The prayers to Allah by the multitude, the harem scenes, the street episodes—these are all faithfully caught.

The director has not departed from his narrative for the sake of supplying irrelevant touches. And the opportunity was offered to make it a spectacle. A tale of a beggar, he keeps it a tale throughout. The exteriors have an air of solidarity about them. Some of the walls and steps are creviced and marked as if time itself had carved its impressions. The interiors are thoroughly in harmony, bizarre, lavish and Oriental. But for a back-drop showing a panoramic shot of Bagdad, there isn't a flaw in the production. The picture moves a trifle slowly at the start because of the introduction of a long list of characters, but it hits its stride soon after and maintains its interest to the conclusion. "Kismet" is Robertson-Cole's biggest achievement—a truly artistic production and one which is a credit to motion pictures.—Length, 9 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An occasion of great interest to patrons of the ———— theatre is the announcement that Robertson-Cole's production of "Kismet" will be shown next ————. The production is marked for its rich atmosphere and its truly lavish backgrounds. Mr. Skinner is supported by a large cast and a vast assembly of supernumeraries. Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to June 26, 1920.

"DOWN HOME"
(Willat-Hodkinson)

Some Interesting Moments in This Rustic Story

THERE appears to be a regular epidemic of the "farm and fireside" type of drama for the screen these days. "Down Home," Irvin Willat's contribution, is the latest to be offered and aside from some individual scenes of moving incident it fails to be conspicuous as a noteworthy achievement. The director will be remembered as the man who sponsored those graphic pictures, "Behind the Door," and "Below the Surface," and it looks as if he is out of his element in tackling the rural drama. A stickler for realistic detail, the story does not offer him many moments to appear at his best.

In fact the subject matter is rather moss-covered, since it has to do with the condemnation of the country girl who is scorned by everyone but her faithful lover. The papers figure in the plot too, and there are flashes of a homespun father and mother, a few quaint characters, and the inevitable scalawag. A rural story should be marked by simplicity, but this feature is genuinely complicated and travels over considerable ground in detailing its action. In fact the continuity is quite jumpy and presents a rather episodic arrangement of scenes. But the main facts are clearly established and show the country girl, determined to hold her head up in the community, cure her father of his insatiable thirst, and find happiness with her blacksmith lover after certain villains have attempted to fleece her out of her property.

Mr. Willat is splendid with his atmospheric touches, the backgrounds being thoroughly rustic and realistic. Not one detail is missing to keep it in harmony. But if the plot itself is weak, certain individual scenes are excellent enough to hide some of its shortcomings. For example, the revival meeting, in which the drunkard goes forward, to be followed by the less courageous. Then there is a smashing fist fight developed with true Willat punch. This scene is mostly told by conversation in the earlier reel only to be "flashbacked" at the psychological moment when its visualization brings an effective climax. Again a snow storm scene is well done, although it is marred somewhat by a "backdrop." However, the picture will get over through its title, its fine atmosphere and the capable interpretation of the players among whom are the personable Leatrice Joy, James O. Barrows, Sydney Franklin and William Robert Daly.—Length, 7 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Down Home," the first independent production made by Irvin Willat, the director responsible for "Below the Surface," and "Behind the Door," will be the feature attraction at the ———— beginning ————. This is an adaptation of the popular book, "Dabney Todd," by Frank N. Westcott, and the homespun characters, the rural atmosphere, the homely qualities of country life are revitalized upon the screen. It is a story of New England with the figures as simple as their surroundings.

It is a story of youth struggling bravely for high ideals against the enemies of poverty and disappointment, of the pitiful striving of an old man to free himself from the curse of drink for the sake of his daughter, of the unwavering love of a clean-minded youth for the girl whom he has known since childhood. The picture is well balanced with elements of humor and pathos and reveals intimate touches of a "homey" character which are entirely appealing. Particularly effective is the strong flavor of atmosphere which is most refreshing in its complete naturalness. The feature is enacted by a cast of competent players among whom are Leatrice Joy, Edward Hearn and Robert William Daly.

PROGRAM READER

A story of New England, of an old-fashioned village which harbors a human set of characters who live their lives in sweet tranquility is "Down Home," the Irvin Willat production which comes to the ———— next ————. The director will be remembered for his splendid pictures, "Below the Surface," and "Behind the Door." This offering shows Mr. Willat's versatility. He takes a simple tale of country people and gives it vitality on the screen. The refreshing atmosphere, the "homey" quality of the story, the manner in which he has blended the elements of humor and pathos—these are what make "Down Home" thoroughly appealing. The picture is enacted by an excellently balanced cast.

SUGGESTIONS

It would be best to concentrate upon the realistic atmosphere which is expressed in this picture. No picture based upon country life has equalled in point of its backgrounds. Tell also that it is an adaptation of the story "Dabney Todd," by Frank N. Westcott. Bring out the value of the director's name. He will be remembered as the man responsible for "Below the Surface," and "Behind the Door." Tell that the story establishes again the fact that Willat can create sustaining moments in any plot no matter how simple. Play up the excellently balanced cast. With such a picture you have ample opportunity to go in for lobby display and prologues. Atmosphere can be achieved in several ways, by dressing up your lobby and staging a prologue in character with the play.

CATCH LINES

A story of New England life, of "homey" characters who are the backbone of America. See "Down Home."

"THE BRUTE-MASTER"
(Hodkinson)

Hobart Bosworth Scores in Vigorous Story of the Sea

READERS who admired Jack London between the covers of a book, and "fans" who liked his stories adapted to the screen, are certain to be interested in this first production from the pen of his widow, Charmain K. London. It has all the force and vigor of her husband's work, though it lacks a little of the repulsive brutality that used in full force, rather inclines to repel the more sensitive of picturegoers. The theme and characterization of "The Brute-Master" are similar to those found in London's "The Sea Wolf," and like this vital and vivid story offer a picturesque study in brutality. Indeed it seems as if Bucko McAllister and Wolf Larsen might be brothers, so thoroughly identical are their temperaments.

"The Brute Master" is a tale of the sea—of a relentless rover who rules by right of might in a little floating world of his own. His sole motive is to command and dominate his fellow-men by inspiring terror in them for his super-human strength and domineering will. Chance brings a society girl and a wealthy young idler under his charge, they being compelled to ship on the first available ship, and the former's delicate beauty awakens the animal passion of the man. A brutally maltreated sailor, out for revenge, sets fire to the schooner, and locks the skipper in his cabin. The rest of the crew get away in boats and find refuge on an island, while Bucko escapes and reaches an adjoining island.

Through a perfectly logical and consistently developed series of incidents and events, McAllister comes in contact with the others and assumes command. Here the thin veneer of the idler's civilization is revealed with the result that he is punished by the skipper, who, influenced by the girl's nobility of character, undergoes a transformation. This regeneration has been merely suggested, adroitly, rather than blatantly completed and made ridiculous. The story throughout is sincere, convincing, and logical. The scenes have been handled splendidly and they compose a production which should interest every type of patron. Bosworth does fine work, while his supporting company which includes Anna Q. Nilsson, William Conklin and Margaret Livingstone is thoroughly adequate. Length, 5 reels.—Pearl Gaddis. (Reviewed at Atlanta, Ga.)

THE CAST

Bucko McAllister.....Hobart Bosworth
Madeline Gray.....Anna Q. Nilsson
Walter Maxwell.....William Conklin
The Native "Taupou".....Margaret Livingstone

By Charmain K. London (Mrs. Jack London)
Produced by J. Parker Read, Jr.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Hobart Bosworth is the star at the ———— theatre, beginning ———— in "The Brute Master," with Anna Q. Nilsson, who has often been called the screen's most beautiful blonde, playing opposite him. The story is by Mrs. Jack London, and seldom has Bosworth had a story that fitted him so ideally. He plays the role of a hard-fighting, brutal, domineering sea-captain who ruled his little world by right of might—and then a beautiful girl came along. She hated and feared him, and showed it. They are cast ashore, by the burning of the ship, on an island inhabited by friendly South Sea Islanders, and here the story reaches a fine dramatic climax. There's plenty of action, some fine sea-views, and the fire-scenes on the ship have seldom been equalled. J. Parker Read, Jr., produced the story, and it's great.

PROGRAM READER

He was a burly sea-captain, and he ruled by the strength of his good right arm. And then he met a slim, lovely young blonde girl who showed him just how little his brute strength counted in the gentle art of wooing and winning a bride. They have to be shipwrecked on an island in the South Seas before she can begin to see the real worth beneath the domineering outer shell of him. And it takes the life on the island to show just how little real manhood there is hidden beneath the cultivated exterior of the Other Man. It's a great picture—don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Let your people know that this story is by the widow of Jack London. It is also as well to give some publicity to the fact that she always—or nearly always—traveled with him, that there are many weird parts of the globe where no other white woman has ever penetrated, and that she lived for years on one of the islands in the South Seas. The story is quite reminiscent of London, and is a corking production. It offers some good angles of exploitation in that the scenes are taken, almost entirely, on shipboard and on an island in the Pacific.

CATCH LINES

Does might make right? How long does it take a pretty girl to reduce a brutal, domineering man to fawning servility? Does love really reform?

London for many seasons, marks the debut of America's greatest romantic actor, Otis Skinner, upon the screen. "Kismet" is considered his greatest play. The picture is lavish in appointment, superbly acted by the star and his clever assistants, and tells a story of Bagdad of a thousand years ago which is fascinating in theme and characterization. Don't miss the treat of the season.

SUGGESTIONS

There seems to be several angles in which to exploit this feature. You have the name of the author who is one of the leading playwrights of the day—you have the name of the star, who is considered America's greatest romantic actor and who makes his debut on the screen in this offering—you have the fact that the play scored an immense hit in New York and London—you have the fine story interest, the vivid character of Hajj, the Beggar, to exploit. Then you can arrange perfect atmosphere by dressing your lobby in harmony. Your ushers can be garbed in Oriental costumes—even to the veils. You have your musical setting all arranged for you which is complete in its Oriental coloring.

"THE MONEY-CHANGERS"
(Benj. B. Hampton—Pathe)

Hectic Melodrama May Draw in the Neighborhood House

THIS is a regular, old-fashioned underworld melodrama which is founded upon a deal of villainous conniving and which depends for its climax upon one of those "knock-em-down-and-drag-'em-out" fights. All the old-time ingredients and characters are incorporated. For instance, there is the romance between the good parties, with the disciple of evil displaying his lustful tendencies; there is the charity worker, the heroine by the way, who drops her social activities to clean up the underworld; there is the powerful villain who traffics in weak men and women's souls and gains his power through marketing drugs; there is Chinatown which presents a rich sample of Oriental cunning; there is the young, aggresive newspaper reporter who is determined to make a scoop for his sheet as well as a reputation for himself.

And mixed in this strange company is a galaxy of wayward women, one of whom proves to be "little sister" who is wanted by mother. And lest it be forgotten, the reformed crook is introduced and he has his conflict because the evil ones and the meddling detectives will not permit him to keep to the straight and narrow path. It is hectic melodrama with a capital H. Coincidence and convenience make the action and incident somewhat far-fetched, but there is no denying that as an old-fashioned reproduction of the ten, twent' and thirt' days the picture is consistent.

After the planting of the society scene which starts the action, the scene shifts to Chinatown where it stays to the finish. The drug king appears to run his business from some Chinese den, which is strange considering his influence in the town. And a so-called big politician is putty in his hands. Finally the sequences develop into the big fight. Chinamen dart here and there, guns flash, blows are landed, and when the lights come on, the villain is taking the count, the good people are safe and sound, and the cops are keeping order. Up to this point not a policeman makes his appearance. The picture builds a goodly share of suspense. Why not with such adventurous incident? And the players, selected for their adaptabilities, give fitting performances. The settings are first rate and the atmosphere is good. "The Money-Changers" is not the type of picture which will appeal to high-class audiences. But the down-town and factory houses will doubtless "eat it up."—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Romance, adventure and intrigue are a few of the ingredients which compose "The Money-Changers," a story of New York's underworld. In this environment the worship of money changes men into brutes and women into their playthings. The picture is an adaptation of Upton Sinclair's novel of the same name and carries a full quota of melodramatic moments. Most of the action transpires in Chinatown. The upper and lower social strata furnish the background of this colorful drama of those who market the soul of weak men and women for gold.

One sees the rich man who is the king of the underworld; a fighting newspaper reporter, who is determined to break up the drug traffic and expose the crooks; a weak and wayward girl; another girl who offsets the evils of ill-gotten money by deeds of charity; a reformed crook and good and bad Chinamen. The elements of romance, intrigue and adventure are blended together, the whole furnishing a tense hour for those who crave excitement. The picture is well saturated with atmosphere and is capably acted by players who have a strong sense of characterization. Jack Conway directed.

PROGRAM READER

Do you crave a tense hour of adventurous action? Do you thrill at exciting moments? Then come to the ———— next ———— and witness "The Money-Changers," a feature adapted from Upton Sinclair's gripping tale of New York's underworld. We guarantee sixty minutes of solid excitement. The background of the photoplay is based upon those who market the souls of weak men and women for gold. Ward politicians, men high in finance, underworld crooks, charity workers, wayward girls, a fighting reporter and the inscrutable, cunning Chinamen—these are the figures which move in this colorful melodrama. A cast of very competent players includes such names as Robert McKim, Roy Stewart, Claire Adams and Edward Piel.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture in all likelihood will not appeal to high class audiences but those exhibitors who cater to patrons who crave excitement and who do not care about the subject matter of their entertainment so long as it furnishes adventure are certain to like "The Money-Changers." The exhibitor should make emphatic that the picture is crammed full of exciting moments—that it tells a tale of New York's Oriental underworld in which are blended the elements of intrigue, Chinese cunning, romance and adventure. The title might come in handy for some special exploitation. And the author is quite well known in the fiction field. Place special stress on the fine cast. All the principal players are well known and should be well exploited. Bill it as an exciting melodrama.

"THE UNFORTUNATE SEX"
(Frank Gersten, Inc.—State Rights)

Theme Has Pulling Power, But It Drags Towards the End

TAKE a sociological problem such as is contained in this production and you have an audience appeal. "The Unfortunate Sex" shows what a terrible time women have in the world. It has a number of lengthy subtitles for a foreword, all tending to prove that she is "the unfortunate sex." Working on the very true assumption that people usually like to feel sorry for themselves, this picture will be attractive, despite the fact that it has been developed along some very improbable lines, starting off with the father striving to do away with his newly born babe because it happened to be a girl instead of a boy, and ending with a dragging series of episodes after the climax is long over and done with.

Frances Edmonde and George Larkin are the featured players. Miss Edmonde plays the female "newsy" who looks cute but unnatural in ragged trousers and long curly locks. Larkin is the young lawyer who befriends her, and, when, she changes her vocation and manner of dress, falls in love with her. The theme of the "unfortunate sex" is neglected for a time, and the picture becomes straight crook melodrama. Peggy, the "newsy," is forced to rob the house of her long lost father. She is captured, reveals everything, and wins the reward for bringing about the capture of the real crooks. She is sent to school and the young lawyer discovers her real identity.

After this the story wanders on to show the reconciliation of the separated husband and wife and it slows up considerably in so doing. All the leading players are satisfactory, and the underworld scenes become exciting. A good fight scene is saved for the end, however. Peggy is explaining how she was rescued from the villain by the heroism of the lawyer. There is a fade-out of the struggle which, it seems, would have been a whole lot more interesting if it had been inserted in chronological order. The picture's familiar melodrama and artificial attempts after "sweet" stuff for Miss Edmonde do not enhance it.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

"Peggy".....Frances Edmonde
George Bentley.....George Larkin
James Harrington.....Harry Van Meter
Mrs. Harrington.....Catherine Lewis
"Spike" Kelly.....Earl Schaefer
"Plug Ugly's" wife.....Jeanne Poe

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Unfortunate Sex," the feature production which will head the bill at the ———— for ————, is a photoplay adapted from the popular novel by the same name by Elsier La Maie. The starring players are Frances Edmonde and George Larkin, two well known players who have gained many followers by their excellent work in the past.

It is an absorbing theme upon which "The Unfortunate Sex" is built. Why is it that women must bear the brunt of responsibility for the world's troubles? Why is it that the anxious husband, waiting for his first born to come into the world, prays so earnestly that it be not a girl? "The Unfortunate Sex" is going to interest the patrons of the ———— and especially is it going to appeal to the women lovers of pictures.

Besides offering an intensely dramatic story, this picture is especially well produced and acted. The cast includes, besides Miss Edmonde and Mr. Larkin, such players as Harry Van Meter, Catherine Lewis, Jeanne Poe and Earl Schaefer. It will run at the ———— for ———— days, and is expected to create just as much comment in the community as it did when it was first shown to a Broadway audience. It faithfully depicts the two extremes of New York life, the wealthy West Side, and the criminal underworld.

PROGRAM READER

They have been called the weaker, the fairer, the gentler sex, but why is it woman has never been termed "The Unfortunate Sex?" Man has been made the stronger, the more powerful, the more domineering. He has been given more freedom. His is the path to conquest in the fields of wealth and power. Surely man is the more fortunate sex! It is upon this interesting theme that the story of "The Unfortunate Sex," the feature picture which will head the bill of the ———— theatre on ————, is built. Seldom have more gripping and entertaining pictures reached the screen. It is adapted from the novel by Elsier La Maie, which had thousands of readers when it was first published. Starring in the production are Frances Edmonde and George Larkin, two experienced screen players who already have a host of followers. "The Unfortunate Sex" will be shown for ———— days. It is expected to fill the house and the lobby, too. So come early. No one likes a lobbyist.

SUGGESTIONS

Use the theme of this picture as much as possible. Make an especial appeal to your women patrons. Make them feel sorry for themselves, and they will come to see the picture. Neither of the stars will mean a great deal, and the author likewise. So be satisfied with pounding away at the idea of poor, downtrodden, abused women, and you can probably fill up quite creditably. Emphasize also that it is a story of New York's underworld, contrasted with New York's society. Teaser campaigns are possible from the title.

CATCH LINES

"The Unfortunate Sex." Which is it—male or female? Which is the more powerful, stronger, showered with more blessings by Nature, more welcome at their entrance into the world?

A powerful drama of New York life, contrasting the homes of the wealthy with the dens of the underworld, all based on the absorbing theme of the lack of equality between the sexes.

"ARE ALL MEN ALIKE?"
(Metro)

Rather Inconsequential for Feature Length

If one is looking for a substantial story interest in May Allison's latest feature, "Are All Men Alike?" one will discover that it is devoid of such a vital element. If one is looking for a character study of a modern sub-deb one is apt to be satisfied with the star's buoyant portrayal. The picture is rather brittle and tame to extend through six reels because it relies solely upon a series of naive episodes for its strength. The heroine is determined to have what she wants when she wants it. So she decides to have her own way. The action pilots her to Greenwich village where she is to test her theory whether all men are alike.

She flits about in a Bohemian environment, runs away from her mother, provokes her other relatives and her fiancee into leaving her to shift for herself, indulges in flirtations with a lounge lizard and a prize-fighter and puts up several capers before she discovers that her lover is somewhat different. The story, of course is obvious, and depends for its speed of action to hide its shortcomings. However, there is a fairly clever twist which shows her ready to cry "help" and willing to permit someone else to control her whims. This twist presents some of her so-called friends anxious to capitalize her fortune by filing suits against her. Her relatives turn her over to the young man in the case and by using his wits he not only dismisses the complaints but wins her by being forceful. In other words he compels her to sign on the dotted line and become his better half.

The picture is Miss Allison's throughout. She carries most of the scenes on her shoulders, but as it isn't a heavy load the effort does not overburden her. One scene looks out of place. It shows two of her admirers indulging in a battle royal right in her studio. At least they could have done outside. A good deal of the story is told through the titles. The picture is nothing but a study of an irrepressible, irresponsible girl who hasn't enough variety in her make-up to compel much admiration. The director has appreciated its weakness by quickening the action. Miss Allison plays the part capably enough and her support is praiseworthy. That's about all that can be said of it.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The charming May Allison, who has been lending her vital personality to comedy-dramas of late, will be seen at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— in "Are All Men Alike?" a picture which permits her to display her capabilities in a humorous direction. It is an adaptation of Arthur Stringer's magazine story and tells the tale of an irrepressible society girl, who, tired of the monotony of living up to the social scale, is determined to have her own way. Her philosophy is based upon the idea that she will have what she wants when she wants it. And she wants her freedom, without any restrictions. She even declares herself upon the question of matrimony and one reason she is going to saddle her own canoe is to find out if men are really alike. The story pilots her through several adventurous incidents, but she discovers after all that it is better to place her faith in a man and permit him to control her impulses. The picture carries a good element of humor—a note which is caught by Miss Allison and her players. The scenes are well arranged and charged with good atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

A leading question with marriageable girls is that which causes them to wonder whether all men are alike. One often hears a girl express the fact that men are all alike—that they make love, ask questions, and cut up capers the same way. Now May Allison wasn't fully decided upon the point—so she started to hunt for freedom and test men. What adventure came to her—how she found out that some men are different in their style of love-making though quite alike in certain characteristics is told in a story which is rich with clever incident. Miss Allison is taught in several charming episodes. The picture is "Are All Men Alike?" and it comes to the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been running the May Allison features, you probably know by this time whether she draws or not. She has charm and personality and there is no reason why she shouldn't have quite a following. But in exploiting this picture don't give away the plot. Simply arouse curiosity by pointing out whether men are all alike or not. Put it right up to the girls in teaser ads. and posters. This will stimulate interest. And you can follow up by stating that the star finds out for her own satisfaction whether men are all alike. Play up her name. Bill the picture as a breezy comedy-drama by a leading author. Go after the flapper set. If you have such a galaxy in your town, get them in for the matinees. The title can be worked up into a lot of good exploitation.

CATCH LINES

Do you think men are all alike? Don't they differ in their way of making love? Aren't some cavemen and others mild as lambs led to slaughter? See May Allison in "Are All Men Alike?"

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

"MAD LOVE"
(Victor Kremer Production)

LOOKING for the good things to remark regarding a photoplay, the first, in this instance, is that the title really implies what the subject treats upon. It means something, the theme of the photoplay. "Mad Love" is really a story about unrequited affection of a beautiful woman for a man who loves a less beautiful one. Strange as this may seem, it is explained in seeing the picture, since the ingenue lead is almost as dominant as the star herself. And, though not in accordance with the most modern tales of life and love, this man remains faithful to his first and only sweetheart, which makes the story at least different and goes to reestablish the belief in faithful men. This man has every thing thrown in his path of peace, too, that would offer as an excuse to forget the girl he "left behind." Instead, he remains steadfast, and after five reels finds a happy reward.

Another of the good points is the beauty and logic of the interiors. They are what would be logically expected and are beautifully appointed. In fact, all the sets are above the average. The exteriors, in addition, are well chosen locations.

The acting is not what would call forth a burst of praise, though it is as good as is ordinarily included in this class of picture. The appeal would be mostly to people who have never had the pleasure of hearing Lina Cavalieri sing. Her operatic attainments surpass her ability as a motion picture actress, though it is well to remember she is cast for a most difficult role. She wears beautiful clothes to perfection, however, and the fact that there is no one of prominence in support, her difficulty in giving a convincing performance was, of course, a greater task. Nevertheless people who want to see Cavalieri, rather than hear her, may find satisfaction in her starring vehicle, "Mad Love." The sequence is a bit lacking, the photography noticeably so. Yet it is not a picture that will necessarily disappoint an audience assembled to be entertained rather than to look for flaws.—Length, 5 reels.—Lillian Gale.

THE CAST

Rose.....Lina Cavalieri
Benedict.....Lucien Muratore

By Jean Rameau.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Lina Cavalieri, the celebrated diva and screen actress, returns to the silent drama after a long absence, in "Mad Love," a story of love and passion and tense heart appeal. Those who remember Mme. Lina Cavalieri in pictures a few short seasons ago will delight in seeing her lending her presence again to the silver-sheet. That she has lost none of her beauty and charm is testified to in "Mad Love." The star is seen in a characterization which is peculiarly adaptable to her distinctive personality. And prominent in her support is her husband, Muratore, an equally famous opera singer.

Mme. Cavalieri is the wife of a wealthy Frenchman in this picture, and she becomes violently enamoured of her husband's private secretary, who formerly was a novice in a Trappist monastery and who loves her niece, Genevieve. This unrequited love on her part precipitates a tragedy, but the sweethearts finally reach the goal of happiness. It is not a misstatement in declaring "Mad Love" as the star's greatest screen drama. She acts without effort or exaggeration and lives her character to the life. Muratore, who has long been considered one of the leading actors of the day, plays his part with consummate skill. Mme. Cavalieri has often been called the most beautiful woman in the world. And her beauty is given due prominence in "Mad Love."

PROGRAM READER

"The most beautiful woman in the world" is what they call Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the famous diva and actress, who comes to the ———— theatre next ———— in "Mad Love." This picture marks her return to the screen after a long absence and after witnessing her remarkable performance those who remember her (and how could anyone forget such a beautiful woman?) will declare that she has lost none of her physical charms or talent. The picture is ideal for the expression of that talent. It is a story of love and passion. Prominent in the cast is another opera singer, Lucien Muratore, who in real life is Cavalieri's husband. Come and see "Mad Love," a picture charged with dramatic action and heart appeal.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course any mention of this picture should be exploited with the star's name. Play up that the offering marks the return of Cavalieri after a long absence. Don't neglect to take into account that she is recognized as the most beautiful woman in the world. Bill her as such and then watch your crowd flock to see her. You can certainly play on this angle and secure patronage. The title of the picture is attractive and should come in for some special exploitation. If you have any Cavalieri records for talking machine, have her sing as the orchestra accompanies. Or have her sing off stage through the machine. Play up her husband, Muratore, who is also in the cast. Bill the picture as a tense drama of love and passion. Get stills of the star and use them liberally throughout your lobby.

CATCH LINES

You'll have a chance to see the most beautiful woman in the world when "Mad Love" comes next ————. Don't miss seeing Lina Cavalieri.

She was a ravishing dark-eyed daughter of Spain. Married to a man twice her years. And with a dangerously attractive ex-monk for his secretary! Did love conquer? See "Mad Love" with Lina Cavalieri, the beautiful.

"DRAG HARLAN"
(Fox)

If They Like Farnum, It's a Good Bet

YOU can measure the crowds by the number of Farnum admirers and Western lovers. For "Drag Harlan" has all that a picture needs to make up a good Western, and it gives Farnum a role of a two-gun "killer," with plenty of chance to draw a gun, protect the distressed damsel, scowl ferociously and laugh with childish gladness in many close-ups.

The story is stereotyped, but it makes no difference. It tells the old tale of this supposed "bad-man," charged with a dying rancher to protect his orphan daughter and save the newly discovered gold from the hands of the villainous "gang." The "gang," of course, doesn't approve of the Farnum protectorate and try for several reels to "get" him. There is an exciting climax with the girl captured by the villain; Farnum in the power of the assistant villain; and the cattle about to be stolen by many supernumerary villains. It ends with a final clean up, and proves Farnum's ability to recover from bullet wounds with little or no hesitation.

The picture is enhanced greatly by emphasizing the rapid gun play of the star. Possibly this is done by slowing down the camera, but at any rate, his guns shoot out of his belt at lightning speed and spit for their fire almost instantaneously. It is very effective from an audience standpoint. Another asset is the droll titles, written a la bad man of the West. Cowboys never say "Get out quick!" They say, "I'm thinkin' you'd better hit the breeze pronto."

The atmosphere of the Western plains is well brought out, with some long shots of the ranch houses and the hundreds of cattle being especially noticeable. Jackie Saunders is not very impressive as a leading lady. The cowboys are all good types. Some half a dozen of them suffer death from the lightning-like guns of the star in the course of the picture. J. Gordon Edwards directed, and the story is from the prolific pen of Charles Alden Seltzer. If Farnum is a favorite with your patrons you will have no difficulty with this picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Farnum, whose picture, "If I Were King," has been one of the biggest screen hits of the year, will play the stellar role in "Drag Harlan," his latest production which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

"Drag Harlan" is a story of the West—one of the virile, swift moving type that is always a favorite among the American screen public. It is filled with action from beginning to end, and to admirers of Farnum who wish to see him in a role of the "rough and ready" variety in which he first gained fame, ———— will be a red letter day.

The star has made many thrilling Western pictures, but none more exciting than this coming attraction. He plays the title role—a two gun man of the West, who is known and feared for his ability to draw a gun quicker than any man in the neighborhood. In this picture Farnum illustrates some of the quickest action in pulling a gun that has ever been seen on the screen. Almost quicker than the eye can see, his gun is raised from his belt, lifted with a snappy turn of the wrist, and is sending forth its bullet almost instantaneously.

"Drag Harlan" will be shown for ———— days. It is a worthy successor to "Les Miserables," "The Tale of Two Cities," and "If I Were King."

PROGRAM READER

William Farnum in another Western! "Drag Harlan," his latest production, will be the attraction at this theatre on ————. It is a typical Farnum production—filled with action, crammed with thrills and giving at the same time ample opportunity for this great lover of the screen to impress the romantic ones. Farnum's leading lady is Jackie Saunders, one of the most attractive actresses on the screen today. He is supported by a splendid cast of cowboy-actors. The story is land in the open cow country and has many attractive views of the beautiful West.

In this picture Farnum exhibits some of the fastest gun play ever filmed. He plays the title role—a two-gun son of the West, who is feared throughout the country side for his ability to "draw" quicker than any other man. With lightning speed, his hand moves to the cartridge belt, raises the gun and fires almost simultaneously. You will never regret seeing "Drag Harlan."

SUGGESTIONS

As a successor to the special "If I Were King," this picture will bring a little disappointment to those who expect to see another elaborate spectacle. But it is a fast Western and you cannot go wrong by telling them so. Insist that it is a typical Farnum role, that it has all the ingredients that go to make up a good Western picture, and that they will have action aplenty. Feature the star's photographs in the lobby. They are the two things you have to exploit—the star (he has a big following) and the type of picture, which still is very popular.

CATCH LINES

One of the best Westerns ever filmed, giving William Farnum a chance to impress with his virile personality.

He could draw a gun quicker than any man for miles around—but he never killed anyone who did not deserve killing.

"FIXED BY GEORGE"
(Universal)

Lyons and Moran Produce Successful Farce

LYONS AND MORAN have produced another successful farce-comedy in "Fixed By George," which, while possessing nothing unusual in humorous situations, does boast of a good plot with a reason for every bit of action and a well constructed continuity.

When the comedy moments arrive they are spontaneous because they are well planted and in between times the story runs along smoothly, carrying interest in each successive sequence.

Undoubtedly much of credit for the success of this offering should go to the author, Edgar Franklin, who has written a number of Lyons and Moran starring vehicles and seems to understand the particular talents of these players.

The prodcution builds well to its farcical climax in the last reel.

In these latter scenes four or five couples are used to straighten out the tangle and credit must be given to the stars for the splendid way they have handled the situations.

Lyons and Moran give a good up-to-date performance of the roles they characterize, injecting action where it is needed and adding many comedy touches which are never overdone, to improve the situations.

The story concerns the trials and tribulations of a meddler who tries to "fix it" for his friend's wife who has become jealous of her husband's affairs with a wealthy young woman. In trying to accomplish his object, he "fixes" himself and all concerned.

In the cast are four pretty ingenues, Hazel Howell, Beatrice La Plante, Daisy Robinson and Maude Wayne.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

George	Lee Moran
Geraldine (his wife)	Hazel Howell
Dr. Poole	Eddie Lyons
Margery (his wife)	Beatrice La Plante
Father Starr	Fred Gamble
Angelica Starr	Daisy Robinson
Sam Sorely	Earl Martin
Harry Starr	Jack Byron
Helen	Maude Wayne

Story by Edgar Franklin.
Scenario by C. B. Headley.
Directed by Lyons and Moran.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Fixed By George," the sprightly comedy being presented at the ———— theatre with Lyons and Moran as the star players, should afford the spectator a hearty laugh and prove a warning against the all too prevalent habit some people have of meddling in affairs that do not concern them.

George attempts to be a fixer in this comedy but the way he "fixes it," gets a score of people in trouble causing many laughable and embarrassing situations.

The stars are said never to have had more congenial roles in their career as Dr. Poole and his meddlesome friend George, and they are supported by four, just think of it, leading ladies, Hazel Howell, Beatrice La Plante, Daisy Robinson and Maude Wayne.

This frolicsome farce was written by Edgar Franklin, who has written other successful farces for Lyons and Moran, among which are "Everything But the Truth," and "Once A Plumber."

The picture has been given an excellent production by the stars and has a splendid cast of farceurs.

PROGRAM READER

Have you ever met the fellow who is always willing to "fix it" for you? That's the sort of a character portrayed by Lee Moran in the latest Lyons and Moran Universal feature which is announced ———— at the ———— theatre.

Edgar Franklin, who is also the author of other Lyons and Moran comedies, among which are "Everything But the Truth" and "Once a Plumber," has written this frolicsome farce in such a way that the principal characters are concerned in many farce comedy situations.

It is ludicrous indeed when George, played by Lee Moran, one of those well meaning meddlers who is always interesting himself in the affairs of other people and who is always volunteering to "fix it," gets a score of people in trouble, causing many laughable and embarrassing situations.

The picture has been given an excellent production by Lyons and Moran and has a splendid supporting cast among whom are Hazel Howell, Beatrice La Plante, Fred Gamble, Daisy Robinson, Earle Martin, Jack Byron and Maude Wayne.

SUGGESTIONS

If your patrons are partial to farce comedies, here's one that will surely interest them.

Now this production won't send them into ecstasies, but it will give them good entertainment and enough amusement to send them home in good humor.

Play Lyons and Moran up strongly and run as many stories of the play as you can, in your newspapers.

The plot of the story is rather original and should attract attention, as most humans have come in contact with the meddler and know the destruction he has caused.

CATCH LINES

He said he could fix it. And he did but not in the way they wanted him to. See Lyons and Moran in their latest Universal comedy, "Fixed by George."

See Lyons and Moran in their latest Universal comedy, "Fixed By George." It will certainly amuse you.

He was just one of those well meaning meddlers who is always interested in other people's affairs. See the havoc he created among a score of people causing many laughable and embarrassing situations. It will be shown at the ———— theatre. The title is "Fixed By George" and the stars are Lyons and Moran.

The star constituted the highest drawing card." "Held feature over for second week to big business. We regard it as Wallace Reid's best picture." "One of the best Reid pictures and a better puller than 'Sick Abed.' Fans remarked on better appearance of star without feminine make-up and mannerisms revealed in 'Sick Abed.'" "A very good production to extra big and big business for two days." "The best picture Reid has turned out this year. Just packed them in. Looks like some fine advertising was slipped over in this one for a certain brand of truck. Local dealers capitalized on it by putting one of the trucks on the street with mammoth signs on it informing the public that we would show them what the brutes could do." "Up to the usual Wallace Reid standard and drew big crowds."

"Idols of Clay"

with

By Ouida Bergere.

A Paramount Picture

A woman who had seen her idols turn to clay, and in bitterness had allowed herself, too, to fall from her soul's pedestal —

And a man who had come to hate all he once prized —

These two met, struggled, sank, and rose again — to find that when the clay idols have fallen the real gods arrive

Their story makes a profound and passionate drama, staged upon colorful backgrounds, with that magnificence that George Fitzmaurice always puts into his productions.

A Paramount Picture

WISH you were seventeen again? Conrad did—and tried to get back.

But the woman who had broken his heart—long ago—told him:

"There is no road back to seventeen."

And the wisp of a girl he used to love now weighed two hundred pounds!

Conrad's Quest is funny and pathetic and vastly human.

The novel was the most talked-about book of the year. And with Tom Meighan, the Good Luck Star, in his most delightful role, it will be one of the season's big money makers.

THE successful exhibitor knows that the name Paramount is a symbol of supremacy.

He knows that millions of dollars have been spent in national advertising, educating the public to look for the name Paramount, and to attend the theatre that shows Paramount Pictures.

And he knows he is throwing away this million dollar advertising value if he fails to include, in his newspaper advertising, in his lobby, and in his programs the fact that his theatre shows the best pictures the market affords—

MARK STRAND THEATRE

Mitchel H. Mark President and General Manager

Sept. 28, 1920.

Mr. C. C. Burr,
President, Master Films, Inc.,
133 West 44th St.,
New York City.

My dear Mr. Burr:

It is easier to find a good feature picture nowadays than it is to come across a comedy that hasn't been built along the same lines that they have been making them for years. That is why I am writing you this letter. Your first Torchy comedy was so different, so full of the human stuff that digs up the buried laughs, that I want to suggest that the originality be continued in the ones to come.

"Torchy Comes Through" surely did come through for the Brooklyn Strand. I went over "easy". We like it, and the crowds seemed to like it even better. I certainly shall arrange to book the Torchy comedies to follow, if you can put the same amount of joy material in them.

It might spur you and your workers on to read a letter we got from a satisfied patron- H. M. White, 314 New York Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. Here it is:

"Last night I saw the best motion picture comedy I have ever seen. It was 'Torchy Comes Through'. Allow me to compliment you upon this production.

"This picture is indeed a healthy exaggeration of our modern office boy, full of wit and vigor. The effect on the audience was exhilarating. Everyone seemed to be a child again. One boy with an elderly man sat near me, and while the boy rooted, as one would at a ball game, the man tried to appear dignified, but failed dismally."

With best wishes for a continuance of high class Torchy comedies, I am

Cordially,

They are typically American, brimful of spontaneous humor that gives your audiences NEW laughs, that makes them leave the theatre feeling that they have had more than their share of the fun.

VOL. 1, NO. 12 EXPLOITATION SECTION

NEAL HART—AMERICA'S "PAL"

FEW men have had the experience with the West that Neal Hart has.

It is this familiarity with the things of the outdoors and the Great West that gives Neal Hart his present following. He portrays a type of American manhood that is looked upon with respect and affection universally. He is natural—not "stagey."

The people have taken Neal Hart into their hearts because they recognize that he is the "real thing" he represents on the screen—a man of kindly impulses, human tolerance and clean habits, a despiser of cheats and shams and miraculously quick with a six-shooter or a wallop of his brawny arm when "in action."

Neal Hart is something more than a motion picture star—he is America's Pal of the Screen.

Hart was born in New York State. He is a graduate of Bucknell University, where he was a star halfback on his college football team. After graduation, he went west and began the career that eventually lured him before the motion picture camera.

Neal Hart's knowledge of horses and his skill in handling them won him the responsible post of driver of the stage that ran from Fort Pierre, South Dakota, to Rapid City. He punched cows two years on the Sioux Reservation at the mouth of the Cheyenne River.

Later he became foreman of the "77" ranch in Converse county, Wyoming, and his advancement to the post of secretary and ranch manager of the biggest cattle ranch in the state, the "O. R. C. Ranch," followed.

He was made a deputy sheriff of Converse County, and this began his experience as an official of the law. He was city marshall of Manville, Wyo., for two years, following which he became brand inspector for the state.

In 1911 Neal Hart became quite famous as the man who broke up a notorious band of cattle rustlers in Wyoming who had been responsible for much havoc and terrorizing of the ranchers in that country.

Hart's first connection with the show business was with the "101" Wild West Show, where he was billed as a bucking horse rider. He was selected for his horsemanship to appear in a film produced for government purposes during the war, and was promptly "discovered" and engaged for regular motion picture work.

Today, heading his own company, producing feature length pictures under the most perfect conditions that can be provided, playing the parts that he has acted in grim earnest in real life, Neal Hart is doing the most distinctive work of his career.

HOLLYWOOD IS NOW SCENE OF HART AND WHITE PRODUCTION

Both Units Housed Under One Roof at Francis Ford Studios

Production of the releasing units handled by Independent Films is progressing merrily in Hollywood, where the Neal Hart feature unit and the Leo White comedy unit have been comfortably housed under one roof at the Francis Ford studios on Sunset Boulevard near Gower.

This location is the center of a district wherein are located some of the biggest and most famous motion picture studios in the world. The Lasky plant and the Christie studio are both within a stone's throw of Francis Ford's big plant, and within a radius of a few blocks are to be found Fox, Metro, Brunton, Robertson-Cole, the Hollywood Studios and many smaller plants.

While the Ford Studios will be used as administration and production headquarters, Pinnacle has retained control of its Glendale studio and will make use of it from time to time as needed. The outdoor sets and streets at Glendale in particular will be used constantly, as will the splendid "locations" which are so numerous in the Verdugo Hills around Glendale.

With the outdoor sets which are available at the Ford Studios also, together with the generous dark stage space, the modern lighting equipment and the efficient system in force for the handling of labor, Pinnacle's production activities have already acquired a surprising degree of speed and both Neal Hart and Leo White are ahead on their respective schedules.

BOY! PLEASE PAGE THE EXHIBITOR WHO WANTS QUICK ACTION

Tip Him to Advertise the Aurora Borealis When He Runs "Skyfire"

What is the aurora borealis?

Quick! The answer. Make it snappy!

What causes that glimmering, shimmering, mysterious glow in the northern skies? And when did you happen to see it last?

If you thought you'd have a chance to observe the Northern Lights tonight, would you wait up and keep your eyes open?

There you are, Mr. Exhibitor.

There's your little tip on the biggest bet you've ever had in the way of exploitation. The Neal Hart picture "Skyfire" shows the aurora borealis as it was never shown before. The photos show it—the posters show it—the story is founded on it. It's the very life of the production.

That is why "Skyfire" is going to prove the biggest money-getter you've had in recent times. That's why "Skyfire" is going to be the easiest picture to advertise you ever tackled.

Just talk about the aurora, the Northern Lights. The press sheet gives you a thousand angles on it—but you've already gotten the idea. Tie-ups and teaser campaigns extraordinary will be child's play on this.

You talk aurora borealis—and the public will do the rest.

The beautiful part about it is that, no kidding, the picture is a darb, a knockout, a riot and a ketchum-big-applause that you'll play back for repeat dates by request.

NAMER OF PULLMAN CARS HAS NOTHING ON TITLER OF COMEDIES

Pinnacle Comedies are going to be rich in titles as well as rich in guffaws.

From the West Coast comes news that the classic, symmetrical, euphonious and otherwise excellent title chosen for the current jazzy two-reeler in the Leo White series is nothing else than—

"RAZZIN' THE JAZZ."

Does that take you back to the days of "Ballin' the Jack" or not? Can you do business with that title? We'll so asseverate!

HART'S THIRD WILL BE "DANGER VALLEY"

A few weeks ago "Land of Living Death" was announced as the title of the third Neal Hart release. This title met with a poor reception among exchange men and exhibitors, who considered it altogether too gruesome and suggestive of unpleasant things.

For this reason, the picture has been renamed "Danger Valley."

This title possesses advertisability, and also conveys a good idea of the character of the production. A great many of the exteriors for this picture are being shot in the famous Death Valley district of the Mojave desert.

Every American visitor to Monte Carlo—and there have been millions—knows his Café de Paris—its thousand flashing reflections of life a la mode, its little tables with their gay parties, its shining dome 36 feet in diameter, its long line of plate glass windows—48 in all—each 12 feet high and 4 feet wide. Well, gentlemen—it's all here —reproduced by Von Stroheim in exact replica down to the last button on the portier's waistcoat. And in this same Café, which every good American hopes to revisit some day, takes place a sequence of dramatic action which our good American's wife will not soon forget.

Desperate is the word for her blazing eyes. Trapped—you read it in her racing thoughts. But Never give up is in every cat-like move as she leaps from her bed at the ominous rap on the door. Some thriller? You said it! "OUTSIDE THE LAW" is "The Wildcat of Paris"—"Pretty Smooth"—and "The Virgin of Stamboul" all rolled into one—a whirling, rushing drama of desperate work after dark, with a crook's fortune for the prize—exactly the kind of amazing picture that electrifying PRISCILLA DEAN can play better than any other actress in the whole wide world. Supported by Wheeler Oakman, Lon Chaney, the best "bad man" ever seen on the screen, E. A. Warren, Ralph Lewis, and a great company of talented players.

The above, with appropriate copy where the testimonial now is, is a sample of the twenty-three newspaper ads available for this huge success. See them all at your Universal Exchange when you book.

The Biggest Heart-picture of the Generation

"IT is a wonderful thing—a Mother! Other folks can love you but only your Mother understands. She works for you, looks after you, loves you, forgives you anything you may do, understands you. And then the only bad thing she ever does to you is to die and leave you."

"ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN," says Exhibitors Herald, "is a success. 'ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN' is human through and through. 'ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN' is a better picture than either 'The Heart of Humanity' or 'The Right to Happiness,' because it is so true to life."

Some Speed!

You're always first if you show

WE'VE talked a lot about International News Service Speed and International Enterprise in the past two years—but never has there been a clearer case of International superiority in these two things than was shown on the screen on Tuesday night last in many cities and, at the latest, on Wednesday and Thursday in cities and towns further from the distributing point. If you were the holder of a contract with International you were able to show the winners in a SPECIAL REEL that put it all over anything of its kind. And you showed your audiences your Speed and your Enterprise at not one cent's extra cost for this record-smashing news feature. That's real service—from us to you and from you to them—and—we say it again—at not one cent's extra cost. If you haven't an International contract, it's up to you to protect your own interests by signing on the dotted line—today.

What R. William Neill Brings to Realart Productions

ABILITY — He brings to his productions one hundred per cent. story-power, for in addition to being a director, he is playwright and actor as well.

EXPERIENCE — He brings a record of achievement which is surpassed by few living directors. Among the distinguished screen artists whom he has directed are: Constance Talmadge, Norma Talmadge, Lila Lee, Catherine Calvert and Dorothy Dalton.

ENTERTAINMENT — He brings to his pictures the maximum of entertainment, for with him "the story is the thing." He is exactly the man to reveal the irrepressible spirits of CONSTANCE BINNEY, in her latest picture "SOMETHING DIFFERENT"

ARTISTRY — He brings a rare technique and imaginative power to the pictures he directs. Out of the romantic settings of "SOMETHING DIFFERENT" he has made a masterpiece.

BRILLIANT DIRECTION IS ONLY ONE OF THE QUALITIES WHICH DISTINGUISH REALART STAR FRANCHISE PRODUCTIONS.

The Greatest Scene Ever Filmed!

JUST two men facing each other across a narrow table! And yet, here is without doubt the most dramatic and powerful scene ever reproduced upon a strip of gelatine. For one man, almost mad, after cankerous months of suspicion and distrust, was accusing his dearest friend of life's basest treachery—of robbing him of his wife.

Power? Drama? Spectacle? Irresistible appeal? "THE FURNACE" has all of these, because it is real life! It grips the heart of an audience. It meets every test which a picture must pass. It means crowds for every box-office where it is booked.

Before a picture comes to the screen of the Rivoli Theatre it is very carefully weighed in the balance. If the Rivoli plays it, it means something!

As Strong a First-Run Attraction as Has Ever Been Produced

All the "Big Fellows" Have Rushed to Book It—They Know a Money-Maker When They See One!

One of the peculiarities of the Motion Picture Industry is this: Long before a really "big" picture is completed, — even before the last scenes have been "shot", — exhibitors in every corner of the United States know all about it. It's a sort of "Underground Wireless."

"Down Home" was "sold" long before it was released. Showmen everywhere know that it is almost impossible for Irvin V. Willat — he made "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface," as well as dozens of others — to turn out anything but a worth-while picture.

"Down Home" is a distinct advance over anything Mr. Willat has done before.

YOU PRODUCERS OF FILMS

STUDY the map on the opposite page carefully and you will find that no other city, outside Los Angeles and New York, is better situated and offers more locations, or is within easier reach of more locations than the city of Jacksonville, Florida. If so let us reason together and make deductions:

Is it not the truth that

More or less all producers must go west or south for winter and spring work.

that

Los Angeles now has more producing companies than is good for the industry and also good for the city: Practically speaking you have overrun and overshot the town. Too much of even a good thing is too much and you know it.

that

The industry is growing and you must branch out to another center and that center is bound to be the south.

that

A producing center 30 hours from New York is more convenient and far less expensive than one a 100 hours away.

that

As long as New York will be the film market of the country and all the producing cannot be done there owing to climatic conditions and scenery the closer you establish such an additional center of production the better for the industry.

that

If you could step off the Florida and New York Special one day after you boarded said train in the Pennsylvania Station, land your company in a studio with the equipment of a Universal City or a Brunton Plant, hang around a few days to see them started, then get back to Broadway, all within a week, would this be more convenient and would it be a saving in time and money ?

If you could own a certain unit of such a plant, or own stock in it, or owned a one-fourth or a one-third or a half interest, would it pay you to have winter headquarters there and send your company down ?

IS NOT SUCH A PLANT BADLY NEEDED BY NORTHERN PRODUCERS AND THERE BEING NO COMPETITION, AS IN THE WEST, WOULD NOT SUCH AN ESTABLISHMENT BE A GOOD INVESTMENT ALL ROUND? ? ? ? ? ?

JACKSONVILLE stands ready to cooperate financially and otherwise with reputable producers to build such a plant. A body of five men composed of Jacksonville's foremost citizens have taken their coats off and are working like Trojans at this end of the line to put this thing over. These men have worked up enthusiasm here, but they need the co-operation of the Producers to make such a cooperative plant a success.

THE EXHIBITOR NOT TO BE TRUSTED!!

The above assertion was made to me by one of the prominent Executives of one of "The Leading Producers and Distributors" of the industry, he furthermore went on to state:—"Kelly, you're crazy, your free Distribution Plan will cost you over a Million Dollars, and even if you have the greatest Productions in the world, every exhibitor whom you serve on Free Distribution will "Quit you Cold" when the FIVE WEEKS FREE SERVICE is over. They are all crooked and simply desire to take advantage of you, and then laugh at you. We have over a Million Dollars up on deposits, and if it were not for these deposits moneys, we would be broke, unless you DEMAND advance deposits, you'll never get over, as the exhibitors won't pay their honest debts unless you MAKE THEM by demanding payments in advance."

My Friends the Exhibitors of the United States—WE BELIEVE YOU ARE SQUARE!!!

You can imagine a statement of this kind coming from a man who has been depending upon the exhibitor, for many years, for his livelihood, and why? You also can realize that you have been paying your good money out for many years to men, who honestly believe that you are NOT HONEST, do you realize that you have been financing and supporting these men with Advance Deposits. It is a crime to think that our Great Industry, one of the largest in existence, whose Government Report last year showed an income of nearly EIGHT HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS should be governed and presided over by men who refuse to have faith in their customers.

HOWEVER—

BETTER TIMES ARE COMING, AND WE'LL HELP YOU STAMP OUT THESE "HARD SHELLS" of the "Old School" who do not believe in your integrity. Providing you will support us. (Not Financially. We have $6,000,000.00 to lose in order to prove you are honest men, and are willing to pay your debts for PICTURES you use), but you must support us Morally. Write us to-day and we'll tell you how you can do this.

We are going to make REAL PICTURES with STARS that will appeal to your patrons, we invite suggestions, we are human beings and believe in the old adage of "Live and let live," the working force of this company have had years of experience in knowing what the public wants, not only the public of N. Y. City but the folks who live in Winchester, Idaho, Abeline, Tex. and Monroe, La. We have lived many years in "The Sticks," we have owned our own shows in towns from 5,000 to 75,000 people, therefore WE KNOW JUST WHAT WE ARE DOING!!!!!!

AN APOLOGY TO THE EXHIBITORS BY "SMILING JIMMY" KELLY

A slight apology is due to each and every one of our FOUR THOUSAND EXHIBITOR SUBSCRIBERS, who have applied for and accepted our "FIVE WEEKS FREE SERVICE DEMONSTRATION" regarding the time for our initial release, and my only excuse, which is a good one, is that we DO NOT INTEND TO RELEASE ANYTHING until we are dead sure that it is ONE HUNDRED PER CENT PERFECT, therefore when we do announce to you fourteen days in advance of our first release, you will know that you are going to have something that will "Open your Eyes." Also we have signed up four new stars and are hard at work on our comedy releases. We will do our best to start releasing by December 1st. However no promises until we are positive.

Mack Sennett

It's a Mack Sennett production, a big special feature in 5 parts.

It's something more than a slapstick.

The action is fast and furious, with fun for everyone.

But in addition there is a subtle comedy vein that lifts it way above the ordinary slapstick.

It features those inimitable fun makers, Charles Murray, Phyllis Haver and Marie Provost.

Banishing Empty Seats!

THE doctor who has more patients than he can properly attend to would do well to go into partnership with an undertaker,—but the exhibitor whose auditorium has far more seats in it than he can keep filled is predestined to associate himself with a lawyer who specializes in bankruptcy proceedings!

The sad part of the matter is that those empty seats do not depend upon the program that the exhibitor selects. They depend upon the posters that some one else selects for him. If such posters prove to be mediocre ones the empty seats increase. If they are RITCHEY posters the empty seats vanish. In other words his ticket sales depend more upon his posters than they do upon his program. But he is always charged for the best posters attainable. He gets the best only when he gets RITCHEY posters.

The RITCHEY poster is as fine a poster as it is humanly possible to make. It is the finished product of the greatest poster advertising experts in the world. The one thing striven for by these men is the creation of a genuine ticket-selling poster. That such an end is attained is testified to by the degree of the box office receipts that they attain.

Motion Picture News

VOL. XXII NOVEMBER 6, 1920 No. XX

The Editor's Viewpoint

On the Wrong Trail

WE have all due respect for Lord Northcliffe as a great newspaper publisher. We would have added respect if he understood motion pictures.

It has always seemed to us that big newspapers, these days, could well afford to watch the evolution of the motion picture with a very keen and liberal mind. Most of them are so engaged we believe. It is somewhat astounding to see the Northcliffe press of London indulging in what must be construed as "stunt" tactics, determinedly attacking American pictures and exploiting British productions with what any picture man must candidly say is large and false praise.

May we remind the Northcliff press that the making and selling of pictures is strictly an economic matter. Newspaper propaganda, over-advertising, etc., have little and only temporary effect upon the laws of supply and demand.

If American pictures now being shown in Great Britain are largely wrong—if, for instance, they are too old—the fault lies with the British rental system. It has nothing to do with present American production.

As to British pictures in America may we say again that there is not—so far as we know—one individual in the ranks of the entire American industry who cares or even thinks about a picture's source so far as a country is concerned. This market is wide open. But it's a market—like any other market. There's one and only one way to enter it and that is with a supply of something for which a demand may be created. That means good pictures plus good advertising—both good for this particular market.

That's all!

And the very same and simple law applies equally to American pictures in the British market.

Signs of Getting Together

WE are deeply pleased to note that the Exhibitors' League and the National Association propose to work together hereafter upon those large matters that concern the welfare of the entire industry.

Among the excellent ideas out of which grew the National Association of the Industry was the belief that it could bring together exhibitors, distributors and producers to the end of solving their serious commercial problems. The writer was one of those who held the belief.

We have long since concluded that it was a theory only.

There is no reason whatsoever, however, why the three branches cannot unite, through their respective committees, upon those non-commercial situations which seriously concern the industry at large. We refer to adverse legislation Americanization, etc.

There is every reason, on the other hand, why the three branches should unite, and solidly so, on these highly important matters.

We can neither protect nor promote the picture and its industry except through that unity that speaks with the voice of undivided power and interest.

It can be done, it must be done, and it now looks as though it will be done. And the hope of it is about the best sign we know of, of the industry's present health and progress.

Worth a Trial?

A SPECIAL representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, now making an investigation of exhibiting conditions in New England offers the following scheme to eliminate the deposit evil:

Let the exhibitor's own bank be made his agent—to hold out of his account (while still paying interest to him) such money as the distributor may demand as a deposit.

Let the bank pass upon evidence as to fulfillment of both sides of the contract.

Respectfully submitted.

Around the Clock with Wm. A. Johnston

Jesse Lasky. Makes momentous announcement and jumps commuters' express to Los Angeles for three months' sojourn. Famous Players-Lasky proposes to make all-star pictures, using any or all of Famous stars and selecting stars to fit roles—and because they fit roles. Authors, directors, playwrights, too, will combine efforts in one huge stock company. Daring idea. Regarded as body blow to star system. Takes resources. Matter of fact Famous has been tilling soil for this move for some time—at least eighteen months. Witness the De Mille productions—and their success. Witness "The Miracle Man" and "Humoresque," non-star pictures. Witness George Melford's "Behold My Wife" at the Rivoli and Rialto. The next Fitzmaurice picture will be non-star. Looks like revolutionary move. Influence of it cannot help but be felt generally.

George K. Spoor. Who put the S into and eliminated the A in Essanay. So wealthy he doesn't have to work: but can't quit—the film business, anyway. Here in New York installing his automatic printing machines at Famous Players-Lasky Long Island City studios. Can't talk of anything, however, but his new Binocular Natural Vision pictures. Been working eight years—six too many, he says—to catch that elusive bird called "stereoscopic." Has caught and caged it; but doesn't call them stereoscopic, just natural vision pictures. Test pictures all ready. Soon to be shown. Pictures are startlingly different, says G. K. Big thing. Making few more lens adjustments and then—watch for future announcement.

Gerome Brush. Eminent young sculptor and artist. Luncheon with him at Country Club where dignified graybeards slap him on the back. Coming into film business. Says it's the new medium of art expression. Has plans, wonderful, and, he says, commercially practical. Most striking conviction ever had that the picture of today is a baby (new way of avoiding "infancy" bromide).

William Fox. Met on golf links—going over the hills to the Clubhouse. Likes to talk about "Over the Hill." Says picture has so great a mission and is fulfilling it so splendidly that he has ceased to think of its commercial side. Is destined to remind all children, young, middle-aged, old, of their mothers. Agree with him. Believe this picture has the greatest heart of all pictures ever made. It will do more for mothers than all the preachments, all the talk and printed matter ever consecrated to this greatest cause. It will reflect brilliant credit upon the motion picture. But, Mr. Fox, we hate to see that line in your New York advertising which says that "Over the Hill" won't be shown at neighborhood theatres till 1922. We hope that won't be necessary. If the motion picture is the proper vehicle of so great a message then the motion picture theatre is the proper place for it. And the millions of us who might do more for our mothers need the picture—badly—now.

Wm. Hughes Clarke. Investment man of the higher type. Wants to know if there's a place in the business for hard-boiled dollars. Gave him hour's talk on economics of industry. No change. Our pet subject. Good type of man, Mr. Clarke. May hear from him in the business.

Dee Robinson. Of Peoria, Ill. Managing Director of Peoria's new theatre beautiful, the Madison. Cost $500,000. Also runs half dozen other picture houses in Peoria. One of the few men who started in Nickelodeon days and still keeps ahead of the procession. Man we're proud to call an old friend. Quiet, modest, straight-from-the-shoulder type; not only a showman but a business man. Solid, substantial, successful.

C. Francis Jenkins. Picture in last Sunday's New York Tribune. Shows C. Francis in his own hydroplane, of which he is pilot, fishing for perch midstream of Potomac. Even shows fish caught—we assume caught. Doesn't surprise us. Wouldn't be surprised to see Mr. Jenkins flying to Mars. Never saw him before, however, without a projection machine. You know C. Francis Jenkins. If not, you don't know motion picture history. Jenkins of Armat—Jenkins patent, basic patent of all projection apparatus. Red-headed Hoosier. Restless inventor—and surprising combination—a keen business man.

R. H. Cochrane. Pretty well established as the best advertising man in the field—in addition to being Vice-President of Universal. Now an economist. Found big leaks—unnecessary wastage—in Universal laboratories at Fort Lee, which print and develop 2,000,000 feet per week. Told the force he would give them 50 per cent of all they saved. Organized regular Congress, making foremen comprise Senate and the other workers a House of Representatives. Plan in effect some time now. It works. Universal is saving couple of thousand a week and employees highly enthusiastic over their share.

Why not extend plan to Universal City, Mr. Cochrane? Why not to all studios? Got to cut down waste—this year.

Mark Klaw. Has always disliked pictures. Now he's an enthusiast. Has just purchased the American rights to "J'Accuse," a picture of French make which has had big runs and much comment in London and Continental capitals. So we'll see "J'Accuse" on Broadway this winter. Shuberts, too, are greatly interested in pictures—more so now than ever before. May swing a couple of their five new theatres into long run picture theatres. Looks like the gap between the stage and pictures is being rapidly bridged over. New York will see a lot of long run pictures this season and, maybe, some theatres devoted permanently to long run features.

John C. Freund. Publisher and editor of Musical America and Musical Trade. One of most commanding and interesting figures in New York. Delightful personality. Receives great musical lights, including even Caruso, and genially lectures them, like school children. Grabs them by shoulders and tells them they're rotten—when they are. They like it. Wonder how our noble directors would take Mr. Freund's cold water cure. Got to wondering how many director friends we'd have, if we were as blunt and sincere. Put the question to Mr. Freund—and got the best insight on art and its publishing field that ever had. "Make 'em like it," concluded Mr. Freund.

He is enthusiastic over our campaign on the new music and the picture. Says he's known right along that the picture theatre is destined to be the concert theatre of the future.

A deal has just been completed whereby Mack Sennett and A. H. Woods have entered into an arrangement for Woods to produce five musical productions, one each year, which will be written by Mr. Sennett. This was announced yesterday by E. M. Ascher, Mr. Sennett's representative, who has been in New York for the past three months carrying on negotiations with Mr. Woods. After the Broadway presentations, the plays will be filmed at the Sennett Studios and released through the Associated Producers.

The staging of the shows will be on an elaborate scale, it is stated, and there will be a book and appropriate music. Headline acts will also be injected into the productions, and in all probability, the scenes will be of a Los Angeles locale.

While the famous Sennett Bathing Girls will not be a feature, a bevy of California beauties will be brought on from the Coast as a background.

The first of the series will be presented in the very near future, and Mr. Woods leaves for the Coast within two weeks to confer with Mr. Sennett.

Personalities

Off-Hand Introductions by Robert E. Welsh

Happy Golucky has secured an encore. Not that he deserved it—but Happy is too old in the show game to neglect even the applause of the ushers. In other words, if it were not for our assistants and the office boys, where would Happy—and a lot of us—ever get our chance to develop a swell head? And, just as every dog has his day, so should every cranium have its opportunity to blow up. After which Happy will burst forth as follows:

BOYS, give me one more week at this page and I'll have the editor searching around for another alibi for his salary check. If he loses this "Personality" hokum he'll be up against it. But he can't blame me. I can't help being good.

Sometimes I'm too good. That's why I lost my job with "Why Change Your Nightie?"—that piece of four-ply junk and reinforced Roquefort I told you about last week. After I'd sold all the country on that picture with the exception of forty-four states and two territories production stopped for lack of funds.

We didn't have the price of the nightie. And the leading lady refused to work in a garment made up of notes from the state right buyers. Said there were too many holes in I. O. U.

Some awful cynics in this picture game. I'm getting that way myself. Give me thirty seconds in a kettle and I'll come out as hard-boiled as Joe Dannenberg. That's concrete. No yoke.

BUT I'm not going to spend all this page talking about myself. It takes too much effort to make the subject interesting. Let's turn to something else.

Right on top of the editor's desk is a ticket to Paterson, New Jersey, and an invitation to the wedding of Marie Josephine Magennis to Charles Edward Moyer. Don't know who that Edward guy is but if he's any relation to Charlie Moyer I'll say he has his nerve with him.

Imagine it! Lots of us press agent ginks have installed sweet little time-clocks in our homes, but we committed the crime before we entered the film fracas. Now we're serving sentence. At any rate, we can't be accused of malice aforethought.

But Charlie steps in with his eyes wide open.

I may save him, though. Next time I pay up my back dues in the A. M. P. A. I'm going to make a motion that the marriage ritual for members be changed to read, "Love, honor, obey—and smile sweetly when hubby phones, 'Sorry, dearie, I'll have to stay down town tonight to see a picture in the projection room; print just arrived from the Coast; boss wants to see it right away; yes, I know he's an old crab and my raise is long overdue, but you know how it is; no, I won't get dinner, better put something in the oven; right in our own projection room, dearie; I won't have to wander a block among the bright lights of Broadway; about ten-thirty or eleven; yes, yes, yes, I'll come straight home.'"

Wouldn't it help, boys? Honest, wouldn't it?

But here's good luck to Charlie, anyway. From the heart, old top!

NEXT on the editor's desk is a Goldwyn folder that blew in under two cent postage. Must be good if it escaped this waste-basket that keeps snapping at my elbow. Guess I'll look it over. Maybe they copped some of my stuff.

Say, it is a beaut! If Betty Compson isn't decorating every lobby frame in America on the strength of that poster it's simply because the laboratory fell down on the prints. It unfolds and unfolds and unfolds — with a sales message on each fold—and then a litho that takes your breath away.

I ain't highbrow enough to know many of the fellows over in that Goldwyn shop, but I'll say they're turning out corking work.

Making it harder every day for us sawdust eaters. Wonder if Ringling would remember my name?

HERE'S a note from the editor says I got to mention Milt Hoffman. Just got back from London, where he's started the Famous Players' British studios off.

Shucks, I remember that guy when he was with World Film. I remember that guy when——

Oh, rats, the editor says I'm forgetting my job and talking too much like a press agent. My make-up is O. K., but I'm out of focus.

Well, the editor says he and all the rest of the regular guys are glad to see Milt back with the same old smile and no accent. He says that Milt has put through so many man-sized jobs that we ought to keep our eyes open for a big surprise one of these days. You are tipped.

"He and all the rest of the regular guys." I suppose a feller must get to like himself on this blue-pencil job.

He don't never show no signs of liking anybody else.

THIS job of confining your brilliance to one page was never meant for a press agent. Here my space is almost used up and this editor guy's note-book has a dozen names in it yet.

He wants me to say something about Walter Greene, who has announced his new distributing company. And about Harry Crandall's production plans. Shucks, if I only had space enough I could sell myself a job with one of those ginks. But what can I do in a few inches?

Maybe they'll read this page, though, and remember what good work I did on "Why Change Your Nightie?" Especially that tie-up with the chemise manufacturer which would have been great stuff only all the buyers started complaining they didn't want no costume pictures.

Anyhow, I'll say both those two fellows, Greene and Crandall, would be worth working for. Both white men clear through, and one hundred per cent alive. That Greene guy has been silent so long he must have some whaling big propositions up his sleeve.

As for Crandall. Say, the first time I saw that little dynamo in the dinky office over Crandall's theatre, Washington, I says, "There's a guy who's too fast to be a comer, he's a 'go-getter on his way.'"

I was trying to sell him a picture that night. And he must be good.

Because he didn't buy.

DON'T know whether I told you that I got a temporary job this week after "Why Change Your Nightie?" went to bed. I'm promoting a guy who's got a brand new idea for a big state right special.

He's gonna make a feature with a race track scene in the first reel, an ice jam at Hot Springs in the second, a county fair in the third, a corset-fitting shop in the fourth, a faith healer in the fifth and a grand ball room in the sixth.

It looks sure-fire. We got nearly all the money, too. I ought to make a million next year. I'm all set. I told you I'd put over a big one some day.

But if you should hear of something good and fairly permanent you might let me know. Course I ain't exactly interested just now. But you know how it is.

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, who was foremost among picture men working for the election of Senator Harding to the presidency, was quick to wire happily-worded congratulations on receipt of news of the Republican landslide. His telegram follows:

George Christian
Secretary to Senator Harding
Marion, Ohio

The Harding and Coolidge Motion Picture Colony is very happy today because the greatest of all producers, Uncle Sam, has shown such splendid judgment and foresight in signing for Miss Liberty a most popular leading man for the next four years.

Anti-Sunday Movie Fight Opens in Oklahoma

The Protestant clergy of Oklahoma City, representing the Ministerial Alliance, placed its official stamp of disapproval on Sunday movies at its last meeting. The first gun in what promises to be a long fight for existence on the part of Sunday amusements was fired when the ministers passed a formal resolution to inaugurate a state-wide campaign against Sunday movies and vaudeville shows and agreed to present the question to all state denominational conferences held this fall for indorsement.

The ultimate aim of the ministers is to prevail upon the state legislature to pass a blue law, it was pointed out at the meeting. In the meantime an effort will be made to swing public opinion and sentiment in favor of such legislation, by getting all ministers in the state to preach against Sunday amusements to their congregations.

Of those present, including representatives from practically all other Protestant denominations in the city, with one or two exceptions, none objected to the passage of the resolution.

The Oklahoma City theatre-owners issued an invitation to meet the ministers in establishing a blue Sunday in Oklahoma City, and they stated that they had no objections to closing on Sundays, provided they were not discriminated against.

Louis B. Mayer Announces Production Plans

In a statement issued before his departure for Los Angeles, Louis B. Mayer spoke briefly of his production plans and announced that Anita Stewart will shortly start work on "The Tornado" under the direction of Edwin Carewe. Mr. Mayer said:

"My plans and special productions which I have in view will positively assure exhibitors of the highest grade productions that brains and capital combined can produce; and regardless of the fact that my productions in the past have, as I have been told by numerous exhibitors, been very consistent, I feel highly elated over what I will place on the market in the future, as I am figuring on a common-sense basis that the exhibitor who presents a Louis B. Mayer production can be assured beforehand of his complete satisfaction. I shall spare no expense to make my productions the peer of all."

New Canadian Ad Manager for Famous Players

A wire from Seattle, Wash,, announces that Charles G. Branham has resigned as manager of the Liberty theatre. Cassard Moves Up

S. S. Cassard

Edward Earl, President of the Nicholas Power Company, announces the election of S. S. Cassard to the vice-presidency of that company, and this will be good news to friends of Cassard in all parts of the country.

Although Mr. Cassard is still a young man, he is one of the veterans of the film industry and has been with the Nicholas Power Company for many years. He has gone from department to department of the Nicholas Power Company, and in each position has won the approval of Mr. Earl, with whom he had been associated prior to his connection with the company.

Vice-President Cassard, who has been very successful as sales manager, is still "Dick" to his friends and business associates, and the entire trade will be glad to learn that he has again won a well deserved promotion.

Harry Rice Resigns from Universal Film Co.

Harry Rice has resigned his position with Universal Film Company, the resignation to take effect November 6th, after a two years' connection with Mr. Laemmle's organization. Mr. Rice states that while his relations with Universal have been pleasant, he, for some time, has desired to go into business for himself or to become more closely associated with production, and has resigned with that end in view. He has several openings under consideration but will make no decision until later on as he feels he has a vacation coming to him after working without intermission since he was fifteen years old.

Although a young man, Rice may be classed as a veteran moving picture man, as before joining the army he operated several theatres in Chicago and was one of the first eighteen operators in that city. He was also secretary and vice-president of the Arizona Film Company, which produced "Should She Obey?" one of the most successful pictures of that period.

During his connection with Universal he originated and put over Universal Holiday Season, one of the biggest selling successes Universal has achieved. Universal's Anniversary Season also was his idea. Among the big exploitation campaigns which he carried through with great success was the national exploitation of "The Great Air Robbery," which he followed up by a strong campaign in the Central West on his return from New York.

Arthur Brisbane Speaks at A.M.P.A. Luncheon

Arthur Brisbane, editor of the New York Evening Journal and the New York American, was the guest of honor at the regular Thursday luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, held October 28th, in New York.

Mr. Brisbane was introduced to the members assembled by Bert Adler, chairman of the Speakers Committee of the A. M. P. A. Mr. Brisbane responded to a call from the vice-chairman, and spoke at length regarding the possibilities of the motion picture as a force to generate good will.

Albany Office Publishes "Paramount Pep"

The Albany exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has just been opened as "a new link in the Paramount chain." The announcement is made in an attractive two-page circular, entitled "Paramount Pep," which is dedicated "to the Service of the Exhibitors" and conveys in brief language just what the Albany branch office proposes to do for the service of the exhibitors in its territory. The circular is receiving wide distribution in the Albany zone under the supervision of J. H. Seidelman, manager of the Albany branch office.

California Showmen Unite to Fight Sunday Closing

Forming a strong organization to successfully combat attempts of reformers to have Sunday closing of theatres made the law in California, the amusement interests of the northern part of that state have banded together in the "Allied Amusement Industries of California," and opened a suite of offices at 100 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco.

The association is composed of all the legitimate theatres, all vaudeville houses, film exchanges and a large majority of the motion picture theatres. Recent municipal and state legislation as well as Federal movements having as their object the curtailment of the amusement industry have resulted in the formation of this association.

Miss Frances E. Magill, secretary, is in charge at the newly opened offices. Irving Ackerman, of the Loew-Ackerman and Harris circuit, is chairman and the following comprise the executive advisory board: Eugene H. Roth, Col. C. E. Bray, Ralph Pincus and Ben H. Simpson. In addition to Mr. Roth of the California and Imperial theatres, Louis R. Greenfield of the Kahn and Greenfield circuit, M. L. Markowitz of the Strand theatre, L. R. Crook, head of the Turner and Dahnken circuit, and N. Herzog, an exhibitor, represent the picture theatres on the board. Film exchange representatives on the board are: Ben F. Simpson of Realart, H. G. Rosebaum of Famous Players, and Sam Y. Edwards of First National.

Exhibitor Organization Notes

Detroit Association Re-Elects Old Officers

At a meeting held last week by the Detroit Theatre Managers Association, an organization embracing the major theatres of Detroit and including all dramatic, vaudeville, burlesque and 80 per cent of the motion picture houses of the city, the old officers of the association were re-elected in entirety. George W. Trendle, secretary of the Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises, operating the Madison, the Adams and nine other theatres, was re-elected president; Richard Lawrence, manager of the Garrick, a dramatic house, vice president and secretary, and Charles Williams, manager of the Temple, a vaudeville house, treasurer. It is noted that the officers represent three distinct lines of theatrical amusement. The organization, one of the strongest of its kind in the United States, has grown to its present size from a nucleus of some four or five theatres. Mr. Trendle, at the time of his first election to the office he now holds, succeeded the well known Detroit and New York theatrical producer, B. C. Whitney.

No. Carolina Changes Date of Mid-Winter Meeting

The date of the mid-winter meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North Carolina has been changed from December 13-14-15 to December 5-6-7 at the Selwyn Hotel, Charlotte, N. C. The convention will meet informally at eight o'clock on the night of December 5th, and the first business meeting will be held on Monday morning. It will remain in session until Tuesday night, when the exhibitors will leave on a special train for Atlanta to attend the Southern Exposition of the Motion Picture Industry.

The change is said to have been made to accommodate the exhibitors of the state as well as the actors and actresses who are expected to stop over en route to Atlanta.

A wire from the Coast office of the Dial Film Company announces that T. Hayes Hunter has been engaged under contract to direct future productions made under the auspices of the Dial Film Company. Mr. Hunter's signature was obtained, it is stated, in the face of keen competition for his services by other producers. E. P. Hunziker, of Dial Film, closed negotiations for Hunter's services last month.

His initial production under the new contract will be an adaptation of Irving Bacheller's "Light in the Clearing." Some of the past pictures which Mr. Hunter directed are "Earthbound," "The Border Legion," "Desert Gold" and "The Cup of Fury."

Here's what G. A. Cross, of the Legitimate Theatre Corporation, Battle Creek, Mich., has to say about the service that the News renders:

"Gentlemen:

"There are two features in your publication which we want to compliment you upon. They are—What the Big Houses Say and Exhibitors' Own Box Office Report. These we find very beneficial and we hope that you will realize the benefit to the exhibitor and continue them both indefinitely."

And, adds Mr. Cross in a postscript: "I don't mean by any means that the other features are not fine; they are, indeed."

George W. Trendle, Secretary and General Manager of J. H. Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises, Detroit, Mich.

Break in Michigan Organization Appears Likely

A break in the ranks of the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association appears to be pending with the formation of the Independent Exhibitors' Association. About twenty-five Detroit exhibitors, mostly owners of small theatres, are in the new organization, with John Cutler, of the Lakewood theatre, president and Wally Baker, of the Jefferson theatre, secretary. The cause of the formation of the new association is their objection to the larger state one which, they claim, is dominated by larger exhibitors who are financially interested in one of the distributing exchanges.

Governor Sproul Denies Film "Slush Fund"

Rebukes Minister for Alleged Utterances About Reason for Changes in Censor Board

A CLEAN bill of health was given to the motion-picture interests of the country by no less an authority than Governor Sproul, of Pennsylvania, who not only denied the charge of a Philadelphia clergyman that they had contributed to the Republican campaign "slush" fund in consideration of the recent removal of Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer as a voting member of the Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture Censors, but also declared that they had in no way whatsoever influenced the change.

The Governor gave out a long and carefully prepared answer to a statement attributed to the Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, rector of St. Stephens' Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, and formerly president of the Interchurch Federation, in which the clergyman had been quoted as saying in effect that motion-picture manufacturers had made some large contributions to a campaign fund in consideration of the "shelving" of Dr. Oberholtzer.

The Governor made a sweeping denial of the charge and sharply rebuked the clergyman for his alleged utterance.

The clergyman, subsequent to the first statement attributed to him and prior to the statement issued by the governor, said that he did not make the charge "that money was paid into a slush fund to secure this action of the Governor in removing Dr. Oberholtzer, but that what I did say was that the Governor must have made this fatal change for some reason moved by some weighty consideration, and that they certainly were not moral considerations. I will add that they must be considerations of party welfare rather than of common weal. A party worker is being rewarded."

The facts of the situation are that Dr. Oberholtzer, who had generally been regarded as the one of the three members of the Pennsylvania Censorship Board whose rigid rulings have been responsible for wholesale cut-outs from films exhibited in this state, to what the manufacturers regard as the great detriment of many pictures, was transferred from the position of secretary of the board at a salary of $2,400 to a newly created post of director at $3,000, with no power to vote on the rejection or retention of a film or part of a film. His successor as the third member of the board, with voting power, is Henry Starr Richardson, who has been active in Philadelphia Republican politics and was formerly one of the Philadelphia county commissioners.

The text of Governor Sprout's reply, in which he rebuked the Rev. Dr. Grammer for his utterance is as follows:

"While it is not always wise nor in good taste to encourage that peculiar form of mental perversion which finds enjoyment in sensational publicity, the statements published yesterday as having been made by Carl E. Grammer, said to be a minister of the gospel in Philadelphia, should receive attention because of the harm which might otherwise be done to the important activity of that branch of the state government which is attacked, the motion-picture censorship.

"In challenging these statements, I say positively that the changes made in the Board of Motion-Picture Censors were not suggested by any politicians or any moving picture interest, and so far as I know, no one connected with either politics or the film business even knew that I was considering placing Henry Starr Richardson upon the board.

"His appointment, I am sure, came as a surprise to all of them. The organization of the bureau was changed by me in accordance with plans I have had in mind for several months, looking toward developing its work and meeting the increased demand for its service. In line with this purpose, Dr. Oberholtzer was placed in an executive position where his particular experience and capacity could be most useful.

"Regarding the insinuations that any contributions to the State Republican organization from film interests or others had never heard of any such contributions nor would I countenance any such influences. I am informed by officers of the state executive committee that no contributions have been received or offered from such sources and none have been solicited. No such factor has entered into the consideration of any appointment which I have ever made, nor will such be the case during my administration."

Supplementary to Governor Sproul's statement, another brief one was issued by Charles Johnson, of Norristown, treasurer of the Republican State Committee, in which he said that, so far as he knew, the motion-picture exhibitors and producers have not contributed one cent to the Republican State campaign fund.

J. A. Quinn Addresses M.P.T. Ass'n Meeting

Makes Plea for Plan of Reconstruction for Industry; Asks Support of Press

WITH representatives of many prominent organizations of the country in attendance, a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatrical Association of the World was held recently, at which President J. A. Quinn, just back from a four months' tour of the country, reported the results of his nation-wide investigation. A plan for the stabilization of general conditions in the motion-picture industry was also discussed. One of the most striking features of Mr. Quinn's address was his assertion that it is almost unanimously the opinion of the public and the press throughout the nation that a house-cleaning campaign is necessary in the motion-picture business.

On every side, declared Mr. Quinn, the same opinion prevails that the majority of pictures are tiresome, meaningless, lack sincerity, and that the only thing that is worth while, as a general rule, is the music and current events.

It is also the consensus of opinion, according to Mr. Quinn, that there was a better and more pleasing program from a motion picture standpoint, especially for the family, in the days of the one and two reel Biograph, Vitagraph, etc., with the admission from five to twenty cents, than is being served up today at twenty cents to one dollar.

Mr. Quinn stated that after very careful investigation of conditions in the studios, particularly in Los Angeles, and after conferences with leaders in all branches of the industry, numerous large and smaller exhibitors, directors and cameramen, he has concluded that the chief trouble in the industry can be summed up in these words, "complete lack of get together co-operative spirit."

"We visited Jesse L. Lasky, the first man in the industry to pledge his support, and he assured us that he would be glad to see an organization developed that would help remove some of the chaotic conditions," said Mr. Quinn. "Mr. Lasky stated that very little respect was paid to contracts by performers in many cases, and that when they took a notion to leave they would just lay down on their work or coolly walk out and other producers were ready with open arms to receive them at their own price.

"Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists, expressed himself as strongly in favor of 'clean, wholesome entertainment,' and declared that figuring it out purely from the experience and viewpoint of a film salesman he could make more money with this class of material than any other. He indorsed the M. P. T. plan and gave his signed pledge of support."

Universal May Produce in Germany, States President Laemmle

Universal Chief, Returning from Europe, Tells Conditions Abroad

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal, who arrived in New York on October 30th, after a four months' tour of Europe, in a recent interview announced that Universal will extend its producing activities to Germany rather than abandon its business entirely in that country. This is made necessary by the laws of Germany, which forbid the importation of American product into that country. Details of his plans were not revealed.

Mr. Laemmle sees the supremacy of the American picture abroad for some time to come. "We are ahead of them—and far ahead of them at that," said the Universal chief. "In stories some of the British producers seem to be falling down. Why this is so is hard to state. They have excellent novelists, but it appears that in adapting their stories to the screen the English do not make a gripping, constantly moving photoplay, such as our American audiences demand.

"Another thing," continued Mr. Laemmle, "which I believe will keep the British producer from making rapid gains on us is the lack of stern competion in England. Here in America it is a matter of fighting to the utmost to produce the best pictures or go out of business. Competition is so keen that a producer must put every ounce of energy and every bit of brain matter in his organization into making good audience pictures if he is to survive in America. It is this that Universal is doing."

In England, Mr. Laemmle stated, it is different. Competition is not kept up to a high pitch. He found business in England in fine condition and prophesied a splendid future for the motion picture industry in that country, despite the fact that the lack of sufficient theatres is acute. Great Britain, Germany and France are all in need of more theatres, said Mr. Laemmle. Housing conditions in Germany and England he described as so severe that theatre building at present is impossible. As an example of the oversupply of pictures in England, Mr. Laemmle pointed out that Universal pictures now being shown in this country would be obliged to wait at least a full year before being screened for the British public..

While abroad Mr. Laemmle signed a big contract with the Film Booking Offices, Ltd., of London, who will handle the entire Universal output in Great Britain. The president expressed himself as entirely satisfactory with the results so far obtained from this arrangement, and stated that the Film Booking Office had done even better than was anticipated.

The public of all the countries visited were found by Mr. Laemmle to prefer American pictures. "I am making a conservative estimate," he said, "when I claim that five American pictures are shown to every foreign made picture in the countries I visited."

Complete figures from the Internal Revenue Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, have just been obtained by the Washington Bureau of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Uncle Sam received $76,733,647.32 for admission taxes, an increase of more than 50 per cent over 1919. While this amount includes a revenue derived from admissions to all forms of amusements, the greater portion comes from the motion picture theatres.

The Government received $4,381,276.31 from the 5 per cent rental tax on positive motion picture films. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the amount collected was only $273,005.24. This amount, however, does not include a full year, as the tax did not become operative until near the end of the fiscal year.

The Government also received $1,946,-337.29 from special taxes from theatres, museums, etc.

According to statements given out at Washington during the past week the matter of taxes will not be taken up at the special session of Congress which begins in December.

On his return from abroad Mr. Laemmle was royally welcomed home by a large delegation of Universal employes, who had assembled at the Cunard pier from the Universal home office, the Fort Lee factory and from other nearby Universal branches.

Armed with pennants, banners, confetti, horns and other noise making devices, and headed by a large band, the Universalites stormed the Cunard Line pier and almost raised the roof when the diminutive film magnate walked down the gangway.

On the street the Universal head found another surprise awaiting him. He saw a long line of automobiles and sightseeing buses drawn up bearing Universal banners and placards reading "Welcome—Carl Laemmle." Mr. Laemmle was escorted to the leading automobile, his employes dashed for the others, a cordon of mounted policemen wheeled into place at the head of the column and there began a novel and noisy demonstration.

Few film officials ever have been the recipient of such a spontaneous demonstration in New York City. It was arranged by the employes at the last minute. Police permission to parade Mr. Laemmle from the pier to his office was being obtained even while the Aquitania was being warped into her berth. Chief Inspector Thore, of the New York Police Department, assigned Sergeant Day and a detail of mounted men from Traffic Squad "B" to steer the parade through the crowded streets.

Across Fourteenth street to Union Square and up Broadway to the Mecca Building at Forty-eighth street the procession speeded. The Seventy-First Regiment Band in the leading bus regaled Broadway with "Hail! Hail! The Gang's All Here!" and other lively tunes. Broadway craned its neck.

The home-coming official received another ovation from his employes when he arrived at 1600 Broadway. They piled out of their buses and held him up at the door of the Mecca Building until they could give him a final round of cheers.

Mr. Laemmle was accompanied from Europe by his children, Rosabelle and Julius; by his brother, Louis Laemmle, of Chicago, and family; by a nephew, Julius Bernheim, of Kansas City, and by Mrs. Maurice Fleckles, wife of the well known Chicago film man.

Mr. Laemmle was met at Quarantine by Mr. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, who made a special trip down New York Bay in the revenue cutter to meet his returning chief. Waiting at the pier with the five hundred employees were other Universal officials and department heads, including Abe Stern, treasurer; H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges; P. D. Cochrane, exploitation chief; George Kann, export manager; Paul Gulick, publicity chief; E. H. Goldstein, assistant to the president; E. J. Smith, division sales manager; Charles Rosenzweig, sales manager of the Big U Exchange, and George Uffner, of the Universal Industrial Department. Maurice Fleckles and James C. Bradford also joined the group at the pier.

A few days after Mr. Laemmle arrived in London in July, on his way to the Continent, he was the guest of honor at a large dinner given by officials of the F. B. O. and attended by leading British film and newspaper men. Just before sailing for home he was the recipient of a similar dinner, given in his honor by Sir Edward Hulton, a prominent British journalist and moving picture magnate. More than two hundred persons attended the affair.

Despite his large party, at times fourteen persons, Mr. Laemmle experienced little difficulty in traveling over the Continent, other than the usual passport delays and inconveniences. He visited several countries. Although the United States and Germany still are at war, on paper the German Foreign Department placed a sleeping car at his disposal during portions of his trip through that country after he had been unable to obtain other accommodations. This courtesy would have been exceptional even in peace times.

Censorship Agitation Starting in Nebraska

Club Women Begin Cannonade Against "Movies": Film Men Ready for Fight

WAR on undesirable motion pictures in Nebraska is declared.

The cudgel against the "movie" was taken up last week at the state convention of the Nebraska Federation of Women's Clubs in session at Fremont, Neb., and also by the attending delegates to the American Humane Association convention at Omaha.

Mrs. Bertha Miller, speaking at a session of the Women's Club delegates at Fremont, popped the first gun. She had a legislative bill already prepared which she presented for the approval of the convention.

The proposed bill is titled: "A bill for an act to provide for the inspection of motion picture films, creating a board for the purpose of making such inspection and providing that no motion pictures shall be shown until they have been endorsed by said board, and to provide penalties for the violation of this act."

This measure will probably be presented at the next session of the state legislature, the delegates announced.

But prominent film men have not been idle in that regard, and action has already started among them to offset any possible attempt at state censorship.

The body of the proposed bill provides that the governor shall appoint an endorsers' board of five, not less than two of whom shall be men.

"The proposed bill will not provide censorship," Mrs. Miller declared. "It will be an endorsers' board. No films rejected by the board could be shown in the state. There would be no publicity given undesirable pictures."

Film men construe this to be "a blind, in the form of a strict censorship bill," such as was badly defeated at the last session of the Nebraska state legislature.

Even the American Humane Association, in session at Omaha, switched clear off the track of their alleged operations for mankind and animals when R. C. Craven, manager of the Boston Rescue League, read a pamphlet on "Movies, Their Humane and Moral Influence."

"Movies of today handle too many moral problems which should be called immoral problems," he read. "The vampire too often outshines the virgin, aided by the modiste who should be called the immodiste.

"We see fifty-nine minutes of immorality in an eternal triangle and only one minute is spent at the last when virtue and the wronged wife win."

Mr. Craven also devoted some time to discussing the "gun man" pictures on the screen. According to his doctrine against the movies, he would force producers to dispense with scenes when horses jump over precipices to death, where dogs are starved for days to force them to show fight before the camera man and other alleged acts of cruelty to animals used for screen purposes."

Mr. Craven recommended government censorship.

First National Holds "Get Together" Meeting

One Hundred Exhibitors and Editors Discuss Co-Operation in New Haven

AN event that is expected to have an important effect upon the exhibiting of motion pictures in Connecticut was a "get-together" dinner and entertainment held in New Haven and attended by some one hundred exhibitors and newspaper editors from every part of the state. The matter of publicity and the closer co-operation between motion picture theatres and newspapers was discussed at length, and those attending were enabled to get a better understanding of local state conditions surrounding the advertising and publicizing of motion picture productions.

The affair was arranged by Associated First National Pictures of New England, and Col. C. W. Pickett, managing editor of the New Haven Times-Leader, co-operated in extending the invitations to the newspaper men of the state to be present. W. E. Spragg, general manager of Associated First National Pictures of New England, presided at the dinner, which was held at the Hotel Taft, in New Haven, Tuesday last.

Mr. Spragg, as toastmaster, devoted his remarks to the explanation and reasons back of the granting of franchises to exhibitors in Associated First National Pictures, Inc. He said that the plan was a form of insurance for the independent exhibitor of perpetual protection from monied interests seeking to control the exhibiting of pictures throughout the country. He declared that a monopoly was not only fraught with grave danger to the exhibitor who owned his theatre but would result in disappointment to the public through the standardizing of motion pictures, which must inevitably result in the lowering of productive standards.

Col. Pickett in his remarks noted that the motion picture industry assuredly did fill a large place with the public and that it deserved to, inasmuch as it made "two laughs grow where only a grouch flourished before." He said that success can come only from an honest foundation and felt sure that through mutual co-operation the two lines of business represented at the dinner could prosper and at the same time perform a big public service.

The pledge that Associated First National Pictures, Inc., would always stand for fair treatment and high standards of production was given by C. L. Yearsley, director of advertising and publicity for the distributing concern.

V. P. True, of the Standard theatre, Hartford, discussed relations between the press and exhibitors, in regard to Hartford, he declared that the co-operation was not all that it might be, and that he felt sure that more interest in the one on the part of the other would result in better publicity for the exhibitor, and matter which would prove of interest to newspaper readers because of the wide interest in motion pictures on the part of the public. Horace Judge, of the publicity department of Associated First National Pictures, also spoke.

Among those present were: C. Frederick, house manager of the Olympic; W. C. Sharp, Seymour; George C. Woodruff, Litchfield; Horace Judge and C. L. Yearsley, of the New York offices of the Associated First National Pictures; Col. C. W. Pickett; Col. N. G. Osborn; W. A. True, Hartford; George Goett, New York; Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Scholey, Guilford; B. Simon, Louis Cappolo, White City theatre; Harry F. Stafford, White Way theatre; Israel Gordon, Irwin Wheeler, Charles E. Carey, Herbert N. French, Samuel Campner, M. H. Keleber, Miss Elizabeth S. Stevenson, Sidney R. Diamond, Anna M. Burdick, George W. Hopkins, C. S. Eddy, Dorothy Ashford, A. S. Shapiro, John J. Gentile, Paul Barnett, W. W. Barry, William H. Avis, George W. Stehner, E. P. Lyon, R. T. Bulkley, W. H. Hanscom, Martin A. Hoanue; Edward S. Hine, of Bridgeport; C. L. Martin, Gorton Carruth, Mrs. E. Robert Stevenson, Herbert G. Nichols, Mollie Cullen, E. Robert Stevenson, of Waterbury; Marie P. LaVoie, Baltimore; L. Seibert and Howard L. Seibert, East Hampton; S. Carl Fischer, Litchfield; M. J. Goode, Stratford Times; J. R. Bolton, Seymore Record; Morris Pouzznet, New London; John G. Beckley, J. F. Weyand, Harrison Haines, J. W. Walsh, Hartford; S. Schlenger, H. Browning, Fred N. Smith, Middletown.

Greene Forms Distributing Organization for Producers

Walgreene Film Corp. to Distribute 12 Productions Yearly

WALTER E. GREENE, formerly vice-president and managing director of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced this week that he had completed all the details for his own distributing organization for the sale and distribution of special productions of individual producers. Mr. Greene's new organization will be known as the Walgreene Film Corporation.

Mr. Greene stated that his organization would handle for outright sale of negatives or for distribution on percentage arrangements the special productions of independent producers, and that his organization would operate in the American market through the recognized distributing channels of present distributing organizations, with all sales, however, under his personal supervision, thereby offering to the individual producer a sales organization that will be eminently fitted to secure for worthy productions the widest possible distribution. In the foreign field he stated he will be adequately represented through his present affiliations with foreign distributors and that arrangements were being completed now for additional representation in every country in the world.

"Every individual producer who is seeking a market for his product," Mr. Greene stated, "will find in our organization precisely the distribution that he has been looking for, consisting of intensive sales campaigns, elaborate exploitation and publicity on each and every production, together with unapproachable methods for the proper conduct of their business.

"Our organization has been founded on such broad lines that it will be possible for us to act at all times as the producer's representative from every angle of the industry.

"Our first year's output will consist of a minimum of twelve pictures, some of which are already completed and others in their initial stages of production. Every picture will be of the highest quality, adapted for the screen from the works of well-known authors and dramatists—both native and foreign."

Announcement was also made from Mr. Greene's office that he contemplates making a series of special productions. For this purpose he has secured the services of Langdon McCormack, the author of "The Storm," one of the hits of the recent Broadway season, for a scenario personally written by the author and based upon one of his well-known stage successes.

The productions have already been finished and will be released through the Walgreene Film Corporation in the very near future. The first of these will be the H. O. Davis production of the stage success, "The Servant in the House," by Charles Rann Kennedy, with an all-star cast, which as a stage production was one of the successes of the American theatre during the last decade.

Another of the trio of pictures ready for immediate distribution is the Vera McCord, Inc., production, "The Good-Bad Wife," which has been adapted from the Munsey Magazine story, "The Wild Fawn," by Mary Imlay Taylor.

The third production, which will be released through Mr. Greene's organization, will be that of "Hearts and Masks," produced by the National Film Corporation of America. This picture was adapted from the successful novel of the same name by Harold McGrath, and is described as a comedy-drama of decided timeliness. Elinor and Wallace McDonald play the leading roles.

All three of these productions will be supplemented in the immediate future by others of appeal and exhibition possibilities, it is said, Mr. Greene is negotiating for the distributing of these three productions at the present time for their immediate release.

Frederick Gage, formerly sales manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been secured by Mr. Greene as general manager of his new company, and together they are rapidly welding into shape the new organization.

Forty-Acre Site Offered by Tampa Trade Board

The Tampa, Florida, Board of Trade has offered to furnish a forty-acre tract, free of charge, and to give $4,000 in cash to H. A. Kelly for use in making "stills" of locations in this territory, provided he furnishes the backing to erect a studio.

The proposition, as presented to the Board of Trade by Mr. Kelly, was that he would make up an album of some thousand "stills" of locations, scenery, etc., and with these pictures he would establish a bureau for furnishing information to visiting companies. The cost was to be $4,000. The negatives were to be the property of the Board of Trade, and they were to be to no further expense on the bureau proposition.

Mr. Kelly claimed that he had New York backing and was seeking a location to erect a $200,000 studio. At a meeting of the Board of Trade a few days ago, he was offered the backing for his bureau provided he furnish a guarantee that the studio would be built there. This Mr. Kelly did not seem inclined to do.

Now the Board of Trade have put the proposition up to Mr. Kelly that if he can furnish the backing for his studio, they will not only furnish the $4,000 he wants for making the stills, but they will provide a forty acre tract free of charge.

The Board of Trade will investigate further and declares that if Mr. Kelly can produce the goods, the board will do what they agreed.

Leading Poster Artist Is Signed by F.P.-Lasky

Evidence that the leading men in the field of art are being attracted to motion picture work as a medium of expression for their creative genius is embodied in an announcement from Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that it has made a contract with Adolph Treidler, one of the foremost poster artists and illustrators in the country, to prepare a full set of posters for the forthcoming William DeMille production for Paramount, "Midsummer Madness."

The contract with Mr. Treidler is the direct result of the first projection room showing of the DeMille production before the Famous Players-Lasky executives.

What the Exhibitors Are Thinking

"Return to Old Standards"

IN a letter of recent date addressed to William A. Johnston, M. E. Wooldridge, of the Wigwam theatre, Altus, Okla., recommends an immediate return to the old sane standards and a rejection of the policy of inflation which he characterizes as "the thing that is going to cause trouble sooner or later." Mr. Wooldridge writes as follows:

"I have been a regular subscriber to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the past six years, take a great delight in reading it and especially your editorials. Some times I disagree with you but most generally our ideas coincide.

"This is a most peculiar game, and the more you study it, the more you wonder where it is all going to end. We don't seem to look back at other institutions and profit by their mistakes, but it seems we are plunging right along in their footprints. Some say, for instance, that the picture-show killed the legitimate house in the smaller towns and cities; I say not. I find that the independent house was squeezed out by combination of interest. Only a few years back you could see the very best of the speaking stage in cities of 5,000, but one concern began buying houses and hiring stars; then another concern did likewise. Wall Street got back of them; saw there was money being made hand-over-fist in these houses where they had personal interest in the same; saw to it that every attraction was properly presented and at prices people could afford to attend. These concerns got hold of the majority; incompetent managers, men who had only a pay envelope at stake, were put in charge; stars were paid high salaries; admissions advanced. It was a time of better stars, better productions, higher admissions, longer runs and the eventuality had to come. Today you see very few of the legitimate houses; the stars had to go into the screen for a livelihood. Who suffered? The independent man who could not get talent for his house because there was none reasonable. The big concern also suffered from the lack of business, and finally in these houses that once had brought fancy prices today the bats roost among the seats and in the flys.

"There seems to me to be some similarity between those days and the present time. You hear it on every hand, Wall Street has entered the industry and is framing big combinations, and by the first of the year you can expect to pay much more for your pictures than you are now paying. Can it be done? Mr. Producer and Mr. Distributor had better look out or he will lose the little 80 per cent man that heretofore has been the cream and gravy of the industry. He has now gone the limit; another straw will break the camel's back, and the bats will have some new roosting places.

"The above conditions will bring about failure. We are all mortals, and it is said that a drowning man will grab at a straw, when the failures begin to come. The failing man is going to sting every exchange that it is possible for him to, and in any manner that he can, for he realizes that they are the ones that have advanced the prices and created hardships that sent them to the wall. The exchanges seem to foresee this condition and are now hedging.

"Besides having paid deposits of 25 per cent on every production I have bought, I am in receipt of a printed slip from one concern that unless the balance of the money was in their office at least seven days before shipping date, they would be forced to not make shipment of the film even on c. o. d. basis and the 25 per cent would be forfeited to them. This was by order of the home office, and being such an order, it must be in effect at all of their exchanges.

"On the other hand, let us see what fewer and better pictures have done for us. Where a concern made fifty-two pictures, the overhead was figured against the fifty-two. Now they have cut that in half and figure the overhead on twenty-six. Another point: This overhead like everything else has gone up four hundred per cent. This makes the overhead eight times as much on each production. A star once made twelve pictures a year at the very least; now the most is six, thus making the star's salary, as well as that of all other employees, twice as much on each production; this multiplied by four hundred per cent makes the picture eight times as valuable. The percentage of profit may remain the same, but you must figure it on eight times as much cost. Leaving off the advance and taking only the reduction in product into consideration, are the productions of today twice as good as the ones of four years ago? For argument's sake, let us say they are. Then why is it these old-time concerns are going back, taking these old pictures, retitling them and putting them out under new names and getting the advanced prices for them? I say, after seeing many productions of the very best standard, that the productions of today do not equal the pictures of yesterday in any respect. I could call names but think it best not to. Just for instance, has Mary Pickford ever made another 'Tess of the Storm Country'?

"My idea of this situation is just this: We are bound and compelled to get back to the old standard. Quit making every picture an extraordinary super-never-was-equaled special. Personally I want to buy some of the good old kind of pictures that I can tell my people, 'Yes, I have a good show; take your wife and children right in, I don't want you to have to work all day to get admissions for your family to my theatre!' Get off this high horse; the thing is growing like Jack's bean stalk, and some of these days it is going to get so high we can't even fall off safely.

"We are all men, we don't expect to get a corner on this thing; it's too big and might get us down as the legitimate stage did some of those fellows. Let the studios make a live-and-let-live policy; create new stars, if the old ones don't want to meet conditions; let the producer-distributor meet on a common level with the exhibitor, live-and-let-live. I have met several mighty fine men among our exchanges, but I find that even in that state they are compelled to spread the 'bull' a little too strong to get by. Cut out the inflation, that's the thing that is going to cause the trouble sooner or later; let us all get on a level; be men; let your word be as good as your bond, be you an exhibitor in a small town or large one, salesman, exchange manager, president, secretary of the biggest concern, star, director, or just a common stage-hand. The gulf that now stands between the three branches of the industry must be crossed or destruction is inevitable."

More Figures Submitted

ANOTHER New York exhibitor who asks that his name be withheld follows up Mr. Johnston's recent remarks on the percentage of gross receipts paid in rental by writing as follows:

"Your recent editorial regarding the percentage of gross receipts paid in rental hits the nail on the head. I own and operate a theatre in a town of several thousand inhabitants, and I find very often that our rental approximates from 20 per cent to 30 per cent of our gross receipts.

"To illustrate better: a house in a city of a couple hundred thousand inhabitants, and doing a gross business of about six thousand per week recently ran a picture one day for $25. They played to nearly three thousand 18 cent net paid admissions. We rented the same picture and paid $15 and played to one hundred sixty-five 18 cent net paid admissions. The exchange figured that the record made by this city house would enable them to force the big rentals from us small fellows.

"You are doing a good work in this direction and I hope it will bear fruit."

Renovated Detroit Theatre Re-Opened October 9

The Majestic theatre, Detroit, reopened Saturday, October 9th, under the management of Phil Gleichman, managing director of the Broadway Strand theatre, that city. The theatre was entirely renovated and redecorated from cellar to roof.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Robertson-Cole will move their offices from Consumers Building to their new quarters at 906 S. Wabash avenue on Sunday November 7. The building, which has been especially erected for Robertson-Cole, occupies a space of 55 x 165 feet and will give them one of the finest and most commodious exchanges west of New York. Manager Lucas states that the offices, film handling rooms, vaults, cutting rooms, and projection room will be up to date in every respect and afford every facility for the prompt transaction of business and the convenience of exhibitors.

Mr. Lucas, who attended the special showing of "Kismet," at the Hotel Astor, New York, last week, declares it is the greatest picture ever made from a stage play and says that the public will be astounded at the lavishness of the production and deeply impressed by the wonderful acting of Otis Skinner and the able supporting cast.

M. J. Mintz, general sales manager of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, has departed on a trip to the West Coast which will consume from six to eight weeks' time. Mr. Mintz is on business for his company and will visit all the large exchange centres before his return to Chicago. His itinerary includes St. Louis, Dallas, Oklahoma City, Denver and San Francisco.

Miss Bessie Mason, cutter, and Daniel Gray, film editor, brought the negative of Marshall Neilan's "Dinty" to the Rothacker Chicago laboratories last week. When H. J. Aldous, Rothacker treasurer, returned from fishing in Nebraska, Douglas D. Rothacker vacationed toward Excelsior Springs. J. W. Carnrick, practical pictures salesman, scored a contract in Minneapolis and then went to Ohio for more. W. H. Strafford has returned from directing an industrial film in Pittsburgh.

H. D. Koffman, managing director of the Gayety, Calumet and other Chicago theatres, is back home after a ten day visit in New York City. Koffman reports a much quieter return trip than his journey from Springfield, Illinois, after the recent convention there. He thereby reveals the "inside" of the "great Pullman grape-nut mystery." It seems that Al. Steffes, president of the northwest exhibitors, made the trip from Springfield to Chicago with Koffman and generously sprinkled a box of grape-nuts between the sheets of Koffman's berth. Koffman said he knew that there couldn't be so many cinders—but it was a rough trip.

William Cadoret of La Petite theatre, Kankakee, is busy with the Famous Players exploitation department, preparing a tremendous campaign to announce his acquisition of the new Paramount pictures. He is laying out full pages for his papers.

Mildred Harris Chaplin and her mother stopped off in Chicago on their way from New York to the Coast. In the morning the First National star visited the Rothacker Laboratories to see how the positive prints are made from her negatives. "It's the finest film laboratory I ever visited," said Mrs. Chaplin after the tour through the plant. "Now I have a better understanding why Rothacker prints are what they are."

Paramount reports that 36 prints of "Humoresque" were working the week of October 24th—twenty-two of them for solid weeks in Chicago. Sunday, October 24th proved a rainy, disagreeable day—but every "Humoresque" theatre reported capacity and twelve reported new house records. The Central Park played to twelve thousand people at advanced prices; the Woodlawn stopped selling tickets three times and still had a standout at 10 P. M. The theatres seem to be vying with each other in the matter of beautiful presentations. The Riviera's "Humoresque" program has never been excelled even by that splendid theatre.

B. Herbert Milligan, president of the Creation Film Company, recently returned from New York and reports that on the trip he sold territorial rights "For the Freedom of Ireland" to Sam Zierler of the Commonwealth Film Corporation for greater New York and northern New Jersey; Sam Grand, Federated Film Exchange of New England, Boston, for New England; and P. M. Zimmerman, NuArt Film Corporation, Buffalo for New York State. Harry Weiss of Superior Screen Service is distributing the picture in Illinois and Indiana, as previously announced. Mr. Milligan states that the death of Lord Mayor MacSwiney and the prominence given the Irish situation in the press of the country, has resulted in a flood of inquiries from exhibitors as to where and when they can book "For the Freedom of Ireland," which has been widely exploited as a picture which shows conditions as they exist in the Emerald Isle.

Nearly three hundred Chicago theatres were given a free "added attraction" on election night by Paramount Pictures. Arrangements were made by Oscar A. Doob, Paramount exploitation man, with the Chicago Evening American to show fifteen-minute returns in the theatres. The American backed up the stunt with big publicity, free one-sheets slides, etc. The stunt proved a big success, helping the neighborhood houses get crowds on a night that is usually bad because everybody usually had to go downtown for the election returns.

Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, has purchased the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's single reel special of Man of War, "The Wonder Horse" for the central west territory. This feature while but one reel in length is said to contain an hour of excitement crowded into fifteen minutes. It is a specially posed picture of the daily life of the equine star, which was bought for $5,000 and for which his present owner recently refused $400,000. The picture will be available through the Celebrated exchanges immediately.

District Manager Hansen of Robertson-Cole has returned from a trip to New York and Indianapolis where he installed W. G. Carter, formerly manager of Select offices in St. Louis, as manager. Before assuming his new duties, Mr. Carter accompanied Mr. Hansen to New York and was made acquainted with the executive officers of the company.

The week of November 1st was a big event in the history of Ascher Brothers' Adelphi theatre, as it was the celebration of the Adelphi's third anniversary. Manager J. P. Koppel, who opened this beautiful theatre in Rogers Park three years ago, again met his friends, making this a gala week, he having arranged a special anniversary program.

Twenty thousand members of the Chicago Evening American Peter Rabbit Club were entertained at a great Hallowe'en party Saturday afternoon, October 30th, at Ascher Brothers theatres.

Ascher Brothers by special arrangement with the Chicago Evening American opened the doors of their twenty theatres to the children who are "Peter Rabbit" club members, and presented a special program, including a complete program of pictures and musical selections, and each theatre showed for this special occasion one of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's "Edgar" featurettes, with Johnny Jones and Lucile Rickson in the stellar roles as usual.

Ralph Proctor, general manager of the Stoll Film Corporation of America, spent the week in Chicago lining up the local sales staff for the new organization. One of the most popular exchange managers in Chicago, whose name Mr. Proctor is keeping under cover, has been signed up as manager and seven live wire salesmen will work the territory under him. A Milwaukee branch also will be opened. Manager and sales staff will start on the job December 6th and the first of the fifty-two releases promised by the Stoll Corporation is scheduled for January 2nd. The local headquarters of Stoll Film Corporation will be in the Pathe Exchange on South Wabash and Pathe will handle the physical distribution of the film.

L. A. Schiff is back again with Unity Film Exchange as salesman and P. T. Phelps has also been added to Manager Frank Flaherty's staff and will cover Indiana.

B. Daniel Russell of Russell, Griever and Russell, was to become a benedick Thursday and later in the day depart for Los Angeles with his bride, Miss Loretto Dunn, a charming Chicago girl. Mr. Russell goes to the coast to take entire charge of production work for Russell, Griever & Russell and the Capital Film Company, the greatly increased output requiring the presence on the coast of one of the firm. Congratulations.

Manager Aschman of Pathe, reports that "The Riddle Woman," the Associated Exhibitor's feature, starring Geraldine Farrar, has been booked in practically every key city of the central west, although the picture will not be released in Chicago for six weeks. Two other Pathe features, "Half A Chance" and "Money Changers" also are making unusual booking records in the territory and are declared by Mr. Aschman to be wonderful box office pictures.

Vitagraph's big advertising and exploitation campaign to put over "Dead Men Tell No Tales," in the Chicago territory has started with teaser ads in all the Chicago and Milwaukee daily papers, the posting of one hundred and twenty-five twenty-four sheets in Chicago, a large number in Milwaukee and many posted along the railways and interurbans connecting the two cities. Manager Aiken states that the big advertising campaign which was carried on in MOTION PICTURE NEWS has interested the exhibitors in this picture to an unprecedented extent and more than one hundred and fifty inquiries have been received from country exhibitors in regard to this feature and many Chicago exhibitors have called at Vitagraph's exchange seeking early bookings.

Elinor Glyn, the noted British novelist, rested at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, for a few hours en route to the Famous Players-Lasky studios in California, where she will study the technique of motion picture production preparatory to writing a screen drama for Paramount.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Something to Think About—

Now here is a picture. Typical De Mille cast, direction, and all. Not as enjoyable throughout of course as "Why Change Your Wife," but finely built for contrast of action and suspense. Big business carried over another week. (East.)

Drew very good houses to excellent business during fourth week of its run. Crowds continued. (East.)

Picture so good business grows. Held for a third week. (Middle West.)

This picture is entertaining and sure did go over extra big. House crowded every performance. (East.)

Holding for second week in a one-week house which tells the story. (West.)

Always Audacious—

This is a sure-fire box office attraction. Audiences seemed well pleased. (West.)

The Restless Sex—

Stood up well during second week. A play with a wide appeal presented on a lavish scale. (Middle West.)

Good title but poorly screened and business dropped toward end of week. (Middle West.)

This picture began big but dropped steadily each day. (West.)

Humoresque—

The Jailbird—

Disappointing after seeing "23½ Hours Leave." Fair business. (East.)

Very bad for the star and weak story. Business was poor. (East.)

Picture started big, slumped, and then ended big. But on the whole it's a lemon. (West.)

Civilian Clothes—

Went over big. Meighan is well liked in this city, and his vehicle lost none of its effect in the transition to the screen. (Middle West.)

The Right to Love—

Was only fair. Miss Murray is an actress of ability, but the production was not up to the standard of some of her former successes. (Middle West.)

Behold My Wife—

Good picture but nothing extraordinary and did average business for one week. (Middle West.)

Very good picture. Business so good held over for second week.

The Village Sleuth—

Not one of Ray's best—but it was clever and a bit different, in point of story, to his usual efforts, while giving him essentially the usual sort of role. Anyway, they like it. (East.)

The Round-Up—

Fair business to fair houses. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Girl with a Jazz Heart—

Only an average picture and business was a little below our average owing to several rainy nights. The two nights weather was good we did fair business. (Middle West.)

Stop Thief—

Only a fair production and box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Officer 666—

Fine picture and the box office returns while not especially great were satisfying. (West.)

Earthbound—

This was a poor picture. While the title is good the picture did not seem to interest the majority of the people and we had poor business during run. (West.)

Honest Hutch—

An entertaining, pleasing feature. People seemed to like it. (West.)

It's a Great Life—

This is a fair picture, both from the entertaining point of view and the box office receipts. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Nomads of the North—

Very good, played to better than average business. Lots of action. The big scenes, especially those in which the animals participated made a big hit. (Middle West.)

Not up to some of the other Curwood stories but was liked. Average business. (Middle West.)

The Branded Woman—

Splendid business attraction. Norma Talmadge always stands them up. Picture well produced and acted. (East.)

Norma Talmadge pictures continue popular. We did little better than average business. (Middle West.)

As to entertaining values this is a fine picture and brought more than the usual business. (West.)

The Fighting Shepherdess—

Just an average attraction that brought poor box office returns. (East.)

45 Minutes From Broadway—

Ray overacts to unnecessary footage and part he takes do s not fit him. (East.)

Harriet and the Piper—

Go and Get It—

A wonderful picture that pleases everybody, but a poor title.

Peaceful Valley—

Pleased greatly. An excellent production in every sense. (Middle West.)

What Women Love—

This is a fair production, and people seemed quite indifferent concerning it. Business was about as usual. (West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Devil's Pass Key—

Good picture for women, but men didn't care for it. Box office receipts were large. (East.)

Great—had 'em standing up in line for two blocks on opening days. Splendid show for opening new theatres.

Pink Tights—

The boiled down opinions on this picture is "Old Stuff." (East.)

Once to Every Woman—

This picture had little comment either favorable or otherwise. Box office returns say production is fair. (West.)

METRO

Mme. Peacock—

Not up to the standard of Nazimova pictures. There are moments in the picture that do not ring true. However, Nazimova followers seemed satisfied. (Middle West.)

An average production. Box office returns fair. (West.)

Blackmail—

Interesting. Instructive as well. Favorably commented upon. Average business. (Middle West.)

The Misfit Wife—

Not the best picture in the world, nor the worst. Alice Lake clever, and is becoming very popular. Not much material in this, trite and hackneyed, but has a faintly novel twist at the end. Fair business. (East.)

Parlor, Bedroom and Bath—

Business only fair. Audiences like it fairly well. Picture too long for story. (East.)

The Truth—

As to entertaining qualities this feature is very poor. Average business. (West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Girls Don't Gamble—

David Butler is a "comer," but I don't think his second picture was quite as good as the first. Played to better business, because he is getting better known. But heard some disappointed remarks. Nothing serious—nice little picture. (East.)

Up in Mary's Attic—

Only a fair production but a good box office attraction.

ROBERTSON-COLE

The Fortune-Teller—

Despite the fact that star is not known here, we put this over in great shape, by using a crystal-gazer who told fortunes immediately after the picture. Usual policy of this house is three-day runs—played this one to a week's fine business. (East.)

FOX

The Texan—

Tom Mix still popular. Picture pleases though not as good as other recent ones. We boosted a Clyde Cook comedy to help business. (Middle West.)

PATHE

The Riddle: Woman—

Good. Any objections to this picture may be the animosity of the public toward Geraldine Farrar. (East.)

This is a wonderful story, but Farrar herself does not photograph well, and the picture has other defects. Picture did not draw well at all. (East.)

Lahoma—

Much to my surprise, this one went over well. A very weak picture, with action taking place too far back to be of interest. Costumes hideous, though true to period. They liked this fairly well, but I'd hate to try to play another one like it! (East.)

Prologue number staged by the Adams theatre, Detroit, for the showing of "Peaceful Valley"

Omaha to Have "Go to Movies" Week

Omaha motion picture theatre managers have inaugurated an idea which is expected to be adopted nationally by motion picture theatres in the future.

"Go to Movies" week is the idea.

Managers of all cinema theatres in Omaha have concurred to make the affair a gala event. The idea will be launched the week of November 7-14.

Special photoplay attractions have been booked at the Rialto, Strand, Sun and Moon theatres for that week, and novel stunts have been arranged by the committee of managers in charge for the success of the idea.

Strong efforts will be made to make hundreds of new movie patrons. Social clubs and business organizations have sanctioned the proposed affair. The Chamber of Commerce and Omaha merchants will co-operate to make the idea a success.

A street parade on Saturday, November 6, in which all of the motion picture interests in Omaha will participate, will launch the movement. Employes of local film exchanges and of the theatres will take part. Suitable floats have been commandeered for the opening event. At the end of the parade, 1,000 toy balloons will be released, to many of which will be attached $5 purchase orders for merchandise at downtown stores and also free tickets to the downtown theatres.

In view of the fact that the motion picture industry is one of financial importance to the country, it is hoped "Go to Movies" week will be a reguar annual nation-wide fiesta in the future.

The idea was conceived by Harry Watts, manager of the Strand theatre, Omaha.

Bills Scenic Above the Feature

When the Bruce scenic, "The Great Mirror," was shown at the Liberty theatre, Seattle, Manager Charles Branham made it the feature of the show. As the picture progressed all the lights in the theatre were dimmed and a mysterious voice from the organ sang "Somewhere a Voice is Calling." Baskets of flowers illumined by tiny spot lights appeared in balcony boxes. The baskets stood out against a black background, giving the idea of beautiful paintings. As the singer's voice died down, the baskets were dimmed out and the picture fades from the dimmed out and the picture fades.

"Something to Think About" at Detroit Broadway Strand

To get his audience in a receptive mood for "Something to Think About," at Phil Gleichman's Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit, Production Manager Mangan staged an effective and novel number called "Songs of Other Days," with Miss Hope Vernon as soloist.

With the stage bathed in soft blue lights, "The Last Rose of Summer" is heard as if from a distance, after which the curtains part, revealing a young miss in the costume of Civil War days, with purple silk draperies for a background, she executes an old-fashioned waltz number, the curtains close. Miss Vernon makes her appearance also in the costume of the period of '65, and to all intents plays "Love's Old Sweet Song" on the violin, but on the last few measures, as she removes the violin from her shoulder, it becomes apparent that she has ideally portrayed the sounds of a violin with her voice, and finishes the number holding the violin in her hand. This is followed by "Silver Threads Among the Gold," during which the curtains part to show a white-haired old lady seated at a spinning wheel in a very pretty interior set. The illustration was complete as to detail and very effective.

To open the picture an exact duplicate of the original title was first seen on scrim with flaming torches behind backed up with a black velvet drop, and as the title of the picture flashed into view the torches that are in the title hit directly where the real torches stood on the stage. The illusion was so neatly done that it was hard to detect the stage scene from the title on the picture, and served the purpose which Mr. Mangan intended.

Paper Bag Stunt Works Well for Nadler

Where the theatregoers are!

That's where Louis J. Nadler, of the Majestic theatre of Rochester, Pa., does the bulk of his feature advertising. He has figured it out that the women of Rochester are the portion of the population that decides what pictures are to get the patronage. From that point he decided that it was the mothers he most wanted to reach, so he decided to virtually advertise in the pantries of Rochester.

Not such a difficult matter as it may seem. He priced paper bags and found that they could be purchased for almost the same price as could stock paper. He interviewed the owners of the grocery stores, and the proprietors of the tea and coffee stores, asking them if they would accept free pound bags of good quality paper even if the bags carried advertising on both sides. They would!

Anything that aided in the profits in these days between high wholesale prices and a suspicious public was welcome and the price of paper bags was just clear gain. Accordingly the storekeepers assured him that the bags couldn't come too many or too frequent for them.

Rochester can't open her food cupboard door without seeing two interesting advertisements for attractions that are yet to be shown at the Majestic theatre. Recently one side of every pound-size bag that leaves the majority of the food stores in Rochester bore a cut of the newspaper page which has proven so popular.

Goes Up in the Air to Bill "Earthbound"

Going up into the sky to advertise "Earthbound," which deals with the life of the spirit after death, was an exploitation stunt originated and put over by Charles F. House, manager of Ascher's Midway theatre, Rockford, Ill., where the picture had a four-day run to most gratifying business.

Mr. House engaged an aviator to fly over Rockford and drop 10,000 tickets over the main business district. Among the tickets were 200 that contained Mr. House's signature on the back; these 200 tickets were honored at the box office for admission to the theatre. Much newspaper publicity was obtained through this stunt, and the people left their offices and gathered in crowds on the street while the airplane passed over the business district. There was much good-natured rivalry among the crowds to get the falling tickets.

How Hyman Stages His Shows

The Brooklyn Strand Symphony Orchestra, Alois Reiser, conductor, Managing Director Edward L. Hyman and scenic experts, collaborated this week to contrive an arousing overture which would open the show with sufficient commanding effect, utilizing Rossini's "William Tell" as a foundation.

The theme of the musical number is told by an ever-changing scenic set, that of a pastoral valley, which was revealed in various stages of nature's workings. First there is a presentation of the sleeping countryside with attendant meditative music. The tranquil moon is then shaded with the coming storm clouds, great billows overcasting the valley and auguring the approaching deluge. Then follows the breaking of the storm with the resounding thunder booms, the flashing of lightning and the rain avalanche. With the dying of the storm and the softening of the accompanying orchestral music, the movement swings back again to the calm and the evergreens are shown glittering with diamond studded rain drops.

That "William Tell" is ideal for such development was strikingly illustrated.

"'Bill" Ely Becomes "Old Clothes Man"

It isn't often that we express opinions concerning exploitation stunts, but this recital of the stunt which "Bill" Ely, manager of the Hippodrome, Portland, O., put over is so unusual, has so many selling angles and worked so well that we are going out of our way to express approbation and recommend it to every exhibitor, large or small.

One day recently Portland resident who traveled by the Hippodrome saw four thousand pounds of clothing—in almost as many packages—piled in the deep theatre lobby and spread out onto the sidewalk beyond. The packages, round, long and every other conceivable shape, constituted admission tickets to the annual children's matinee given each year by the Hippodrome as a benefit for the Armenian relief. The clothing, and much of it was very usable, as the point was stressed in all advance stories that new clothing was just as, if not more, acceptable, than used contributions, will be sent by the Portland committee for relief in the Near East to help little Armenian youngsters ward off the approaching winter weather.

C. W. Koerner, branch manager of the Universal exchange, and Melvin G. Winstock, Pathe branch manager, helped Mr. Ely and the Armenian kiddies by donating the programme. It was a comedy show. A one-reel Harold Lloyd comedy, two reels of "Joe Martin" animal pictures and one reel of Lyons and Moran film kept 1,500 Portland children in uproarious fun for an hour and a half. The Armenian relief committee furnished a local singer and a four minute man.

Two tons of clothing was collected by the unique matinee. Five wagon loads of the queer and bulging packages were taken from the Hippodrome to the Armenian relief packing headquarters.

Marvelous publicity was given the affair by the daily newspapers. The press not only volunteered advance stories, but covered the show.

Reisenfeld Presenting Combination Prologue and Vocal Number

THE vocal number on the Rivoli program this week serves a double purpose in that it makes a very appropriate prologue number for the feature picture "The Great Redeemer."

Before a scenic canvas showing a western landscape with mountains in the distance, pines and hemlocks growing on the slopes leading to them, huge rocks in the foreground and a "dugout" home on a hillside brought into prominence by a thin flood light, Mary Fabian and Georges DuFranne, soprano and tenor respectively assisted by a quartette sing "The Little Grey Home in the West."

The song begins off stage by the male members of the cast who appear after a line or two of the song which gradually is increased in volume as if the singers were coming down a trail. After the first verse is sung, Mr. Du Franne and his companions sit while the feminine members of the cast follow out the same procedure with the second verse of the offering. Then the full company sings exiting on the last lines.

Muslin Used to Advantage in Stage Setting

FOR the ballet number by Mlle. Gambarelli at the Cap.tol for this week, the stage setting used is a fine example of artistic effectiveness produced in a manner that is within the reach of the smallest theatre.

The backing used is pleated muslin on which amber foots cast a yellowish tinge. The broad expanse of cloth is broken at two points with fluted muslin columns behind which white lights have been placed.

Mlle. Gambarelli dances in front of this set attired in white costume. The selection rendered is titled "Polka Pizzicato."

Hires Professional "Healer" as Exploitation Stunt

Mrs. Mary E. Cunningham, a self-professed faith healer, was a medium of much publicity for "The White Moll," which played last week at the Moon theatre, Omaha.

Lee W. Wooters, publicity director of the Moon theatre, conceived the idea of having Mrs. Cunningham appear in person at the theatre and give lectures on her doctrine of faith healing.

"Peaceful Valley" Given Great Exploitation

So replete with novel ideas and unusual exploitation features was the presentation at the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, of "A Romance of Peaceful Valley" that a whole booklet could be written about it, a booklet worthy of being sent around the country with the film as an exhibitor's book of suggestions.

The accompanying photographs give some idea of the extent to which Manager Edward Weisfeldt went to awaken Milwaukee to the Alhambra's showing of the Ray production.

The entire week before the showing of the feature the Alhambra was decorated for the event. The long lobby was turned into a barnyard. On either side were picket fences over which rows of cornstalks thrust their long leaves. Here and there safe behind the fence a live chicken strutted up and down, busy consuming corn. Further down the lobby a scenery barn was located with hay bulging out of the loft door. Opposite was a corn crib fairly bursting with golden ears, and next to it an old well with a real moss covered bucket secured from a Wisconsin farm.

Inside the door of the theatre the large foyer was transformed into a farmhouse kitchen. There was a stove, kitchen table, pantry shelves, sink with a squeaky pump and a farmer and his wife in attendance. All the theatre attaches were attired in overalls and straw hats or sunbonnets and aprons.

During the presentation of "A Romance of Peaceful Valley" the Alhambra was decorated with pumpkins, goblins, cats and witches for Hallowe'en and added to the spirit of the photoplay. A Hallowe'en prologue was given in which a group of children in jack o' lanterns, sheaves of wheat and as scarecrows provided entertainment.

In addition to all of this a hayrack containing a "rube" band and followed by walking jack o' lanterns was used to advertise the attraction in the downtown streets.

Needless to say the Alhambra did a rushing business.

Ballantyne Hires Real Lion As Exploitation Stunt

Some idea of the magnitude of the exploitation campaign which Manager R. S. Ballantyne and Publicity Director L. A. Wooters of the Moon theatre, Omaha, put over for "The Revenge of Tarzan" is illustrated by the accompanying cut.

In addition to the lobby display another bit of unusual exploitation was conceived and executed in an eleventh hour telegram from Manager Ballantyne to the head of an animal "zoo" in Kansas City which read as follows:

"Ship wild lion immediately to Moon theatre, Omaha. Don't forget a tamer. Expenses and fee will follow."

Less than 48 hours later, Omaha was ballyhooed by the roaring of a lion and an attractive display of 6-sheets on a wagon.

Throughout the week of the showing of "The Revenge of Tarzan" hundreds of curious pedestrians were attracted to the Moon theatre at noon hours when the lion stalked back and forth in its cage before the multitude.

Night after night during the showing, crowds lined up for a block waiting to see the picture. Manager Ballantyne declared the expense of having the lion shipped to Omaha was well worth it.

Metzger Pulls Good Stunt for "Love Expert"

In putting over "The Love Expert" Mr. Metzger, manager of the Strand theatre, Creston, Iowa, was fortunate enough to secure the services of a lady visiting in that city from a neighboring town who had the nerve to try this stunt. He hired one of the finest cars of the city and asked the lady to doll up in her Sunday best and use plenty of powder and paint. He also secured a large, beautiful fan for her and rented one of the most beautiful creations in the way of opera shawls for her to wear. Upon the banners on the side of the car were printed large letters exploiting the "Love Expert."

Cuts in on Future for Presentation Number

MANAGING Director Reisenfeld cut in on the projection of "The Great Redeemer" at the Rivoli last week with a musical number and in so doing has accentuated the natural dramatic climax of the picture, incidentally proving that there are occasions where stopping the picture for presentation effects is desirable in spite of the preponderancy of opinion that this should never be done.

In the scene where the condemned murderer begins his march to the gallows, the picture is faded out, the drapes drawn and the Rivoli singers presented previously in the prologue number render a selection suggestive of funeral services. The house remains dark and the orchestra is stilled, the ensemble singing without accompaniment. After the song the picture is resumed with the title "Do miracles happen, etc." The effect is dramatic indeed since the picture really logically is ended there anyway all the subsequent scenes only establishing the happy ending of the romance.

Store Tie-ups Help "Right to Love" in Los Angeles

Gorgeous settings in perfume, incense and scented toilet waters for handsome oil paintings in 16 of the most prominent windows on Los Angeles business streets were a feature that attended the showing of "The Right to Love," at Sid Grauman's Rialto theatre, in Los Angeles.

Illuminated by artificial light time these displays, consisting for the most part of paintings of Mae Murray, one of the featured players in the picture, reproduced from stills of the production, created an immense sensation.

Rialto, Detroit, Gives "Lost City" Great Send Off

The Rialto theatre, of Detroit, one of six first-run neighborhood houses to open simultaneously with "The Lost City" serial, gave the first episode of the production such an exploitation campaign as is seldom witnessed in any city, even for a big special feature picture.

A special lobby display was constructed. The lobby of the Rialto is long with a narrow entrance. Both side walls of this entrance were hung with elaborate hand-painted animal pictures. At the end of the entrance, and just before you enter the auditorium, there's a sort of lounge, in the space just between the big doors leading into the auditorium.

For the opening of "The Lost City" this lounge was utilized for exploitation purposes, at the suggestion of Manager James Ritter. The wall space, 24 feet in width, was covered with a hand-painted background, showing a tropical scene. Cut-outs were made from the twenty-four sheets, and placed against the background, so as to make a regular jungle scene. This was all done in colors, and made a wonderful effect. The floor space of the lounge was covered with a green sward. Concealed lights radiated dimly from underneath this grassy effect, and gave the picture an honest-to-goodness tropical look. Concealed lights hung from the top of the scene, too, and added a soft glow to the whole.

This picture struck the eye of the patron the moment he put his foot into the theatre lobby. It attracted crowds as long as it was left standing, for, placed as it was, in a position of honor, like a fine painting, and put into a setting such as given a work of art, it was the talk of all Detroit.

This is but another instance of the attention live exhibitors are giving to short subjects with big box office results as a reward for their efforts.

Transparency Used in Rivoli Vocal Number

UNDER the title of "The Magic of Your Eyes" the Rivoli theatre this week stages a very pretty vocal number.

The stage setting is constructed principally of draped curtains of various hues as if artistically covering an artist's studio window except for a space a half dozen feet in irregular diameter where the panes of glass and the frame are exposed. The props used, all of which are suitable for a studio, include an artistic easel at which one of the singers appearing in the number, Georges Trabert, tenor soloist, stands painting on a picture placed on the easel as he sings. After the first verse of "The Magic of Your Eyes" is rendered the window mentioned above is proven to be a transparency through which Marie Lind, as the other singer in the duet, is disclosed, seated some ten feet above the stage proper with an indefinitely defined background back of her. Miss Lind and Mr. Trabert finish the song as a duet when the transparency is faded out and the drapes close on the other singer.

Want Ad Stunt Works Well for Rea

George A. Rea, manager of the Forum theatre, Hillsboro, Ohio, recently put over a publicity stunt in connection with his showing of "Help Wanted—Male" that brought a lot of attention to his engagement.

Mr. Rea inserted the following ad. in the want columns of the newspapers: "Wanted—Husband with money by attractive young widow with a past." Following this were the directions for answering. A number of bona fide replies were received to the advertisement, among which was one from a man who wrote as follows:

"Dear Friend: I tried to phone you today, but for some reason failed to get connections. I would like to hear from you and see you and have a chat, that is, if I am not too late. Please write me if you wish. It would not hurt for at least one chat. Do you think so? Think we could enjoy a talk and get acquainted."

Two Reeler Gets Attention

Metropolitan Theatres Give Man o' War and Sir Barton Picture Big Exploitation

NEW YORK and Brooklyn this week saw the culmination of the most unusual campaign ever put over on behalf of a two-reel picture, preceding the showing of "The Race of the Age," Educational Film's exclusive picture of the race at Windsor, Ont., between Man o' War and Sir Barton. The picture was given its joint premiere at the Strand, New York, and the Strand, Brooklyn, this week.

Last week being the final period of racing in the metropolitan circuit, a campaign was centered to attract the horse lovers. Although the racing association declined to accept advertising in its program it was finally induced, after a private showing of the picture to officials, to print the announcement of "The Race of the Age," and one of these appeared at the end of the list of entries on each race.

Ten thousand tags bearing on the face "Route Instructions," and on the reverse side the announcement of the picture at the two Strands was attached to every automobile at the track Thursday, Friday and Saturday preceeding the showing of the picture. Forty thousand envelopes bearing across their faces "A Tip on the Big Race" and enclosing a herald giving details of the picture were distributed on the race trains, at the entrance to the park and to the grand stand crowds during the three days.

While it has been recorded on a few occasions that New York theatres have given a portion of their lobbies to exploitation of short subjects during the run, this is said to be the first time that two such theatres have given over the greater portion of their display the week previous to the showing of a picture. At the Strand, New York, the left side of the entrance was occupied by a huge announcement card, designed by the house artists, carrying this statement from Managing Director Joseph Plunkett over his signature: "It is a great privilege to show to our patrons this historical race. To see it is to never forget it."

On the right side of the entrance was a huge reproduction of the letter from the Kenilworth Jockey Club giving Educational the exclusive right to picture the race. On either side of the lobby were two other large announcements, including striking scenes from the picture. The colors of Man o' War, orange and black, were suspended from the ceiling.

This lobby display was augmented during the showing of the picture and the electric light display divided with the feature.

For the first time the Strand changed the style of its house plate in its advertising, using a line drawing of the two horses superimposed over the name of the theatre.

In Brooklyn, Managing Director Edward L. Hyman issued the most elaborate four page herald that he has ever used, giving a number of scenes from the race,

Portland Theatre Builds Fine Lobby Display

The Hippodrome, of Portland, O., has recently adopted a new policy of billing in that the feature picture is given extra exploitation with preference over the vaudeville numbers.

For the showing of "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," a lobby display was built that old salts passing the corner of Broadway where the Hippodrome is located declared brought the sea breeze to them, although the Pacific remained just as many miles away from Portland as ever.

The transformation was made of what had formerly been a rather longish, narrow lobby into the side of a ship's deck. The wall in which the ticket window had formerly been a prominent feature was now the side of a cabin and a pretty sailor in middy blouse took the place of the former uniformed Hippodrome cashier. At the door stood one of the ship's officers taking the tickets and allowing Portlanders to pass on into other quarters of the schooner.

On this page is shown photographs of four special posters used at the Strand theatre, New York, during the week preceding the showing of "The Race of the Age." The entire lobby of the Strand was given over to exploiting the two-reel picture instead of the usual procedure of giving the feature the big end of the billing and just mentioning the smaller numbers. A story of the exploitation put over for this picture is published on the opposite page

Shafer Holds Parade All His Own

With several hundred thousand persons available for an exploitation campaign manager Walter D. Shafer, of the William Fox Liberty theatre, in St. Louis, saw his opportunity a week ago and succeeded in putting over the greatest campaign he has undertaken in his many years as a manger. He had booked "While New York Sleeps" for the week commencing Oct. 10. On the Tuesday preceding the opening of the attraction the Veiled Prophet parade, the annual spectacle given by the society and business people in St. Louis, was held. The Veiled Prophet is a spectacle similar to the Mardi Gras in New Orleans.

The newspapers estimated that more than 250,000 persons saw the parade over its entire route of about seven miles. The first thing that Shafer did was to have a little parade of his own. An attractively decorated wagon, bearing a distinctive three-sheet cut out and appropriate banners traversed the entire route of the parade a short while in advance of the Veiled Prophet. From the wagon 10,000 circus heralds telling of the nature of the production were distributed to those who were waiting patiently for the parade and who were grateful for something to read before the arrival of the Prophet.

For a whole week prior to the opening performance Shafer saw that every patron who attended the theatre was given one of the circus heralds. Every person on his mailing list of several thousand names also received a herald along with a program through the mails. The wagon which constituted Shafer's individual parade made its appearance among the luncheon crowds on the downtown streets every day during the run of the picture, and this had much to do with drawing crowds to the theatre.

Shafer did not overlook his advertising in the daily newspapers because every day he had a differently designed "ad" which served to whet the curiosity of those who had not seen the feature production, but had heard of it.

Avey Ties Up With Local Event for a Winner

The many repeated admonitions of this department to hook onto local color if possible in advertising pictures is given real import by the experience of J. Richard Avey, manager of the Strand theatre, Mattoon, Ill., in putting over "From Now On."

The city fathers of Mattoon started a campaign against careless automobile driving and in so doing employed a local motorcycle driver who had been one of the worst ordinance offenders. The new "fly cop" was so over-zealous that he arrested a round two dozen of Mattoon's fairly law-abiding citizens the first day and in less than another 24 hours had become the most unpopular person in town. There was a lot of talk about the arrests and the local automobile club published a bulletin in the local papers against him. This bulletin gave Mr. Avey an idea. He got out a herald which started with "Stop Speeding From Now On" and ended with publicity for the picture. The result was that about everyone who resides in Mattoon was talking about "From Now On," and when the picture opened at the Strand everybody who ever went to a picture show was sold with the idea that they wanted to see it.

McDonald Gets Results with Extra Edition Stunt

For the premiere showing of "The Face at Your Window," at the Springfield theatre, Springfield, Mass., Manager McDonald arranged with the Springfield Union for several thousand copies of the first issue of the day the picture opened. These papers were rushed to a job printer who printed an announceemnt of the picture's engagement at the Springfield in bold red type across the face of the front pages, after which the issue went to boys who distributed the copies.

Also by arrangement with news stands in the centre of the town he had these individually printed copies of the "extra" displayed so that they instantly attracted attention. So great was the demand for these papers that they were distributed twenty minutes after they appeared on the street.

Something New in Street Car Advertising

Billings, Montana, has no street cars. The car tracks are along all the main thoroughfares, but for various reasons the running of eight storage-battery cars over these lines was not a paying venture, and for many years not a street car gong has been heard on the streets. Motor busses provide the transportation facilities. Not many weeks ago the residents of Billings were attracted to their front windows by the clanging of a street car gong. The older residents wondered if the old service was to be started again, the younger residents were amazed at the idea that they might see cars running on the old track. Everybody in town, it seemed, turned out to see what was happening. They saw one of the eight cars coming slowing and swaying down the decrepit tracks. They watched its progress, and as it passed, big signs were disclosed on the sides of the vehicle. "We may not be able to finish the trip; but the Busses will take you to see 'The Notorious Miss Lisle.' A First National Attraction, starring Katherine MacDonald. At the Babcock Theatre, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday." The theatre preceded this stunt by a well planned advertising campaign in the newspapers, which had been preceded by a teaser campaign.

Novelty Presentation of Scenic Picture

S. L. ROTHAPFEL is giving "The Emerald Isle," a single reel scenic, novelty presentation at the Capitol theatre this week by synchronizing the vocal rendition of "Come Back to Erin" with the offering.

The number opens with the projection of strips of film showing scenes of the Emerald Isle through a wide angle lens on a screen that covers the entire proscenium opening hung back of the tormentors. Ruth Percy, a soprano, stands in front of the improvised screen and is invisible against the dark background of the picture until silhouetted by a white spot that had been fashioned to outline her figure without striking on the picture screen.

While the film is being projected, Miss Pearcy sings to changing scenes, the effect being somewhat on the order of the old time illustrated song. At the close of the song the vocalist is faded out, and as the drapes are drawn, the titles of "The Emerald Isle" reel are screened through the regular projection lenses.

and adding his verdict: "I consider this to be the most compact, swiftly moving thriller ever exhibited in this theatre."

Mr. Hyman used a musical program with "The Race of the Age" that added a great deal to the thrills of the picture, with the result that during the panoramic views of the whole race people were actually standing and cheering.

"My Old Kentucky Home" was used at the opening and this was followed by "The Triumph of Liberty" march, then "The Chase," and following through with "Trotte de Cavalier," by Rubinstein.

Simple Stage Setting for Vocal Number

IN using "The Lost Chord" as a vocal number at the Capitol theatre for the current week, a stage setting has been provided by the artist, Herbert Watrous, that enhances the value of the selection greatly.

A back drop suggesting the wall of a room with large French windows dimly visible is seen through a black net. In the center of the stage and close to the drop mentioned is a high desk, similar to those of an English Court. Mr. Watrous, clothed in a white robe and wearing a colonial wig, is seated behind the desk with his figure brought into prominence by a white spot.

The number is receiving rounds of applause from Capitol audiences.

"Artist's Dream" Title of Alhambra Specialty

One of the recent specialty numbers at the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, staged under the title of "The Artist's Dream," brought exceptional praise from both press and public. A gigantic artist's palette with huge illuminated brushes served as a frame for a violinist and four singers. The head of each girl singer appeared in the center of a bunch of colored cloth representing a large daub of paint.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine" Gets Clever Exploitation

It was just after the Wall Street bomb explosion—a matter of two weeks after it—when banking circles of Atlanta were considerably wrought up over letters which had been received by each banking concern in town. The letter was written in a feminine hand, on beautiful stationery very faintly scented, and read:

"Look out—he's coming October 20th. Beware!"

Enclosed with the letter was a snapshot—and it was the snapshot that received most attention, for it depicted a convict in the traditional stripes, kneeling in front of a big, modern safe, working the combination. The picture had been taken at such an angle that the man's upturned coat-collar partly obscured his face, and he wore a black mask.

These letters and snapshots, turned over to the police, were the objects of much speculation—particularly when it was discovered that each bank-official received the same picture, and letters alike. The police maintained an air of deep, dark mystery, and the wildest rumors imaginable crept out all over town—the wildest of all being that the man in the snapshot was a particularly bold crook who took this means of showing his contempt of the law, and that he was not only going to rob a bank or two, but he and his gang were going to blow up the post-office at 7.30 on the evening of October 20th.

And on the morning of October 20th each of the bank-officials who received the first letter found another on the same sort of heavy, creamy stationery with its faint scent, reading,

"He's here—Jimmy Valentine, at the Alamo No. 2, today and tomorrow."

It was Manager George Schmidt's little stunt for interesting the town in the second-run of the picture, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," at his theatre. And the bank-officials who had put on extra guards and did not deny feeling a wee bit "skittish," looked considerably foolish when the whole story was revealed.

Mr. Schmidt's lobby was the original of the snap-shot—just the kneeling "dummy" in convict garb, before a huge, modern safe. And the appearance of the startlingly life-like figure, absorbed in its feminine hand.

Mack Truck Parade Gets Attention at Pittsburgh

The Mack truck parade, as a tie-up with "What's Your Hurry," was given to delighted Pittsburghers with a slightly new angle when the picture started its run at the Liberty and Blackstone theatres in that city. Elmer E. Rutter, exploitation representative at the local exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, decided that it was time to put something more than a mere placard on the lumbering trucks to arouse interest so he had two cutouts of Wallace Reid designed as shown below.

The sight of the young man rushing along the side of the truck gave a suggestion to prospective theatregoers that they might be late for a seat unless they adopted similar tactics.

"Performance Counts" was the advertising keynote to the joint exploitation of Mack trucks in connection with the picture. The parade did the usual Barnum & Bailey around the main street of Pittsburgh, but with such evident success in attracting the attention of theatregoers that both houses

Here Is a New Matinee Idea

Does your theatre make money from 11 a. m. to 2 p. m.

If not you might try the idea originated by the Alhambra theatre, Utica, N. Y., a "Lunch Hour Club" with the slogan of "Watch While You Eat."

Utica has any number of office workers who cope with the high cost of living by carrying their lunches. The fact that all these office workers were available for patronage purposes with no way of reaching them appealed to the Lux Brothers. "The Virtuous Vamp," in which Constance Talmadge is starred as a stenographer, appealed to them as a feature which offered a peculiar appeal to office workers. They had a number of neat cards printed declaring that the eating of lunches would be permitted in the theatre between the hours of eleven and two and then went to the biggest firms in Utica.

They pointed out to the employers that their clerks and stenographers were not getting the relaxation they ought to have during the noon hour, in order to get after the afternoon's work with "pep" when they stayed by their desks and ate their lunch. They suggested that the novelty of a motion picture lunch club should be attractive enough to get the employes out in the open air for a walk to the theatre and their minds would get the rest so vital to renewed vigor.

They had no trouble in getting the cards well distributed through all the offices, and the "Noon Hour Lunch Club" has been a success from the start.

Rothapfel Staging Prologue for "Officer 666"

AN effective and appropriate prologue for "Officer 666" is being presented this week at the Capitol theatre.

Countrywide Musical Movements at Work

BY CHARLES D. ISAACSON

FOR the exhibitor and his musical director who are alert to impulses and influences which are convertible into box office revenue, the present musical season offers an unlimited number of fascinating opportunities.

On the assumption that everything of a musical character, which strikes your city or town, is grist to your mill, this article has been written to indicate how, what, when and where to move! Yes, everything of music which comes to your community can be utilized to make patrons for your theatre. How? By linking it in some way at the right time and in the cleverest manner possible.

What are the movements of a musical character which are moving around the country?

I will attempt to give you a slight understanding of the musical affairs on foot —which can be "harnessed to do business for you."

The big opera companies are to make tours. The Metropolitan Opera Company will follow its regular Southern tour. The Chicago Opera Company will enter the most extensive tour ever known in America—visiting the Far West, the Middle West, the Northern cities. The San Carlo Opera Company, under the leadership of Mr. Gallo, will visit probably ninety cities. There are innumerable other opera companies, including four which are under the direction of Ralph Dunbar of Chicago and the Creatore Company. The Scotti Opera Company is giving grand opera in about fifty cities.

The leading orchestras of America—the Boston, National, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, St. Louis, etc., etc., will spread their concerts into the cities of all the neighboring country.

The prominent artists are covering towns and cities they never entered before. For instance, five hundred cities have asked for John McCormack on his return to America. It is utterly impossible for the leading musicians to take all the engagements which are being offered them—it is practically a seller's market!

The great ballets of the world are in America. For instance, Pavlowa, called the incomparable, will be in over one hundred cities; Fokine and Fokina (creators of the ballet) will be the stars in half a hundred festivals; the great choirs of Italy, Russia, America are on tour for solid engagements everywhere. Oratorios are announced in all big cities. The community chorus movement has grown steadily—with announcements of several hundred in steady formation. Then there are those clusters of music clubs.

My great guns!

Musical Picture
Year

America, as I have remarked before, is going veritably music mad.

The thing I would advise you to do is this: Watch your town for all advance announcements of coming musical events. Get yourself on the mailing list of the local concert managers, the local music clubs—and even the resident managers of great artists and musical organizations.

Knowing what is coming, then it behooves you to know what to do. Let us look at a practical case.

The Great Orchestra of the Biggest City near you is coming for a series of three concerts. They are going to play the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, the Schubert Unfinished Symphony on another program, and on the third will include Dvorak's "New World Symphony." Also on the first program there will be a celebrated soprano, say Galli-Curci in an aria from "Dinorah"; in the second a violinist, say Kubelik in a concerto by Wieniawski; and in the third a great pianist, say Ornstein in one of his own mad compositions.

During the weeks wherein these concerts are given, is there any reason why you cannot play either the identical numbers of these programs? Or if you haven't an orchestra is there any reason why you cannot do an organ or piano transcription? Or even another composition of the same composer? Is there any reason why you cannot announce that the Particular Orchestra is coming and then show their program and also say, "In our theatre you can hear the same composition either before or after or in place of the great orchestral concert—all thrown in with your picture show"? "That you can learn more of the beauties of the symphony by hearing us do it again, or by getting an idea of it here, when you go down there, the performance by that orchestra will mean more."

In connection with the soloist, when Galli-Curci sings, why can you not put on a good coloratura soprano in the same aria? Why can you not put on Galli-Curci's record possibly on a good phonograph in your theatre? Why can you not make a still picture of her on the screen and play a bit from the operas she has appeared in—letting your orchestra or pianist do the music without any voice? When Kubelik plays, why not your star local violinist in the same composition? When Ornstein plays, why can you not even go so far as to engage an Ampico Reproducing piano and do as some other theatres have done—advertise the invisible Ornstein.

When the Pavlowa ballet or any other ballet comes to town, that's the time to put on a high-class esthetic dancing number. When a grand opera is being played, that's the time to put on a Rigoletto "Medley" or an act from "Pagliacci."

When a man like John McCormack arrives, that's the time to put on his favorite songs—like "I hear you calling me" and

These things seem self-evident to the writer of these words. When the interest of the musical public of your community is concentrated on any visiting or local musical enterprise, then it is good publicity and direct business building to divert part of that attention to your house. For those who would go to the concerts, the information you give them may bring them first or afterwards to you—for those who are infatuated with the artists and the orchestras and operatic scores will want another taste—if it be only the substitute taste you can give. But for those who do not go to the regular concerts and who don't want to go—the fact that they can get some kind of an idea at your theatre will appeal strongly.

I can see an enterprising motion picture manager grabbing the visiting musical organization in some way. For instance, when the Great Orchestra comes he will pay whatever the price demanded to bring over the orchestra for a single performance either before or after their regular concert—or engage the conductor to come over for a guest performance, or get the

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Joan Feature Goes Big in New York State

The five-reel Fanny Ward state-right release "She Played and Paid," released by Joan, is winning its way into the theatres of New York State, thanks to the energetic efforts of Sam Zierler and Fred Zimmerman, of the Commonwealth and the Nu-Art exchanges respectively, and to the merits of the picture itself, announces Joan in a statement issued recently.

Some of the representative houses that have booked "She Played and Paid" are: The Empire in Buffalo, the Grand, Auburn, The Ditmus in Perth Amboy, the Sheffield, Olympic, Avon, Fulton Auditorium and Classique of Brooklyn; the Colonial of West Hoboken, the Strand and Empire in New Brunswick, the Brighton of Brighton Beach, the Boston Hotel in Coney Island, the U. S. Photoplay of Paterson, the Putnam in Newark, the Lyric, Mt. Vernon; the Yorkville Casino, Atlantic Gardens, Grand Opera House, The 14th Street and the 34th St. Superior, of New York City.

Joan states that a few territories on "She Played and Paid" are still open for states-right men.

Two "Scattergood" Pictures Completed

Edna Schley Productions, Inc., have completed two of the famous "Scattergood" stories by Clarence Budington Kelland. The first filmed, "Scattergood Makes a Match," received flattering comment at a preview at the Strand theatre, Pasadena.

The second, "Soothing Syrup," is ready for preview and "Down the Line" is ready for production. It is the plan to produce thirteen "Scattergood" two reelers a year.

Franchise Holders Choose

Release Dates to Be Decided by Them, Announces Harry A. Sherman

FRANCHISE holders in Sherman Productions Corporation will decide the date when the first attraction is to be released and will also determine the number of pictures which will be made during each year, over and above the regular number required by their contract, according to a statement by Harry A. Sherman, president of the company.

They will also have an important voice in all production matters, their recommendations as to production costs and the character of the stories desired by the exhibitors in their territory, being the deciding factor in the production policy of Sherman Productions Corporation.

Mr. Sherman, who is now busy perfecting his production plans, which call for a minimum of twelve pictures annually, is enthusiastic over his company's success.

With more than sixty per cent of the entire territory in the United States and Canada already satisfactorily allotted and with six productions completed or in work, all of which wil be ready for release between now and January, 1921, he feels that he has good reason to be optimistic. This record of accomplishment has been effected without requiring outside capital of any kind or even securing the advances which are customary between the producer and his distributing units, when production on a large scale is undertaken.

Under the terms of agreement with each franchise-holder all costs of Sherman production are to be borne by the producing company until the actual delivery of the completed positive prints. The exchange then pays its proportion of the cost, as regards the territory.

Lithographs, lobby display and all accessories are also to be prepared and their cost, financed by the producing company and delivered under a similar arrangement. In addition Sherman Productions corporation will carry on an extensive advertising campaign in the trade press on each release, without charge or expense of any kind to the distributing units.

A convention of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., formed last spring by a number of leading Independent exchange men, is scheduled for November 14th, 15th, 16th and 17th in St. Louis. The St. Louis member of Federated is Sam Werner, of the United Film Service. The members will meet at the Hotel Statler, and will consider several big contracts that, it is said, have been submitted to them to handle the releases of popular stars. The representation will be from all over the United States.

First Alice Howell's Comedies Ready

George B. West, general manager of the Sun-Kist Comedy Company, is on his way East with the sample prints of the first two Alice Howell single reel comedies, and intends to stop off at all the important exchange centers for trade showings. Those who have had an opportunity to see these comedies are said to have been high in their praise of Miss Howell's work and that of her director, Dick Smith.

Two directors will alternate in the handling of this series of 52 single reelers to be released through states-right market in order to give each director a week of spare time to prepare the script for the next picture while the first director is "shooting" his picture. Dick Smith will supervise all the comedies of both directors.

The first two Howell comedies are finished and have been titled "Boulevard Profiteers" and "Who Chose Your Wife"? and work is progressing on the third.

Prepare Southern Drive on Joan Pictures

A report that has just arrived from Louis Baum, sales manager of the Joan Film Sales Co. to the home office, brings news of an extensive plan drawn up by the Eltabran Film Co. of Charlotte, N. C., the aim of which will be to popularize the two Joan releases "The Invisible Ray," a 15-episode serial, and the twelve two-reel Billy West comedies in the South.

The plan was outlined as a result of the purchase last week by the Eltabran of the two pictures mentioned last week. Eltabran has mapped out a course of action that provides for concentrating on one state at a time.

Reelcraft Adds Scenics to Program

Another series of releases is to be added to the exclusive Short Subject program of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, according to the announcement of President R. C. Cropper. This newest addition will consist of a weekly single-reel release in the form of a scenic and will be known as the "Reelcraft Scenic Series."

In distributing a scenic release, Reelcraft is fulfilling a promise to its distributing exchanges, who have long demanded such a release for their programs. In some territories, where no arrangements have as yet been made, the series will be offered to the Independent State Right buyers.

In planning this new series, Reelcraft announces that it will break away from the old traditions of the scenic picture usually offered to exhibitors, and include in each release some special interest or action. Not until several releases had been completed that measured up to the standard of requirement did Reelcraft announce the series to the trade.

Ten pictures have already been completed, selected from the best views obtainable in the western rockies.

Release on the new series will be announced shortly.

Englishman Known as Famous French Count of the Screen

Leo White, "French Count of the screen," the versatile fun star of Pinnacle Comedies released through the Independent Films Association of Chicago, was an actor at the age of seven.

At that time he played small parts and "bits" in many of the principal plays showing in and about London.

Born in Manchester, England, on November 10, 1887, Mr. White comes of a long theatrical line.

Leo White came to America fourteen years ago with the "Three Little Maids" company. He has played with Essanay, Universal and other companies.

West Point Sports in Arrow Single Reel

Arrow Film Corporation is in receipt of advice from Town and Country Films, producers of The Sport Pictorial, that Jack Eaton, president of the Town and Country Films, has gone to West Point for a week to secure scenes for a forthcoming issue of The Sport Pictorial. This is to include scenes of the various sport activities of the world's most famous military academy.

Movie Chats at Rialto and Rivoli

Charles Urban's Movie Chats are shown simultaneously in the Rivoli and Rialto Pictorials this week. Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld choose the Series No. 5, illustrating a day of fine sport in England.

The picture is said to be delightfully done and Dr. Riesenfeld makes much of it by his musical illustration.

Fanark Film for Pioneer

"The Crimson Cross" to Be Given Special Exploitation Campaign

"THE CRIMSON CROSS," N. Brewster Morse's story dealing with hypnotism, which George Everett picturized for the Fanark Corporation as its initial screen offering, will be distributed by the Pioneer Film Corporation.

This announcement was made early this week from the offices of President A. E. Lefcourt, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York. by M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer Film Corporation, following completion of the final details of the releasing arrangements which have been under discussion by Fanark and Pioneer officials for a fortnight past.

Under the terms of the deal, Pioneer undertakes to give "The Crimson Cross" a special exploitation and advertising campaign, with a full line of lithographs, lobby displays, advertising accessories and helps for the exhibitor, carrying out and maintaining the high standard already established by Fanark for this picture.

Pioneer officials, who also distributed Mr. Morse's previous screen success, "His Brother's Keeper," for the American Cinema, are said to be enthusiastic over the box office possibilities of "The Crimson Cross."

Tentative arrangements are being made, it is said, to secure the releasing rights to the second Fanark picture, also by Mr. Morse, titled "The Strength of the Weak," which George Everett will direct. Production on this picture will begin within the next week.

While no definite date has yet been set for the release of "The Crimson Cross" by Pioneer, bookings for first runs are already being made and applications being received for dates from exhibitors everywhere.

Zierler's Strong Program

Commonwealth Film Has Popular Features, Comedies and Serial

WITH the purchase of five super-productions, twelve two-reel cemodies and a strong serial, the Commonwealth Film Corporation, Sam Zierler, president, this week signalized its removal from the Mecca Building to 729 7th Avenue. The purchase is regarded as the largest buy made at one time by any independent exchange in the country.

The features include "Keep to the Right," starring Edith Taliaferro, "The Rich Slave," starring her sister, Mabel Taliaferro, "For The Freedom of Ireland," a very timely production, with excellent box office angles, the Babe Ruth picture, "Headin' Home," and "Hell's Oasis," starring Neal Hart. "Hell's Oasis" is the first of a series of eight Westerns, starring Hart, that will be handled by Commonwealth.

The comedies bought by the Zierler organization are the new Billy West productions. The serial, the first to be released in this territory by Commonwealth is "The Invisible Ray," starring Jack Sherrill and Ruth Clifford.

"The pictures I bought this week are for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey," said President Zierler, who also controls the world rights to "The Hidden Light," regarded as Dolores Cassinelli's greatest picture. "It was only after viewing scores of features, serials and comedies, that I made the above selections, I believe they will meet with the high standard of Commonwealth releases.

"I have also bought two productions, which I believe are the best that have ever been offered on the independent market. I will announce them shortly."

Popularity Foreseen for "Adam and Eve"

That pictures adapted from popular book and stage successes are more in demand than those adapted from original scenarios is said to be evident from replies received to a questionnaire sent out by the Clark Cornelius Corp., in regard to "Adam and Eve," and other productions to be distributed this year through state rights exchange.

"Adam and Eve," is a pictorial version of the novel and stage production, written by Louisa Parr and C. E. Monro, English authors, and was adapted for the screen by George Edwards Hall.

The play first won fame on the English speaking stage and later won world renown following its appearance in other parts of the world. Godfrey Tearle, brother of Conway Tearle, plays the leading masculine role in the picture.

Unity Moore, who plays the part of little Eve, opposite Mr. Tearle, is an emotional actress of known talent, endowed with superlative physical charms as well as a compelling personality and unusual histrionic ability, born with a long experience on the legitimate stage and on the screen.

The book has had a wide circulation in this country and has been read by millions in all parts of the world.

Arrow Film Contracts for De Remer Series

Word is received from the Arrow Film Corporation that they have contracted with the Lyric Productions Company for a series of special productions starring the emotional actress, Rubye De Remer, production of which was started at the Erbograph studios on Monday of last week.

Miss De Remer is well known on both stage and screen and is considered one of the most beautiful blondes in motion pictures. She has posed for many artists, having been selected on account of her striking beauty and has been pronounced by artists to be the perfect blonde type.

It is understood that work has already been started on the first Rubye De Remer production, which is from a story by the well-known author, Herman Landon, which appeared in magazine form recently. Title of this production, together with other details, will be announced in the near future.

Fischer Company Busy on Interiors

David G. Fischer's company, making "In the Shadow of the Dome," headed by Dixie Lee, is working on the smaller interior sets for the production at the Blackton studios in Brooklyn this week. On the conclusion of these scenes, a Fort Lee studio will be used for a reproduction of the House of Representatives, which will be the setting for one of the smashing climaxes of the picture.

The photoplay which will run to eight reels, will not complete production until the end of November.

Special Pictures Adds to Selling Force

In launching a sales drive for the coming winter, H. J. Roberts, general sales manager of the Special Pictures Corporation, has augmented his exchange forces and made numerous changes in the personnel of the branch offices for greater efficiency in getting the Special Pictures productions in the hands of the exhibitors.

The list of exchange managers as announced this last week includes B. C. Gibson, Atlanta; M. Thomas, Boston; Harry S. Gans, Buffalo; Pat Dillon, Chicago; W. E. Condell, Cincinnati; W. A. Hoffman, Cleveland; Sol Davis, Dallas; R. T. Ryan, Denver; Hal Smith, Detroit; O. P. Fauchier, Indianapolis; Sam Goldflam, Kansas City; E. K. Lamson, Los Angeles; Tom Kress, Minneapolis; Will T. Richards, New Orleans; Harold Rodner, New York; W. E. Smith, Philadelphia; H. C. Gauding, Pittsburg; H. L. Pitner, St. Louis; W. E. Matthews, San Francisco; A. H. Ruot, Seattle; Harry Cohen, Washington, D. C.

"Direct-to-Public" Advertising to Be Used

Again a new business idea is employed in exploiting the new two-reel "Top Notch" Comedies; instead of advertising the series direct to the state rights buyers and "pushing" the sale through trade paper advertisements, the Plymouth Producing and Distributing Syndicate of Cleveland, Ohio, adapted the "pull" system. Over $1,000 is spent weekly by this company for fiction magazines and newspaper advertisements.

With their great all year around Title Contest, advertising it in newspapers and magazines all through the country, giving away $7,800 in cash prizes direct to the theatre patrons, they arouse a public interest.

Cooperating with the post office department, arrangements have been made by which synopses of all Top Notch releases will be available to all who request them, and by which, in the event of a tie, prizes of equal value will be distributed to all tying for a particular place.

The film exchanges, however, will find the weekly announcement of the Plymouth Producing and Distributing Syndicate regularly in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Jans Spectacle Opens in Detroit

Herman F. Jans opened his spectacle "Madonnas and Men" at Kunsky's Madison theatre in Detroit on Sunday, October 31, to record breaking business. Thousands stood in line during the day clamoring for admittance, according to reports and the theatre was packed from morning till night. The general opinion, it is said, was that "Madonnas and Men" will be one of the greatest successes and will enjoy one of the longest runs of recent years. The engagement has been prolonged indefinitely.

Stoll Adds to English Studio

Aeroplane Factory is Taken Over by British Company

THE Stoll Film Company, Ltd., of London, the productions of which will be distributed in the United States by the Stoll Film Corporation of America, is making extensive additions to its manufacturing facilities in England. The company has converted a large aeroplane factory at Cricklewood into a studio, laboratory and general offices which it is authoritatively stated is the largest plant devoted to motion picture making in the British Isles. The Cricklewood establishment will supplement the large studio at Surbiton which has served the company since it began producing pictures and which will be continued in active operation.

The outstanding feature of the latest example of Stoll enterprise is the extensive lighting equipment, which is in charge of W. T. Skidmore, an expert formerly connected with the Famous Players-Lasky forces in this country. The apparatus was selected following an inspection of the best studios in the United States, France and Italy by George King, formerly general manager of the Stoll Film Company and now president of the Stoll Film Corporation of America.

Consequently the technical equipment of the Cricklewood plant represents the last word in efficiency. There are, for instance, forty banks of Cooper-Hewitt mercury vapor lamps, four Sunlight arcs, twenty-four Wohl broadsides, twenty Wohl duplex toplights and twenty Wohl tilts. Also there are ten Kliegl spotlights of 70 amperes each and three of 100 amperes each, as well as eight semi-indirect Wohl toplights. All of the plugging and wall boxes are Kliegl also.

One of the novelties of the studio is a stage, parts of the floor of which are of glass. Here unusual effects have been secured by shooting streams of light through from below.

Mr. King, in commenting on the technical equipment of the Cricklewood studio, expressed the opinion that in view of its elaborateness and also up-to-dateness there should be no doubt in the mind of the American exhibitor that Stoll interiors will continue to be sufficiently and efficiently illuminated.

"The Tiger's Coat" on November Schedule

"The Tiger's Coat," one of the three pictures to be released during November, Hodkinson's anniversary month, is said by the Hodkinson organization to be that type of picture in which the theatre-going public delights. There is maintained throughout a foreign atmosphere which is most pleasing, and the picture is in a large measure dominated by the exotic personality of Tina Modotti, the gifted Italian artiste.

Lawson Butt gives a performance which is said to be fully on a par with all of his great successes in the past. A third player, who is well known, is Myrtle Stedman.

Davis Feature for Independents

Faith in Field Puts "Isobel" on State Right Market

FAITH in the independent field and faith in its future were the motives which prompted George H. Davis, who is presenting "Isobel, or The Trail's End," by James Oliver Curwood, to offer this big production to the state rights buyer rather than dispose of it to any one of a number of important producing corporations for distribution. In an announcement this week, Mr. Davis stated that he had received offers from the largest corporations in the country for all rights to this rugged story of the Northland, but had adhered to his decision of state righting it because of his desire to help the independent buyer in his search for the good things of the industry.

It is Mr. Davis' belief that the independent field is developing in scope and power to a level with any other branch of the industry. However, he has declared, this field must be given the opportunity to obtain the right kind of pictures, and for this reason he has placed "Isobel, or The Trail's End" at the disposal of state rights buyers.

"Last week," said Mr. Davis, "I said that this picture in my opinion closely approximated the 100 per cent box office attraction. Since that announcement was made it has been viewed by many local and out-of-town buyers, as well as a number of trade reviewers. They have to a man borne me out in every statement."

"Isobel, or The Trail's End," if cast and direction and photography are criterions by which a production may be judged, is one of the most important offerings of the year. It is significant of the growth to power of the independent market that this feature, directed by Edwin Carewe and with a cast which includes House Peters and Jane Novak, should be offered that field in preference to any other. Along this line, the editor-in-chief of a New York trade publication had this to say in regard to "Isobel":

"This is a picture which in theme, in direction and in acting would be acceptable as a release for any of the great producing companies as a special, and the fact that it is being released independently is significant of the future of the independent field."

Mr. Davis has given a number of showings of a studio print of the story—there remains some editing and titling before it is ready for release—and has received the praise of every audience, it is stated. The general comment has been that never was the independent buyer offered, upon a reasonable basis, so important a production.

The result of the favorable comment the picture has received, and its preliminary exploitation, has been that Mr. Davis has been deluged with wires and letters seeking information. Indications are that "Isobel, or The Trail's End," will prove one of the most successful independent ventures of the year, if not of all time. Mr. Davis is highly gratified at the general interest it has created, which he holds as evidence of cause for faith in the independent field when it is given the opportunity to obtain a picture which requires the biggest kind of exploitation and handling.

Announcements of franchise holders will be made by Mr. Davis in the near future.

Critics Pleased with "The Truant Husband"

As a vindication of his belief in the box-office and entertainment value of a thoroughly human and wholesome domestic comedy of feature length, Ray Rockett, president of the Rockett Film Company cites the verdict of the trade press on "The Truant Husband," the company's initial offering. The critics of the various trade journals pronounced "The Truant Husband" one of the most diverting feature offerings of the current season, several predicting an exceptional measure of box-office success for the Rockett feature.

Epitomizing the critical encomiums applied to "The Truant Husband" are such expressions as "Ray and Al Rockett have given the motion picture public perhaps the best feature comedy thrown on the screen"; "Thoroughly modern entertainment"; "A Delight [illegible]. Grab it when you get the chance."

Sidney Ascher

Ascher Features Have Buffalo Office

Sidney Ascher, president of Ascher Features, Inc., made a flying trip to Buffalo this week in the interest of his company and with the view of reorganizing his newly acquired Buffalo office, which he took over from the Hamilton Pictures Corp. at the time he secured the franchise to distribute the Triangle, Keystone and Hamilton Specials in New York and northern New Jersey.

Mr. Ascher states that additional salesmen will be put on but does not say at this time whether there will be any changes made in the sales force or management of the office.

In company with Mr. Ascher on his trip to Buffalo was William Alexander, head of Alexander Film Corporation, which concern will have the physical distribution of all Ascher Features, Inc. productions for both the New York and Buffalo offices.

Abramson Plans Drive on "Wrong Woman"

Ivan Abramson has written, directed and produced "The Wrong Woman," a society drama recently released, which features Olive Tell and Montague Love. Announcing his plan to exploit this picture, he has prepared an advertising campaign and already twenty-four sheets have been posted about the city.

One of the features of the exploitation campaign for "The Wrong Woman," is an elaborate press book just completed. It is a sixteen page book with a two color front and back cover scheme. Features of the book include a story of the dramatic achievement of the producer enumerating his twenty-five years of experience in the dramatic field. Pictures of the stars and their achievement in the motion picture industry form one of the pages.

One page has been devoted to three teaser campaigns with a story on the handling of teasers and advertising. Special attention has peen paid to a postal card to mail, catchphrases, advertising ideas, contests and newspaper stories. A complete newspaper campaign has been prepared on all angles of the stars and the production.

Stories Sought by Kremer

Producer Wants Plots for Guinan Series: Director is Also Needed

VICTOR KREMER, who will star Texas Guinan in a series of Western features, announces that as yet he has not chosen the story for the star's initial picture. The producer is also anxious to find a capable director.

"But I will not put my O. K. on anything until the consensus of opinion gleaned from all authoritative sources is satisfactory," said Mr. Kremer. "I must be sure the pictures are winners—prize winners. The challenge is clear. Here is the author's chance. No need of whining—give my company the 'story exceptional' and no fear about 'getting together' on the remuneration. Aid necessary to any writer desiring to present his offering will be cheerfully extended. Personal interviews, so as to study the star, etc., will be gladly arranged for and this applies to directors as well.

"Of course this must not be understood to mean that money will be squandered to suit the alas too often ridiculous demands of authors and directors. What I mean is that there will be no stinting. Full value will be paid for full value received.

"There remains to be added, or rather reiterated: Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., is about to show a sample of the kind of own made product the trade may expect in future, be same western or otherwise."

Celebrated Enlarges Scope

Chicago Concern to Release 26 Features and 24 Specials a Year

CELEBRATED PLAYERS FILM CORPORATION of Chicago, it is announced by Joseph L. Friedman, president, will enter the feature film distributing field this month. The company proposed to release twenty-six features, or two a month, between November 1, 1920, and November 1, 1921, or at the rate of one every other week, and, in addition, they will issue twenty-four special features. These productions will be the pick of the market as offered from time to time by the independent producers.

Heretofore, Celebrated has handled mainly one and two-reel subjects, with the exception of the serials distributed by that organization, and has built up an immense business with them.

The demand for longer features to go with the short subjects and make up complete Celebrated programs has become more and more insistent, it is said, and now Mr. Friedman has arranged to meet this demand by adding twenty-four special features under the Federated Brand, which will be available through his exchange.

The new Bessie Love feature, "Bonnie May," which was made by Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., and directed by Ida May Parks and Joseph De Grasse, will be the first of the Celebrated special features.

"The Servant in the House" will be the second feature. The story is based on the stage play by Charles Rann Kennedy, which created a sensation ten years ago in New York and on the road.

Kineto Review at Capital

Rothapfel Presents "Emerald Isle" in Artistic Fashion on Broadway

S. L. ROTHAPFEL presents one of the Kineto Reviews at the Capitol Theatre this week. He has selected Number 37 from this series of the Urban Popular Classics and dramatized it in his original fashion.

"The Emerald Isle" is the title to it by Charles Urban with the subtitle "A Restful Land of a Restless People;" an apt summing up of Ireland's present day unrest.

Mr. Rothapfel in his presentation of it shows a single reel subject can actually be made into a feature. He presents it with a vocal interpolation by Miss Ruth Pearcy who sings, "Come Back to Erin."

The huge audience reacted splendidly to Mr. Rothapfel's choice, as well as the critics on the morning papers. More than a few of them actually used the same phraseology, speaking of it as "charming."

"All exhibitors," states Kineto, "can easily afford to take a tip from the way Mr. Rothapfel presented this picture. Ordinarily a one-reel subject of this nature passes under the broad description of a "scenic." Under the direction of such a showman as the manager of the Capitol it becomes a great deal more than that; it becomes what Mr. Urban intends all the Urban Popular Classics to be; a one-reel feature."

Many Acrobatic Feats in "Honeymoon Ranch"

One of the outstanding features of "Honeymoon Ranch," the five-reel Western feature which Bert Lubin is state righting, is the daring acrobatic work of Harry McLaughlin, who is co-starred with Allene Ray in this Tex O'Reilly screen adaptation.

McLaughlin makes a fast getaway by diving head foremost from the top of a high fence to his horse's back. At another time he makes a spectacular drop from the top of a house to the ground.

Arrow Plans Campaign on "The Tame Cat"

Arrow Film Corporation states that one of the most complete advertising campaigns ever inaugurated will be used in exploiting "The Tame Cat," and states that a complete line of advertising accessories of unusual attractiveness will be supplied on this production. The advertising and publicity department is at present preparing a press book which will be an exhaustive analysis of the picture. A complete line of paper, photographs, slides and novelty advertisements is also being prepared. A further announcement concerning this production, with all information as to author, cast, etc., will be made in the near future.

Little can be learned about this picture save that it is considered by Arrow officials to be one of the biggest pictures of the year. They state that it is an adaptation of a novel by one of the greatest authors of English literature, who has had several of his works adapted to the screen with marked success. They claim further that this is by far his greatest novel, and that for years producers have been desirous of producing it but have hesitated due to the unusualness of the theme and situations it was thought that it would be impossible to adapt this to the requirements of the motion picture drama. Production was made by Dramafilms, Inc., under the direction of Will Bradley, the man who picturized and directed "Bitter Fruit," and the Arrow states that in "The Tame Cat" he has given to the screen one of the most notable productions in motion picture history.

Cartoonist M. T. Ross to Draw for Screen

The latest cartoonist to heed the call of the screen is M. T. Ross, creator of "Mamma's Angel Child" and other drawings which, for the past fifteen years, have appeared in the Chicago Tribune and many of America's leading newspapers.

Mr. Ross, widely known as "Penny" Ross, and Will M. Hight, veteran showman and publicity expert, who has been connected with a number of leading production companies, plan to put out a series of one reelers to be entitled, "Esther Starring Series of Animated Cartoons, by the creator of "Mamma's Angel Child." The first release has been fixed for December 1st and one will be release each week thereafter.

Merit Film Exchange of Chicago will distribute the series through the state right market and report that already more than forty-three percent of the United States territory has been disposed of.

"Hired and Fired" to Be New Hallroom Comedy

"Wrong Woman" Popular in New York

"The Wrong Woman," Ivan Abramson's latest release is being rapidly booked throughout the metropolitan territory, according to reports. Already it is being played at all the upper Broadway houses. It has been booked on the M. and S. Circuit with houses in New York and Brooklyn and in various other theatres in the district.

For the opening showing of the production, Director Abramson secured the personal appearance of Olive Tell at the Regent theatre last Friday evening. Miss Tell appeared as the star of the production and was warmly welcomed by the fans. She told of her work on the screen and of her pleasure in being able to work with such a versatile director as Mr. Abramson, "who wrote, directed and produced his own pictures."

Hugo Ballin to Produce Eight Films a Year

With his first independent production, "The Honorable Gentleman," scheduled for release by Hodkinson, Hugo Ballin's plans for future activities are being carefully formulated and shortly will be put into effect. Increased capitalization of Hugo Ballin Productions, Inc., will bring about an expansion of activities in keeping with his aims.

This year, it is announced, there will be eight productions, made possible by two units. One-half of the output will be directed by Hugo Ballin himself, and the remainder will be personally supervised by him, with another director in immediate control.

He has acquired the rights to four stories and is putting the finishing touches on the scenario of his forthcoming production.

First of C. B. C. Series is Announced

"The Mormon Trail" is the title of the first release of Star Ranch Westerns, now being offered the State Rights market by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York. Star Ranch Westerns are offered in a series of twenty-six two-reelers, one every two weeks.

"Baseball Scandal" Popular in Chicago

"The Great Baseball Scandal," the single reel slow motion photography exposure of all principal plays in baseball, offered the State Rights field by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, is said to have created a sensation in Chicago where it has been booked in the State street and other first run houses by Celebrated Film Corporation.

Inter-Ocean Starts 6th Year

Export Company Shows Enormous Growth in Five Years

ROUNDING out five years of activity as a motion picture organization, during which time it has grown from a small idea to a gigantic enterprise, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, with its production and distribution plans for the 1920-1921 season completed, embarks this month upon its sixth year as an export institution.

On the occasion of its sixth anniversary, Paul H. Cromelin, president of the company has prepared a special statement, representing a resume of Inter-Ocean's activities during the past five years of its history. The statement follows:

"When the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation was organized five years ago, it defined its policy as a motion picture export organization specializing in the distribution of a high-grade American films and motion picture accessory products in foreign markets. In explaining this policy, the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation realized that the American producer who conducted a business largely confined to national boundaries, usually concentrated his sales efforts towards domestic distribution, and gave little or no attention to the foreign film market. The organizers of this project also knew that the American producer would be quick to perceive the benefits of such a company.

"That was five years ago. At that time the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation occupied an insignificant suite of offices in the Candler Building. This month, as it enters upon its sixth year of activity, the expansion of its business has necessitated the exclusive use of an entire five-story building.

"Five years ago, the foreign film market, its scope and possibilities were unknown to the American producer. Today, it represents a vital adjunct to his business. Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, acting as the medium through which foreign buyers were enabled to obtain exclusive territorial rights to American productions, with pardonable pride, feels that it has played no small part in the development of foreign trade in behalf of the American producer.

"In the execution of contracts calling for the distribution of American films in foreign markets, the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has always maintained that American producers need the co-operation of an established export organization equipped with the necessary resources to render a genuine foreign sales service— profitably.

"Besides its activities in the exportation of American-made films into foreign markets, the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation was also instrumental in bringing to America the best cinema offerings made by our foreign confreres. The company has encouraged the importation of foreign-made productions, and feels that there is a market in America for high-grade pictures, irrespective of the source of manufacture.

"The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has also blazed the trail for the distribution of American-made motion picture accessory products in foreign countries. With a varied assortment of accessory products including such articles as motion picture machines, studio equipment, carbons, motor generators, incandescent lamps, carbon adapters, rewinds, film cabinets, stripping flanges, film reels, fireproof film boxes, copper terminals, metal film carrying cases, condensers, lenses, spotlights, screens and a score of additional products, it has come to the fore as a potent factor in internationalizing the motion picture industry."

Gallos Opens Big Campaign

NEXT week will see the City of Chicago awhirl in one of the most, if not the most extensive civic campaigns ever conducted in its history, according to Equity pictures.

The movement for the prevention of accidents on city streets—always a popular cause—has been begun by the Chicago exchangeman, Aaron M. Gollos, who will be ably assisted by his associate and brother, Abraham Gollos, and will be conducted in connection with the Equity six-reel feature, "Keep to the Right," starring Edith Taliaferro.

Electric signs and banners on elevated platforms of Chicago, automobile pennants and stickers, signs on all prominent street corners, slides in motion picture houses, billboards, window cards, signposts, pasters, tags, buttons—every conceivable device of publicity and advertising, will characterize this sweeping campaign. From all indications, the face of Chicago will resemble one grand "Keep to the Right" sign.

Naturally enough, the sanction of the police authorities was first secured. Then the co-operation of the Board of Health, all the welfare and civic organizations, the business and fraternal associations, was enlisted, thus making the drive something of a city affair, and by no means a commercial scheme to draw patrons to the picture. For the first two days, the public will know nothing of the connection between the safety-first drive and the Taliaferro picture. This will be revealed on the third day of the campaign, when all signs will bear a footnote to the effect that Edith Taliaferro is the star in the picture whose slogan they have been following.

Permission of the police to display the traffic signs on thoroughfares was an easier matter than at first supposed, as Chicago road signs read "Keep to the Right" anyway. All that was necessary was to supply additional signs to the city authorities gratis. As Chicago is a strong safety-first center, and drives of this kind a frequent custom, Gollos' suggestion was apropos and welcomed with open arms.

The fact that the picture "Keep to the Right" has nothing to do with traffic, excepting one particular scene where one of the heroine's lovers plunges over an embankment in his car, from which predicament he afterwards escapes, does not alter the effectiveness of the tie-up. Once the public will come to see the picture, Gollos is convinced they will be glad that they were led to do so by the campaign.

Of no little importance is the newspaper publicity that has been promised to put the drive over. A gala parade is being arranged in behalf of the safety-first movement and the banners and standards will all read "Keep to the Right."

Three scenes from William A. Brady's new melodrama "Life" adapted from the stage by the same name, in which Arlene Pretty, J. H. Gilmore and other well known picture players have important roles

S-E Enterprises Have "Cowboy Jazz"

S-E Enterprises announced this week, that they will market a two-reel special feature entitled "Cowboy Jazz." It was made under the auspices of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. "Cowboy Jazz" presents the World's Championship Cowboy Sports, in which the most expert ropers, riders and daredevils of the West perform a variety of hair-raising stunts.

The picture was acquired from Fred Salinger, of Chicago. Marketing on the subject will begin next week.

Reelcraft Will Handle Health Series

"The Little Home Nurse" series of two reel semi-comedy instructive dramas, based on the stories and scenarios of Doctor Showalter, will be distributed through the Reelcraft Exchanges in New York, Chicago, Indianapolis, Milwaukee and Cleveland, according to an announcement of that company.

Reelcraft will not distribute the series nationally, purchasing the series only for its own exchanges in their respective territories.

"Lone Hand Wilson" Is Completed

"Lone Hand Wilson," a five-reel western drama, starring Lester Cuneo, was received at the home office of the Capital Film Company, Chicago, this week. The story is by Wm. S. Piggott. It is said to be an intense drama of the great outdoor west, full of action, heart appeal, suspense and thrills with a climax which is immensely spectacular.

Good Cast and Settings in Hugo Ballin Film

In "The Honorable Gentleman," Hugo Ballin's first independent production, a strong cast will be seen, including such popular players as Mabel Ballin, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Togo Yamamato and little Charlie Fang. The settings, it is said by all who have seen them, are noteworthy for their technical perfection as well as their artistic beauty.

The Small Exhibitor's Problem

EDWARD KRAUPA, president of the Monarch Film Corporation, of Philadelphia, in an interesting letter to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, gives as his belief that high rentals are one of the serious problems confronting the small exhibitor to-day. But Mr. Kraupa goes further than merely giving the evil—he gives what he believes is the cause of the evil. "There is only one way to rid the small town manager of exorbitant rentals," writes this wide-awake exchange man, "and that is by lowering the salaries of the stars. Bless their million-dollar hearts, where is there another business on the earth that would think of such salaries! And, to come down to earth, wouldn't just about half of that salary do these stars? Investigate their previous earnings before they entered the moving picture game. Why I know of one comedian who receives more than a million a year that played in this here slow town of mine for about thirty dollars per not so long ago."

Mr. Kraupa starts off his letter in a way that warms an editor's usually-frozen heart. "Quite interesting to me," is the cheering introduction, "and it must be the same to others, in reading the different trade journals, how they all are going to aid the independent exchanges. But I take off my hat to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS as the first in the field for the independent exchange. It is really amusing to see how the other trade journals are trying to follow you, but you surely do keep ahead, and good luck to the original booster of the independent exchange.

"The fact is, you must realize, that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS belongs to me and other subscribers. It does not belong to you. Keep up the good work and keep the others hustling trying to catch up to you. They can't do it."

Mr. Kraupa has been in the show business for twenty years. In that time he has had the distinction of being arrested many times for blocking traffic in his advertising. "I paid many fines of $50," he states, "but it was worth all I paid.

"In regard to advertising, I believe that window cards, newspapers, heralds and weekly programs are the best ads. possible. I would advise manager to omit such cheap ads. as lotteries, selling books, giving presents and all the other rot. It cheapens your theatre as well as the shows."

Mr. Kraupa ends with a dire protest against the complaints that are ever lodged. against the exchange manager. "He is always wrong," he states, "the booker always makes mistakes; cashiers always forget that the exhibitor paid him long ago; and repair girls always give out the films in bad condition. Of course the manager of the theatre is always right, he always returns films on time, never ruins them, and never owes money."

Mr. Kraupa's final word is almost as good as his first. "Here's good luck," he writes in final benediction, "to the best of all our journals—MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

Live News From Producers

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

The announcement of the new production policy to be enforced by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has called forth enthusiastic endorsements from prominent figures in the industry. Cecil DeMille sees in the new policy the "beginning of a new and greater era of motion-picture productions." "This plan," continues Mr. DeMille, "will inevitably result in pictures incomparably superior to past productions. The new system assures directors of the finest actors and actresses, while similarly insuring stars of the highest quality of directorial ability."

Sir Gilbert Parker, in addressing Jesse L. Lasky on the new production policy, says: "Permit me to say that I think your new production plans embody the quintessence of modernism in motion-picture making and that never in the history of the screen has anything so revolutionary or so calculated to advance the art been undertaken."

Following the announcement of the new policy, Dorothy Dalton expressed the following note of approval for the new idea of assembling stars in the one production:

"I think all thoughtful artists should be more concerned with the parts they play and the stories they help to portray than with the fact that others may share stellar honors with them.

"You may count on my staunchest co-operation, and I am waiting eagerly for news as to the part I am to play first under the new plan."

"Held in Trust" Well Received on Coast

Liberal praise for Metro's presentation of "Held in Trust," the story of high social life and financial intrigue, starring May Allison, is given by newspaper critics of Los Angeles, Cal., according to a statement from the Metro headquarters. This picture, adapted for the screen from the story by George Kibbe Turner which appeared in The Red Book Magazine, was shown at Tally's theatre for the week commencing October 9.

The reception given this production at its showing on the West Coast is taken by Metro officials to indicate that it will prove one of the successes of the year and that the readers of the story in magazine form are eager to see it in picture form.

A big scene from "The Sins of Rozanne," adapted from the Cynthia Stockley story. Ethel Clayton is starred. It is to be a Paramount picture.

"Doug's" Latest is Ready

"Mark of Zorro" Set for Release on December 5

"THE MARK OF ZORRO" has been selected as the title for the fourth Fairbanks' production, to be released by the United Artists Corporation, the release date having been set for December 5th, according to the announcement made by Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists, this week.

The Fairbanks Studio is all enthusiasm over this production and at a pre-review of the picture in Los Angeles this week the critics and newspaper men who viewed the production are said to have declared it to be without mental reservation the best picture "Doug" has ever made, excelling every production he previously presented. Much of this success is due to some extent to the story by Johnston McCulley, "The Curse of Capistrano," which appeared in the "All Story Weekly" Magazine, from which the picture was adapted, and beside it being consistently dramatic, it is said to be filled with swift, bristling action, a wholesome, gingery mixture of melodrama and vigorous comedy, crammed full with whirlwind thrills, suspense and irresistibly funny angles, with never a let-up in its headlong pace from the very start to the rip-roaring punch that packs the climax with a tremendous wallop. "Doug" performs a multitude of neck-breaking, agile stunts, wears his infectious smile, and throws such a tremendous amount of devil-may-care "pep" into the dual role he portrays that everyone that has thus far seen the production hails the performance as his best screen offering.

The background of the story is centered around early Southern California of nearly a century ago, when its destinies were zealously guarded by the Spanish settlers. History records the occasions when the Spanish emigrated to the southwest of North America in a climate somewhat similar to that of their native country. A replica of the entire City of Los Angeles, as it existed during those stirring days, was constructed at a stupendous outlay. Over one hundred genuine types were secured for the purpose of realism. They can be seen in the picture attired in their native costumes and pursuing their usual vocations. In fact, every incident to the most minute detail has been given the most careful attention.

It is a dual role that Fairbanks is called upon to essay. As Don ergy. There is a girl in the story that really furnishes the strong love interest.

With Noah Beery, Robert McKim, Charles Hill Mailes and Marguerite DeLaMotte, his leading lady, collected in his cast, Fairbanks has left nothing undone to assure the public the best obtainable in motion pictures. Fred Niblo directed the production.

"Over the Hill," the William Fox special now playing at the Central Theatre, New York City, continues to attract crowds in large numbers. The services of a special policeman has been required to keep the long lines outside the theatre from blocking the traffic, says a report from the William Fox headquarters.

Despite the immense crowds attending the picture during the first week following its premiere on September 19, the eighth week of its Broadway run and the third week of its run at the Central theatre finds the line of ticket-purchasers longer than ever. The "S. R. O." sign is invariably displayed at least thirty minutes before each performance and the choice seats are invariably disposed of forty-eight hours in advance, declares William Fox.

Wanger Head of Paramount Production

In a reorganization of the production forces of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation which aims to bring the varied production activities of the company under a more centralized control, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president in charge of production, has appointed Walter F. Wanger general manager of production, with control over all the company's production units in the East, Los Angeles, London and India.

By Mr. Wanger's appointment the producing centers of the company will look to the New York office more than ever before for general guidance and supervision. From the New York office will be handled the general production policies of the company, as they apply to London, Hollywood and Bombay as well as the Eastern studios.

Mr. Wanger will leave next month for a brief trip to Hollywood to inspect the Lasky studio. In the spring he will go to London and sometime next year will visit the new Famous Players studio in India.

Pathe Appoints Eastern District Manager

Robert Smeltzer, for some months manager of Pathe's Washington office, has just been appointed Eastern district manager of the Pathe distributing concern. He will oversee the work of Pathe branches in Albany, Buffalo, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Washington and Newark.

Vitagraph Teaser Results

"Dead Men Tell No Tales" Brings Queer Results in Press Make-Up

VITAGRAPH'S nation wide teaser campaign for its forthcoming Tom Terriss special production, "Dead Men Tell No Tales," which is now nearing release, has brought some surprising results according to that company. White on black slugs have been used in the campaign, with the straight announcement that "dead men tell no tales," and without a word to indicate what it meant. Usually they have taken the run of the paper, and not always has the make-up man given any particular attention as to just what matter they followed. For instance:

A physician's card appeared in the Brooklyn Eagle, announcing his removal to a new office. It was followed immediately in the column by the unexpected statement: "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

A table d'hote dining place in New York advertised "all you can eat for $1.25," followed by this grim assertion: "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

Somewhat ominous seemed the suggestion carried by the white lettering of the black slug when it followed a patent medicine advertisement in a Providence, R. I., paper which promised "instant relief."

"Learn to drive a car in three lessons," was an advertisement which would have looked better without the following: "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

One of the most shocking juxtapositions was that in which some well meant but somewhat over-enthusiastic "Health Hints" ended just above the slug: "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

Marked copies of newspapers containing just such "breaks" are reaching Vitagraph's General Offices at 469 Fifth Avenue in large numbers. The campaign was not limited to one locality, but included the important daily and trade papers in all parts of the country.

Ray Borrows Christie Star

Laura LaPante to Be Leading Lady in Charles Ray Picture

FOLLOWING the completion of her work as leading woman with Charles Ray in "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway," to whom she was loaned by the Christie Film Company for that particular picture, Dorothy Devore is again at work at the big two-reel comedy plant and is to have prominent roles in a number of pictures which will be released through Educational Exchanges.

However, barely has Miss Devore returned to her regular employers than Ray borrowed Laura La Plante from Christie to be his leading woman in another picture. Miss La Plante scored a big hit with her appearance in the "Jiggs" comedies and she is to have featured roles in Christie pictures when she completes the Ray film.

Mr. Christie is not adverse to lending his players on occasion for big features, since he believes that this broadens their experience and also affords them a considerable amount of additional publicity.

Miss La Plante has already won many favorites by her past work, and it is expected that she will as many more in her forthcoming Ray picture. Her selection by Charles Ray is taken as another proof that when Mr. Christie picks beauties for his companies, they are beauties in every sense of the word, as well as excellent actresses.

Strand Sees "Torchy" Hines

Youthful Star of Comedies Makes Personal Appearance in Brooklyn

JOHNNY HINES, portrayer of Sewel Ford's redheaded office boy in the Torchy Comedies, is scoring a success this week with his personal appearance at the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, in connection with the showing of "Torchy In High," his third two-reeler made by Master Films, Inc., and released through Educational Exchanges.

While New York audiences are fairly familiar with personal appearances and are not so easily impressed as others, the manner in which this one was staged is said to have scored an unusual hit. "Torchy In High" centers around an automobile and Torchy's efforts to see Vee, the heroine of the Ford stories. Eventually Torchy recovers the car which he is responsible for disappearing and the final scene shows Auntie telling Torchy that he is welcome any night at her home but that the lights go out at ten. And Torchy stretches out his hands and replies: "I'll be there at ten."

Just at the conclusion of the picture, Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Strand focussed the spotlight on Hines, standing in the orchestra, costumed as he was at the end of the picture, and standing in the same position with his hands outstretched. After the applause that greeted him the star told a number of stories, carefully avoiding the usual "star stuff" and confining his talk to topics of the day. He was seen every evening during the week.

According to Educational the reports from exhibitors that these comedies pick up business as each one is shown, and that every release shows a healthy gain in box office returns over the one that has just gone before.

According to Mr. Hyman, he has never shown a series of comedies that have made a success exceeding that of the Torchys at the Brooklyn Strand.

Dougherty Engaged for Alice Lake Film

Jack Dougherty has been engaged by Metro to inject his "red-haired personality" into Alice Lake's first special production as a full-fledged Metro star. The picture is entitled "Mother Love."

Wesley Ruggles was added to the Metro directorial staff solely to direct this picture.

Alice Lake, during one of her customary hikes, located an ideal spot in the San Bernardino Mountains for the honeymoon scenes that open the picture. As a consequence the cameras have gotten into action far above the clouds on the initial scenes, and Miss Lake has added the title of "location scout" to that of star.

J. S. Woody Anticipates Realart's Plan Will Be Big Success

ees In It Solution of the Problem of Supply to Small Town Exhibitor

THE present indications are that Realart possibly has found the solution to the blem of supplying the needs of small town exhibitor on a basis ich is fair to him and satisfac- y to the distributor."

This statement, issued from the ılart Pictures Corporation head- rters, is the response to inquiries arding results of the demonstra- ı which that corporation now is king with a new selling plan. s plan, as previously explained THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in- ves the distribution of certain cial features without advance ments, fixed rentals or percen- e guarantees, solely upon the un- standing that the exhibitor shall for the productions what he iestly finds them to be worth, af- he has run them.

I do not wish at this time to ımit myself definitely regarding results," said J. S. Woody, Real- general manager, in an exclusive rview this week with THE MO- N PICTURE NEWS, "but it cer- ily looks to me as if most of the dicted objections to our plan e vanished into thin air.

Exhibitors will appreciate that ny internal difficulties had to be rcome as a preliminary to ting into effect a scheme as radi- and revolutionary as the one we fathering. The objection which ieard most often at the outset that the plan was wholly e-sided, and that he would only a fraction of what the pic- es ought to bring.

This argument came from all rters. Strangely enough, exhibi- s themselves were among those o advanced it. But bluntly, the position was that we would be ated—that the motion picture ustry was not ready for a selling n based on honor.

Some time before we decided to lertake our domonstration, the position was outlined to a num- of leading men of the industry. 'You will get responses, prob- y,' one of them told me, 'but not m the reputable exhibitors. I do think the present situation in the ustry demands such methods. ey invite dishonesty.'

'I cannot tell you the name of s man, because he exacted a mise that he would not be quoted ring, I presume, that we might dertake to construe his criticism o an endorsement of the plan. s argument, however, I am frank say, was all pessimism, reflecting inference both on the good faith our proposal and the good faith exhibitors generally.

'Of course it is obvious that we ve not been influenced by such guments. Nor has the exhibitor. ir supreme confidence in the good th of the men on whom we are pendent for existence has been lly justified from the outset of r career. In fact, had our prev- ıs business relations with our cus- tomers not been entirely satisfactory from our point of view, the present plan never would have been considered—it would at best have been an experiment rather than a demonstration.

"I believe, moreover, that the average exhibitor to whom our proposition has been made has accepted it at its face value. Of course, there has been criticism. We have been told that the pictures selected for the test must be 'lemons,' otherwise we would not be willing to 'give them away.' As a matter of fact, we were told that be persons to whom the plan was outlined prior to its adoption.

"Of course argument of this sort is advanced thoughtlessly. A man who has poor fruit to sell doesn't let you take it home, cut it open, and then pay him what you think it's worth. His policy, if he is in that sort of business, it to get his money before you discover that you have purchased rot. It's obvious enough, I think, even for a blind man, that Realart is not going to collect much for pictures after they have been run unless those pictures have proven real value at the box office Our plan would not be worth two rusty hoops on a bulging rain barrel unless the pictures offered measured up to requirements. And that statement applies both to our expectations of revenue and to the value of the plan as possibly affecting future sales policies.

"As a matter of fact one of the productions offered under the honor plan—Allan Dwan's "Soldiers of Fortune"—has been well up among the five leading revenue producers of the past season. The other two—Mr. Dwan's "Luck of the Irish" and Emil Chautard's "The Mystery of the Yellow Room"—had been far better than average special feature revenue producers at the time our new plan was put into effect. We certainly never could have sold the idea to Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, the producers, if that corporation had not been convinced that past performances of the productions as box office attractions justified the belief they would make more money on a value-testing basis than through fixed-in-advance rentals.

"Neither do the returns indicate many exhibitors have taken the attitude that we have any thought of 'giving pictures away.' We never have proposed anything of the sort, although one of the trade journals did so head its story of the plan. As a matter of fact, all we have undertaken is to eliminate the usual bargaining over what the price should be. There is a price, and it is very emphatically stated to be the sum which the picture honestly earns. Instead of trying to forecast what this will be, missing the mark in some cases and hitting it in others, we are leaving it to the exhibitor to determine.

"But this sort of argument seems funny now, in view of what has already been achieved. The evidence at hand is a blow in the mid-riff to anyone who was hanging around seeking satisfaction of piping 'I told you so!'

"I hope within a comparatively short time to be able to furnish THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS with a statistical record of results. Just now, I'm principally interested, however, only in one phase of the demonstration—the attitude of exhibitors in the smaller towns and cities. It was on behalf of these that the plan was put into effect and I have been very carefully watching results. Also, I have been noting the response from the small subsequent run houses in the larger cities, and I find, as was to have been expected, that their interest is no less encouraging than that of exhibitors elsewhere.

"Here's a report, for instance, from a town in Wisconsin: 'Picture was fine. If I could only keep showing this class of films ('The Luck of the Irish') I think the box office receipts would double. They had two dances and a wedding in this burg Saturday night, still I had a better house than I thought I would. Everybody liked the film.'

"'I realize I am not paying you what you ought to have for this kind of picture,' says one small town exhibitor. 'I took in $18.27 and sent you $10. My express, tax, operator, piano player was $4.08, and my rent, light and other expenses come out of the balance, $4.19, so believe I am treating you fairly.'

"And yet there seemed to be people who thought Realart would be skinned, boned and stewed, if it ever gave exhibitors a chance to fix the rental price of its pictures. Even now I can hear some of them asking: 'But how do you know they are telling the truth?' Well, that needn't worry anyone except Realart, but I'll assure you we have a pretty fair idea of what returns ought to be in a given town—anyway, we think we have when we're quoting prices. Moreover, there's another point to be considered in figuring the results of a campaign like this: Realart never has taken any other attitude than that it was entitled only to its honest share of a picture's profits.

"One exhibitor tells us: 'We spent $4 for heralds and line cuts and are deducting that from the gross receipts and splitting fifty-fifty with you, we standing the express charges both ways and house expenses.'

"What is fair rental? Has this exhibitor a selfish point of view? Would he have booked any picture, on a contract basis, under a pledge to split fifty-fifty?

"Listen to this: 'The picture was very good ('The Mystery of the Yellow Room') and I wish I could send a check for double the amount as I feel it wouldn't be any too much. I am enclosing one-half our receipts, also war tax.'

"A Virginia exhibitor says: 'I think fifty-fifty is a fair basis.' Another one writes: 'Enclosed please find a check for fifty per cent. of the door receipts for October 9.'

"There are scores more just like this; I am running through the reports at random. In fact, fifty-fifty returns are more nearly average than exceptional. There have been any number of instances in which exhibitors of the smaller cities and towns have paid us in excess of seventy-five per cent. of gross receipts.

"Some of them request, as did one in Minnesota who sent us half his gross receipts: 'If this is not enough kindly let me know.' You can't beat that, can you, for evidence of willingness to do the right thing?

"And while I'm on this phase of the subject I want to make a confession. The campaign is giving me a better understanding than I ever had before of the troubles which beset the small town exhibitor. Not even my years of work in the field, as a motion picture salesman and branch manager, taught me as much along this particular line as I have learned from reading exhibitors' reports in the past ten days. In any theatre where only one or two shows are given daily and where normal receipts are less than $75 a day, apparently most insignificant local conditions may be factors from the exhibitor's standpoint. One exhibitor in a very small town competed one night against the wedding of the town's most popular young man—'More than fifty of our best people were there'—and he was so much disturbed by the result that he made an affidavit regarding his box office receipts. He missed those fifty people—you bet he did!—and he was afraid that we might miss them too!

"There have been innumerable long letters received expressing appreciation of our honor plan, but none more fully states the case than an exhibitor of the Middle West. 'This,' he writes 'is the first opportunity we have ever had of securing service on an absolute open booking policy where the value of the film at the box-office is to determine what the film rental shall be. I sincerely hope that Realart has a huge success with the new plan, as it denotes interest in the welfare of the exhibitors and I feel confident that it will meet with the approval of almost all exhibitors and that the majority will give Realart all they have coming as their share of the box-office receipts.'"

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

To Make Film Censor-Proof

Allan Dwan Recommends Plan That Is Designed to Obviate Censorship

ALLAN DWAN has a plan to settle the censorship problem. Mayflower in a statement just issued describes the mode of procedure to be followed by Mr. Dwan. The trouble in making pictures armor-proof to censorial shafts hitherto has been, according to leading distributors and exhibitors, lack of co-operation on the part of producers, says Mayflower. "But it is now set forth that the wicked ways of the censor are causing the scales to fall from the eyes of the producer," continues Mayflower. Closer co-operation between producer and sales-factor is the principle of Mr. Dwan's plan, the details of which are briefly described by Mayflower as follows:

"Mr. Dwan's idea of making a production censor-proof is first of all to submit his scenario to officials of the organization which will do his distributing. Because of their intimate contact with exhibitors and on account of censorship experience in connection with other productions, these officials will be able to point out anything that might prove to be objectionable in the finished picture. Then when the working print is complete, Mr. Dwan plans to protect himself by further anti-censorship insurance through a series of elimination previews. The first of these will be to an audience of newspapermen, whose criticisms will be sought. The next presentation will be to an audience of picture patrons, probably in some neighborhood house, who will be requested to write their opinions on printed slips distributed by ushers. The third showing will be to officials of the distributing organization, including the advertising, exploitation and publicity men. After each showing the suggested changes will be taken under consideration by Mr. Dwan and by discreet and judicious editing it is believed that the finished production will be as adamant as armor-plate to censors."

Strong Cast in Fox Serial

Edward Roseman, Edna Murphy, John Walker and Eva Balfour in Line-Up

WILLIAM FOX reports that a high-class cast has been selected for his second serial, "Fantomas," which is rapidly nearing completion at his big studio in New York and which is to be released to follow his first serial, "Bride 13," now being shown throughout the country. "Fantomas" will be in twenty episodes; "Bride 13" is in fifteen.

The story of "Fantomas" revolves around the activities of the arch criminal, Fantomas. This character is portrayed by Edward Roseman, who appears as Ali-Ben Saba, the Mahdi, in "Bride 13." He has been in fourteen Fox features. His work in "Bride 13" will ensure a big welcome for him in the Fantomas serial, declares William Fox.

Edna Murphy plays the little girl with the pretty curls in "Fantomas." She and her sweetheart, Johnnie Walker, do some wonderfully stirring stunts in the serial. Edna's last work for Fox before this was with George Walsh in "Dynamite Allen," a production not yet released. Johnnie Walker is well known in both stock and on Broadway. Johnnie began his screen career with Edison and not only acted but directed.

Eva Balfour plays the assistant to the devilish Fantomas in the serial. Eva is a well-known British stage and screen star. She came to this country to broaden her experience. The "Fantomas" serial in which she will be featured is her first introduction to American methods. Those who have seen her work declare she will have a big fan following here when the serial is released.

Others prominent in the cast are John Willard and Lionel Adams. Adams has had a long career as leading man on the stage and in pictures.

Edward Dedgwick, who is directing "Fantomas," has had a long experience in pictures, as a scenario and continuity writer, assistant-director and director. He is putting his stunts in at every opportunity—saving a big one, of course, for the end of the episode, declares William Fox. He has a wealth of water stunts and thrills already completed, and is now using lions, tigers and alligators. He has some motorboat incidents that are declared by Fox as hair-raising. It is stated that in one of these some of Fantomas' crew, going sixty miles an hour in a motorboat, pick Edna Murphy from the water by merely catching hold of her arms and jerking her into the boat.

"Edgar" Series in Demand

Exhibitors Are Giving Them Heavy Advertising and Exploitation

BOOTH TARKINGTON'S boy character, Edgar Pomeroy, is proving a very lively youngster as translated to the silver sheet by Goldwyn. Exhibitors are snapping up these two-reel human and natural-to-boy-life comedies as fast as they can be made and released. They continue to treat them as features, giving them nearly as much advertising and exploitation as they do to big specials.

Out in Chicago the manager of Barbee's Loop theatre got a tie-up with the Peter Rabbit Club of the Chicago American for the fourth picture of the series, "Edgar Takes the Cake," which obtained for it more publicity than was gained for the featured attraction. At a special afternoon performance of "Edgar's Hamlet" for children, given at the California theatre at Venice, Calif., the theatre was swamped with children. And so it goes wherever the "Edgars" are shown.

The sixth picture in the series, "Edgar Camps Out," is now in all Goldwyn branch exchanges and is being booked faster than any of the previous releases. It tells in Mr. Tarkington's best humorous vein of the adventures that befall Edgar the night he slept in a very much home-made tent which he rigged up in the back yard of his father's home. Charming little Lucille Ricksen, Buddy Messenger, John Cossar, Virginia Madison, Nick Cogley and Lucretia Harris appear in this number.

In the meantime "Edgar, the Explorer" is completed, ready for the trade, and two later episodes have been photographed out at the Goldwyn Culver City studios.

Playwright with Paramount

Avery Hopwood, Author of Broadway Successes, to Write for the Screen

AVERY HOPWOOD, one of the most brilliant of American playwrights, is the latest recruit to the ranks of prominent dramatists and authors who have decided to turn their genius through the channel of Paramount Pictures according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Hopwood's four successful plays running simultaneously on Broadway this season have elevated him to the forefront of present-day playwrights, and it was this noteworthy achievement, or group of achievements, backed by a long record of theatrical hits, that led Mr. Lasky several weeks ago to open negotiations that have eventuated as above noted. Mr. Hopwood, it is stated, has just arrived in Hollywood, Cal., and will start at once at the Lasky studio on a course of training in the technique of motion picture production, after which he will devote his attention to the writing of screen plays.

His first play, "Clothes," was produced at the Manhattan theatre, New York, in September, 1906.

About five years ago he wrote "Fair and Warmer," the record-breaking farce-comedy which the Selwyn's produced and which is still being played to crowded houses on the road. Last season he registered in collaboration with Wilson Collison two more smashing comedy hits with "Up in Mabel's Room" and "The Girl in the Limousine," both produced by A. H. Woods and followed then with "The Gold Diggers" for David Belasco.

Victor in Pathe News on Election Night

The enterprise of the Pathe News in giving "The real news first," was never more clearly indicated than on Election Day, when virtually every first-class theatre in the United States was enabled to show pictures of President Elect Harding, his family and scenes of his home in Marion, almost simultaneously with the announcement of the Republican landslide, declares Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Ten days before election, there was shipped from the Pathe News laboratory in Jersey City, to each of the thirty-four Pathe offices throughout the country, enough copies of two "specials" to supply every high class theatre in the various territories. One told of the election of Senator Harding, and about a hundred feet of intimate scenes of himself, family, and home. The other was based upon the contingent election of Governor Cox.

Copies of each of these specials were supplied to theatres requesting them. Consequently, when word was received of Harding's landslide, the entire story in film form was immediately flashed upon the screens.

Kellerman Film Gets Vaudeville Booking

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announced this week that its single reel special, "The Art of Diving," in which Annette Kellerman demonstrates the feats that made her one of the most famous women in the world before the standard motion picture camera and the Cinal slow motion process had been booked through the entire United Booking Office theatres in New York City, the Keith houses in New England and the entire Orpheum Circuit from Chicago through to the Pacific Coast.

The New York bookings total 161 days and include a showing of the picture for a full week at the Palace theatre. This is said to be the first time that the Palace has shown a picture after it had already been shown on Broadway. "The Art of Diving" was featured by S. L. Rothapfel as a part of his anniversary program last week.

Thomas Meighan Leads in "The Quarry"

With the arrival of a complete staff from the West Coast studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Thomas Meighan has joined the Paramount stars who are working in the new Long Island studio of this company. His vehicle is "The Quarry" by John Moroso, a story of unusual human interest and dramatic situations which offers Mr. Meighan the role of a convict. Paul Schofield did the scenario.

The same staff surrounds Mr. Meighan as in "The Easy Road," which he recently completed on the West Coast. Tom Forman is again the director; Harry Perry the cameraman and Harold Schwartz the assistant director The cast has not been announced.

Press Reviews Hail "Kismet"

CRITICS of the New York dailies who viewed the presentation of "Kismet" at the Hotel Astor on Monday evening, October 25, received this special release of the Robertson-Cole Company with a liberal measure of praise for its success as an artistic and dramatic achievement. Mr. Skinner in the starring role was especially singled out for his notable performance, and the matter of presentation also received special comment in the reviews. Burns Mantle of the Evening Mail is quoted by Robertson-Cole as follows:

"One of the few remaining Mohicans of the drama fell last night, and Otis Skinner made his debut as a motion picture actor. I don't know that Mr. Skinner ever swore by Allah, or by the saints of Bryn Mawr, that he never, never would appear in pictures, but there were many years that he thought he never would. And frequently thought out loud.

"He was a wise actor, as it has turned out, for he now makes his initial appearance in the role God wrote for him—that of Hajj the Beggar in 'Kismet.' The picture has not yet been publicly released, and last night's showing was privately arranged by the producers.

"It is a gorgeous picture scenically, and the Knoblock story is fortunately strong enough to carry the load that is piled upon it. A richly colorful, massive and impressive background is provided by a California Bagdad that has been so carefully and so beautifully photographed that it exudes the very odors of the orient. Even through the black and white tones the camera alone reproduces there are vividly suggested flashes of gold and silver and the tinted blues of the night scenes are heavy and languorous.

"But it is a pleasure to record that the outstanding feature of the production is really the performance of Mr. Skinner. Of all the native actors who have embraced the cinema he is the one best fitted by temperament and training to meet its demands. His sweeping gestures, his fine command of facial expression, his broad romantic style and his love of the impressive actorial pose, so frequently cramped upon the speaking stage, fit perfectly the pantomime of the pictures, and he is as happy as a boy out of school enjoying the freedom given him. He screens wonderfully, even in the close-ups, many of which are pictorial masterpieces."

Another New York daily which paid a high tribute to Mr. Skinner was the Evening Telegram, a paper which pays particular attention to the best things of the stage and screen. Under the caption, "Hajj the Beggar Lives on Silver Screen,' the Telegram said:

"Otis Skinner, in his happiest after dinner mood, appeared in person in the grand ball room of the Hotel Astor last night at the first presentation of himself as a screen actor in a film version of his famous stage success, 'Kismet,' by Edward Knoblock.

"Nearly all of the audience already knew him as a brilliant and virile actor. They were soon to see him as a successful film player. Robertson-Cole have made a superb film of 'Kismet,' which proved to be all that Mr. Skinner promised in his speech. The story lends itself admirably to the screen when it is told with much more magnitude than the regular stage of the theatre affords.

"Here is revealed that Bagdad of old, through which Caliphs wandered in disguise, a city of dreams and as populous as the Arabian Nights would have us believe. It is a noteworthy addition to the super-films, which are so distinctly American. Its success in the big film theatres, where it is to be shown later is already assured."

Releases by Fox for November

PROMINENT in the list of releases scheduled by William Fox for the month of November is the third of the Pearl White series of feature productions. "The Thief" is its title, and it is a screen version of Henri Bernstein's great play. "The Thief" was a notable stage success in New York, London and Paris, after which it gathered many honors on the road.

Under the direction of Charles Giblyn, who also staged the Pearl White vehicle, "Tiger's Cub," now being shown, this story gives the star her first opportunity in feature productions to wear the fashionable gowns, etc., which gained for her, in her serial career, a reputation as one of the best-dressed stars of the silent drama.

"The Thief" was adapted to the screen by Max Marcin, Broadway playwright, and Paul H. Sloane, one of the younger vetcrans of the Fox scenario forces who has contributed several successful original plays. In the cast supporting Miss White the name of Charles Waldron as leading man adds another to the steadily growing list of well-known stage figures who have answered the call of the screen.

Another Fox November release is a production starring William Russell, the title of which is "The Iron Rider." The story is by Frank L. Packard. Scott Dunlap is responsible for the staging of "The Iron Rider." Among those supporting Russell are Vola Vale, Arthur Morrison, Wadsworth Harris and George Nicholas.

Pearl White in "The Thief" Heads List of Attractions

Another George Walsh picture is forthcoming in November. Written by Thomas F. Fallon, "The Plunger" offers the stalwart young actor a sort of role rather different from his usual athletic type, says William Fox. A "mile-a-minute" drama, it is called by the producer, and with Dell Henderson as director it is said that Fox has another good one for Walsh. This is the third production Mr. Henderson has made with Walsh, the other two having been "The Shark," also from the pen of Mr. Fallon and "The Dead Line."

Virginia Valli, who played with this star in "The Dead Line," rose to the rank of leading woman in "The Plunger." The cast includes also Byron Douglas, Richard Neill, W. S. Harkins, Inez Shannon, Edward Boulden, Irving Brooks and Robert Vivian.

A comedy of the liveliest sort in which Eileen Percy, one of the newest Fox stars, will appear in November, is "The Land of Jazz." The story is an original by Barbara LeMarr Deely, adapted and directed by Jules G. Furthman, and is reported to furnish Miss Percy with the most sparkling role in which she has appeared. A fine cast surrounds the star, including Herbert Hayes, George Fischer, Ruth Stonehouse, Wilson Hummel, Franklyn Farnum, Harry Dunkinson and Blanche Payson.

The second of the Clyde Cook special comedies to come from the West Coast studios of Fox will enter the first-run theatres in November. It is called "The Huntsman," and follows "Kiss Me Quick" in order of release. "The Huntsman" was directed by Jack Blystone who has been associated with Fox for a long time making comedies at the Hollywood studios.

Rockcliffe Fellowes in Ethel Clayton Cast

Rockcliffe Fellowes has been engaged to play opposite Ethel Clayton in her new picture, "The Price of Possession," by the English authoress, Winifred Boggs, which is being produced at Famous Players' Long Island studio, under Hugh Ford's direction.

A scene from "The Unwilling Husband," a Pathe release.

"Metro Week," which opened on October 24th and continued for the succeeding seven days, was celebrated on Broadway, New York City, by the presentation at three of the leading theatres of a trio of productions released by the Metro Pictures Corporation. "The Great Redeemer," Metro's special release of Maurice Tourneur's production of H. H. Van Loan's story, was presented at the Rivoli theatre.

"The Price of Redemption," played at Loew's New York theatre and Roof. This story of a strong man who won his way back to the esteem of his fellow men headed the feature bill for the week, playing Sunday and Monday.

Metro's offering of Buster Keaton's first comedy, "One Week," furnished the laughs to follow the thrills of "The Great Redeemer" at the Rivoli while this inimitable farce also kept up the humor of the patrons at The Strand.

Gladys Hall Writes Continuity for Hemmer

Gladys Hall, who, if not known generally among producers and exhibitors, is widely known and admired by stars, players and other writers for the screen and stage. For a number of years Miss Hall has written interviews with and articles about leading celebrities of the amusement world, under many non de plumes, in addition to a number of stories and articles which are from her gifted pen, and which have appeared in various periodicals.

It is not surprising, therefore to note that Edward Hemmer, in having a continuity written for "Sunshine Harbor," assigned the work to Miss Hall, who, in collaboration with Russell E. Ball, has completed the work and is about to begin on another.

Among the many interesting things which will eventually be written regarding Miss Hall is that she is a charter member of "The Woman Fays" Club and has the combined good wishes of her host of friends in the industry.

Dead Men Tell No Tales

"The Stealers" on B'way

Is Presented to Public at Keith's Broadway House; Has Striking Theme

"THE STEALERS," Robertson-Cole's William Christy Cabanne special, which had its trade premier in the Hotel Astor in September, made its Broadway debut during the past week at B. F. Keith's Broadway theatre, New York. This is the beginning of an engagement of one hundred and one days in the New York territory which has been arranged by the Robertson-Cole New York exchange.

This long engagement will be played in the various New York Keith-Moss-Proctor houses. The length of this general booking is one of the best proofs which Robertson-Cole has been given of the merit of "The Stealers," especially as an attraction of entertainment value.

"Because it treats of a theme which is as deep as life itself, and discusses a subject which is ever new and fascinating, for the reason that it can never be properly answered, 'The Stealers' is a production which stands apart from the average picture," declares Robertson-Cole. "It inspires in its audiences a feeling of reverence which is akin to awe, while entertaining through the means of its swiftly-moving and distinctively human story.

"It points a moral and teaches a lesson that one cannot soon forget, so sharply limned are its many forceful dramatic moments and so delicately drawn its gripping emotional situations. The superb acting of the cast had a great deal to do with the gaining of these effects.

"The picture is spectacular. There are a number of monster scenes in which more than 5,000 persons appear," declares the Robertson-Cole statement.

Farrar's Special at Strand

"The Riddle: Woman" Is Billed for Nov. 7th; Leading Houses Book Film

FOLLOWING accounts received from many sections of the country on the success of the Associated Exhibitors' special, "The Riddle: Woman," distributed by Pathe, announcement is made that the Strand theatre, New York, has booked it for the week of November 7.

That "The Riddle: Woman" is an exceptionally strong "audience picture" is borne out by the information coming from Hartford, that the Strand theatre there did the second biggest week's business in its entire history with the Associated Exhibitors' special, says Pathe.

Following the success attending the showing of "The Riddle: Woman" in Ike Libson's Strand theatre, in Cincinnati, many of the biggest houses in that section immediately booked the special. Some of the foremost Ohio theatres signing for "The Riddle: Woman" are the Strand and Metropolitan, Cleveland; Temple, Toledo; Orpheum, Akron; Grand, Columbus and the Columbia, Dayton.

Other leading theatres that have booked the picture during the last week, are: Strand, Hartford; Strand, Lowell; Park, Boston; Savoy, Wilmington; State Street, Trenton; Colonial, Reading; Palace, Philadelphia; Newark, Newark, N. J.; Hippodrome, and Shea's Court, Buffalo; Plaza, Sioux City; Alhambra, Indianapolis; Princess, Racine; Symphony, Los Angeles; Wigwam, Reno; Clemmer's, Seattle and Clemmer's, Spokane.

Bayard Veiller in the East

Makes Flying Trip to New York; Has Renewed Contract with Metro

BAYARD VEILLER, noted dramatist and director of productions at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Cal., is paying a flying visit to New York that will keep him in the metropolis for about a week. Mr. Veiller arrived from Los Angeles Thursday morning and went at once to the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation in the Longacre Building for a conference with Richard A. Rowland, president of the producing and distributing company.

Conferences with Mr. Rowland, to discuss matters pertaining to details of production at the Hollywood studios, a shopping tour for fresh literary material to be used for pictures and visits to the theatres to see some of the current stage successes will take up all of Mr. Veiller's brief stay in New York, after which he will return to California to whip into shape a number of big new specials that are planned for fall and winter production there.

Recently Metro renewed its contract with Mr. Veiller, under which for a term of years he will serve as director of productions at the company's western studios. Metro is highly pleased with the splendid work done thus far by the author of "Within the Law," "The Thirteenth Chair" and other tremendous stage successes.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Here are three scene stills from "The Saphead," a forthcoming Screen Classics-Met ro picture with an all-star cast among whom are Buster Keaton and William H. Crane

Katherine McDonald Finishing Picture

Under the management of B. P. Fineman, Katherine MacDonald is nearing the completion of her eighth First National production, a screen adaptation of Harry S. Sheldon's new legitimate play, "Conscience." Because of the changes in the screen script, it is very probable that the titles of the picture will be changed before release.

Sheldon, author of "The Havoc," etc., has penned a play, the foundation of which is more in keeping with the "American Beauty's" humaneness than any play in which she has heretofore appeared, declares First National.

Among those who will support Miss MacDonald are David Winter as leading man, a new "find" of Mr. Fineman's; Charles Richman, Mary Alden and Miriam MacDonald. Director Barry, who was formerly associated with Griffith productions, was selected to direct "Conscience."

"A Beggar in Purple" Set for Nov. 7th

Edgar Lewis' "A Beggar in Purple," a thrilling story of Wall street and high finance, visualizing the adventure and romance in the life of a successful business man, heads the Pathe releases for the week of November 7. All the force of the producer-director's vivid personality has gone into the direction of this feature, making it another of his smashing photoplays of American life, says Pathe.

Mr. Lewis, not believing in the star system, has carefully fitted the right actor for the right role, it is stated, instead of building the photoplay around a personality.

Pennsylvania Owners Well Established

Metro Film Exchange, of 1321 Vine street, Philadelphia, managed by Robert Lynch, are planning an extensive campaign on "The Son of Tarzan," according to reports. This exchange controls the rights on this serial for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. It is a well known exchange, having been established in Philadelphia since the very beginning of the picture business.

Strong Cast in Metro Special

Twenty-five Principal Parts Are Filled by Well-Known Actors

A STRONG cast will be seen in Metro's special production, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," according to an announcement from the New York headquarters of the Metro Pictures Corporation. It is stated that there are twenty-five principal roles in the picture and that the actor selected for each one of these parts was chosen because of his or her special qualifications to fill the role. Besides these principal players a supernumerary cast, which is said by Metro to run into the thousands, will be seen in the various scenes of the production, the most impressive of which is a reproduction of the Second Battle of the Marne. The announcement from the Metro home office follows:

"Rudolph Valentino has the role of Julio, the romantic South American hero of the story. Mr. Valentino has been in pictures for several years, having played in 'The Big Little Princess' and 'The Delicious Little Devil,' with Mae Murray; 'Eyes of Youth,' with Clara Kimball Young, and 'Man, Woman and Marriage,' with Dorothy Phillips.

"Alice Terry is enacting the leading feminine role, that of Marguerite, the little French girl. She played in the Metro production of 'Shore Acres,' featuring Alice Lake, and later had the leading role in 'Hearts Are Trumps,' the spectacular melodrama by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton.

"Joseph Swickard, a veteran of twenty-five years on the American speaking stage and ten years in motion pictures, will be seen in the part of Marcelo Desnoyers.

"Edward Connelly, best known of veteran Metro character actors, has the difficult role of the old lodgekeeper. After a successful stage career of thirty years, he has appeared in many character roles in several Metro successes.

"Mabel Van Buren was selected for the part of Elena, a German character role in which she has been doing praiseworthy work. She is a veteran screen actress.

"Nigel de Bruiler will take the role of Tchernoff, the old Russian who relates the legend of 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.' Virginia Warwick, a former Mack Sennett bathing beauty, has the role of Chichi, the sister of Julio.

"Stuart Holmes and Wallace Beery, known to all film fans as the most convincing of screen villains, will continue their roles as bad men in this production. Mr. Holmes has the role of a German infantry captain who does murderous deeds, while Mr. Beery will be seen as the German commander.

"Jean Hersholt also has an important character role as Professor Von Hartrott. Brodwitch Turner, better known as 'Smoke' has signed to play the part of Argensola, the companion of Julio, in this picture. Mr. Turner has been in pictures for many years, having started with the Essanay company in Chicago.

"Bridgetta Clark will be seen in the role of Dona Luisa, the mother role of Julio. Her part is one that will make a most impressive showing in the picture.

"Alan Hale is another prominent actor who is appearing in this production. Mr. Hale has the part of Kirl von Hartrott, a very radical German characterization. Pomeroy Cannon, of Madriaga, 'The Centaur,' the father of Julio and the owner of the South American plantations, plays an important role in the early part of the story.

"John Sainpolis also has an important role in the production, as have Harry Northrop, Derrick Ghent, Henry Klas, Jacques d'Auray, Curt Rehfeld, Madlle. Dolorez, Isabel Keith, Jacques Lanoe, Mark Fenton and Minnehaha."

Bessie Love's Plans Told

Star Will Leave for England in 1921, States Andrew J. Callaghan

ANDREW J. CALLAGHAN, president of Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., arrived in New York from Hollywood a few days ago and will remain two or three weeks. While here he has been in conference with John G. Ragland, general manager of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, which handles Miss Love's business affairs in the East, and officials of Federated Film Exchanges of America, which is under contract for the distribution of pictures by the popular little star.

Mr. Callaghan announces that Miss Love's trip to England for the shooting of scenes for "The Old Curiosity Shop" film will be made early in the new year. This was postponed from last summer when it was decided to produce a number of other subjects at once. Miss Love, it is said, passed much time during her New York visit a few months ago in the Public Library, studying the character of Little Nell, and she is enthusiastic over the plan to picturize the great Dickens story. The trip to England will be partly in response to the demand of English picture fans, many of whom have written to Miss Love telling of their eagerness to see her in real life.

In most of her future pictures the little star will be very different from the Bessie Love to whom the public has been accustomed. Not again, says Mr. Callaghan, is she to appear in character ingenue parts. Bessie is no longer a school girl. She has "grown up," and, according to the producer, is manifesting a lively interest in feminine finery and the attendant fads and fancies that normally attract a woman who is all of nineteen, which is her present age.

Miss Love is busy now in the production of "Penny of Tophill Trail," the adaptation of Belle K. Maniates' popular western novel. This will be the third of the Love pictures released under the contract with Federated, following "Bonnie May" and "The Midlanders," and persons who have been permitted glimpses during the shooting of scenes in California and Arizona predict a great artistic and financial success for it

Universal Electric Plant

Lighting Station Installed at Universal City at Heavy Cost

AN electrical lighting station for the generation of direct current, now under installation at Universal City at a cost of a third of a million dollars, will, it is said, be the largest and most powerful equipment in use at any studio according to electrical engineers.

Four motor-generating sets are the nucleus of the plant. Two of these are the largest type now in use in any studio—300-kilowatt units consisting of a motor and two generators. The other two are 500-kilowatt machines especially designed for Universal and under construction in the East by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company.

The sub-station will carry a normal load of 16,000 amperes with a possible overload of half that amount additional. Ten miles of underground cable will connect the station with the various stages, the theatre, and remote points on Universal's 600 acre lot. A two-story switchboard 45 feet long (three times the size of the largest board now in studio use in the West) will control distribution of energy.

A system of remote control, with automatic switches above and below stages, will place light effects at the finger tips of the director.

A concrete substation building 36 feet by 56 feet, and 20 feet high, is nearing completion under the supervision of Harry Brown, electrical chief. It will house the motor generators, the monster switchboard, and the 10,050 K. V. A. transformers that take the 15,000 volt current from the high tension incoming power line and reduce it to 2,200 volts. It is distributed at this strength, individual transformers on each stage and location further "stopping it down" for use in illumination.

Pathe Serial Is Due Dec. 5

"Velvet Fingers" with Geo. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot Announced

A NEW Seitz production will be the next serial release by Pathe. On December 5, simultaneous with the issue of the final chapter of Ruth Roland's vehicle, "Ruth of the Rockies," the first episode of "Velvet Fingers," a fifteen-chapter serial starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot, will be released.

The new picture will be Pathe's seventh serial release during 1920. The serial program for this year is brought to its close with the issue of "Velvet Fingers," and Pathe is confident that the latest Seitz offering in every way merits the distinction accorded it by its place on that schedule.

"Velvet Fingers," the first fifteen-episode picture in which Mr. Seitz is starred, his two former vehicles being in ten chapters, is from the pen of Bertram Millhauser and was adapted by James Shelley Hamilton. Its story is concerned with the adventures of a gentleman-crook, a part in which Mr. Seitz will appear.

Marguerite Courtot makes her third appearance opposite Mr. Seitz in "Velvet Fingers." "Bound and Gagged" and "Pirate Gold" have gone a long way toward establishing this starring team as one of the most potent box office attractions in the serial line. Miss Courtot will be seen as the fiancee of a celebrated criminologist, who later realizes that there is one who holds greater attractions for her, the reformed crook, Velvet. Mr. Seitz and Miss Courtot are assisted by a cast of seasoned serial players. Frank Redman, Lucille Lennox, Tommy Carr, Joe Cuny and Edward Elkus have prominent parts.

Coast Dailies Praise Lytell

Laud His Acting Ability in "The Price of Redemption" for Metro

A STRIKING tribute to the acting ability of Bert Lytell in his most recent Metro release, "The Price of Redemption," is contained in critical comments on the production during its showing at Tally's Broadway theatre in Los Angeles, Cal., by the Los Angeles Examiner and the Los Angeles Times.

Examiner pronounces "The Price of Redemption" to be "one of the most absorbing pictures of the week." Regarding Mr. Lytell's portrayal of the leading role, the Examiner said:

"Bert Lytell possesses the actor's crowning jewel—versatility—and with his marvelously effective work in 'The Price of Redemption' . . . he again demonstrates that he is a great character actor. He plays with a dignity and restraint suggestive of great depths, giving a touch of such absolute sincerity and conviction that it becomes gripping in its appeal."

The Los Angeles Times said: "Mr. Lytell is a capital actor, a real actor, with an understanding of the roles he portrays which goes below the skin—an actor of adroitness and resource." And after saying that those who saw Mr. Lytell in 'The Price of Redemption' are not 'going soon to forget his vivid and appealing Leigh Dering'," the Times says further:

"His playing of the character after he had became a dope fiend is vividly real; his scenes with his little boy gain fine sympathy, and there is real drama in that part of the story where, after the murder of his father-in-law, of which he knows he will be accused, he finds his wife really does love him and that she is to become a mother."

Feature Is Seen as Big Hit

"Down Home" to Make Unique Place for Itself, Asserts W. Hodkinson

IN a statement just issued from the headquarters of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the claim is made that Irvin Willatt's production, "Down Home," now being released by the Hodkinson organization, "is going to make a unique place for itself upon the silver-sheet." The Hodkinson statement continues as follows:

"'Down Home' stands well in the front rank of the so-called rural drama. Truly may it be said that it is a human document with characters so vividly and truly drawn that they might well have been taken from the people whom we see about us each day. It must not be imagined, however, that it is merely a calm, placid sort of picture, for it is filled to the brim with action and suspense. For those who love a good two-fisted fight,—and who among us does not,—it may be remarked that there is a fight in 'Down Home' which has never before been equalled upon the screen. And as for comedy, one of the trade papers has said that "there is more comedy in 'Down Home' than there is in a dozen so-called farces.

"'Down Home' offers to the theatre-going public everything that it demands and exhibitors have been quick to realize that fact. And the result, as has been said, manifests itself in the very great number of bookings already received on this picture. It has been booked by the Regent theatre, Muskegon, at what is stated to be a record price for that town; also at the Mecca Palace, Saginaw."

Many interesting reports have been received on "Partners of the Tide," the Joseph C. Lincoln story, which Irvin V. Willatt is now filming for release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Heading the cast will be seen Betty Francisco, a recent arrival upon the screen, who has appeared previously in the Ziegfeld Follies.

Tom Moore to Star in Old Stage Succes

Goldwyn announces that the next stellar vehicle for Tom Moore will be "Mr. Barnes of New York," the famous old novel by Archibald Clavering Gunter which was the literary sensation of the 'eighties and which was later dramatized and scored a big hit on the stage. Gerald C. Duffy is adapting the story to the screen and Victor Schertzinger, who has just completed the picturization of Hermann Bahr's comedy, "The Concert," for Goldwyn, will direct it.

Produced and directed by GEORGE B. SEITZ

We have spoken often during the past twelve months of the young Mr. Seitz. We have with pride directed attention to his work as a star in his own serials.

Six years back we had occasion to commend his work as the author of really excellent serials.

Four years ago we pointed with enthusiasm to his work as a director of his own serial stories.

And a few months ago we welcomed him as a producer as well as a director.

Author, director, producer, star; master of serials, unique in his field, now he appears in "Velvet Fingers," a supreme serial attraction directed by Mr. Seitz himself. Again we say it—keep your eye on Mr. Seitz!

I fired the hearts and the minds of men when the industry was 'aborning. I saw them nobly give their lives,

I saw seven of my Knights of The Camera fall under the guns of Port Arthur. But their film belongs to History:

Just ten years ago I crossed the Atlantic and in the Cradle of Liberty instituted the Freedom of Knowledge.

I saw a Pathe News man waiting with camera set on the deck of the mighty Titanic as she plunged into the deep. He died at his post.

I saw another hero leap from the window of a burning hotel and turn his camera on the flames that destroyed St. Augustine.

I saw one carried down in the Dayton flood, clinging to telegraph wires as he got his pictures.

Just ten years ago I gave to the United States these new heroes of Peace and Progress. Well have they served the Nation.

I was with one on the deck of the Russian flagship in the mighty battle of the Black Sea.

I crossed the Panama Canal with the first man in an aeroplane. I saw the Atlantic kiss the Pacific.

I saw Europe joined to the United States in flight through the air. Twenty cameras recorded every step.

Just ten years ago I gave life to a toy. I made a dim flicker of laughter into a flaming Torch of Knowledge and Truth.

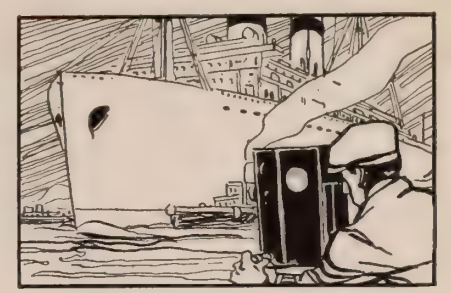
I saw the wheat fields of a Continent erupt into volcanoes of Hell and grow crimson with sacrifice. A man was mad:

I saw my spirit in men of the Marne, of Flanders, of Verdun. I saw them in Italy, Russia, Turkey and Austria.

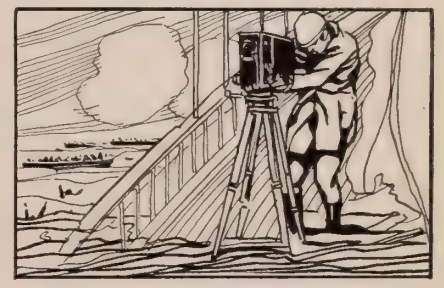
I saw the fury and the flame, I saw the desolation of the aged and the women, I caught the silence of the dead.



Just ten years ago I began to prepare for the biggest task in History. For the eyes of the ages I have preserved the story.

I saw multitudes crowd into theatres to see my achievements. I saw a world awakened to the horror of war:

I saw men fight to see The News from week to week. Men who had never been in a theatre.



I added the word Success to the Sacrifice, the Glory, the Achievement of the men who breathe my spirit.

Just ten years have elapsed since I became the greatest ally of the motion picture exhibitor of America.

I see my spirit today radiating from the United States to every country in the world. I know my men:

I burn in the breasts of the men of the tripod and camera. I warm them in the frozen North and cool them in the tropics.

Upton Sinclair

Directed by Jack Conway

"You play with us or we'll get you!"

That's what the reformed crook was told by the man who was big in finance and also big in crookedness.

And while that man was delving deep in the mire of the underworld he was also prominent in the high society of the city; engaged to one of the fairest and sweetest daughters of the "400"; a bright and shining light in high finance.

Yet he would risk his envied position for the sake of money,—and the smiles of the beauty who waited for him in Chinatown!

Powerful—

A colorful story of the religion of gold, gay with the glitter of Fifth Avenue, drab with the evil of the slums, toned with the glamour of the opium dens of vice.

What would you do if a ravishing beauty you had never seen before and in whose house you were a guest, announced that you were her husband?

What would you do if she kissed you and caressed you and boasted to others of her affection for you?

What would you think if, after you had fought for her and suffered for her, you should see her in the arms of another?

"We'll Go the Limit," Says Pioneer Film

"We're going the limit," states the home office of Pioneer Film Corporation of New York, who are handling "The Son of Tarzan" in that territory, "Because we honestly believe that it is the best serial ever produced. This is a broad statement, but we mean it, and the results are going to show that we are right."

Pioneer announces that it is going to give the exhibitor who books "The Son of Tarzan" every aid possible. Two men under the supervision of Arthur Tarshius, director of publicity of Pioneer, will devote their entire time to giving the exhibitor any help that he may acquire. Those who feel that they can be assisted by the home office are expected to take advantage of this offer. In the exploitation, publicizing, and advertising of this serial they will find ready assistance in the trained men who will do their utmost to make "The Son of Tarzan" a wonder serial in every respect.

There has already been reported a considerable number of bookings, according to Pioneer. Special trade showings will be held at Pioneer headquarters within a week or ten days, to which all the exhibitors in the territory will be invited.

The district covered by Pioneer has already been flooded with an advance campaign of teaser ads. These were in the form of cards sent to every exhibitor, containing clever catch lines and mention the doll "Geeka," which is carried by one of the characters in the serial. These have already attracted considerable attention.

Sees Rothacker Forces as "One Big Family"

Everybody at the Chicago Rothacker Laboratories knocked off work for an hour to listen to a talk by Clarence Howard, president of the Commonwealth Steel Company of Granite City, Ill.

"Fellowship in Business" was his subject. Mr. Howard said: "Fellowship is a comprehensive vital force, always finding expression in the Golden Rule. Its chief cornerstone is cooperation. By its very nature it is unselfish; therefore it cannot exist alone, but requires all mankind to share it."

The Rothacker industrial department has just completed a multiple-reel picture which shows not only the spectacular Commonwealth steel mills but also reflects the Commonwealth Fellowship Spirit.

Watterson R. Rothacker, sitting in the audience that gathered in the studio, learned why his company was selected to film this picture.

"My representative came back and reported," said Mr. Howard, "That Mr. Rothacker handles his fellow workers the same as Commonwealth workers are handled. He said that Mr. Rothacker and his fellow workers seemed to be just one big family. Down in Granite City we're just one big family. From the representative's report I knew the Rothacker Company was the one to make our picture."

Pathe Opens $10,000 Contest

November Sales Drive on Under Title of Pearson Month

THE first of November marked the inauguration of Pathe's "fall sales and collections" competition. The month itself has been designated as the "Pearson Month" in honor of Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges. For the opening of this competition, the details of which are explained later in a statement from the Pathe headquarters, a great list of features, short-subjects and serial productions are available. As a result of the variety and the calibre of the productions which the sales-force have at their disposal for the competition it is expected that November's drive will surpass, in results attained, the returns registered during March of the present year when a similar contest marked the celebration of "Brunet Month."

"Ten thousand dollars in cash prizes will be awarded the winners," says Pathe, "in the four sections of the United States into which the competition which will open Nov 1 and close Nov 30, has been divided—Eastern, Central, Southern and Western. The branch manager, assistant branch manager, feature sales manager, booker, cashier and all salesmen, will figure in the winning awards. The branch which finishes second in its territory, and records the highest national average of all other non-winning exchanges, will be awarded a prize equivalent to that accorded to each of the winning teams. In all instances where ties may occur, the full award will be made to each branch thus tying.

"The divisions have been determined as follows:

Elmer R. Pearson, Pathe's director of exchanges.

"Eastern—New York, Newark, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Albany, Washington and Buffalo.

"Central—Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Detroit, Milwaukee, Omaha, Des Moines and Indianapolis.

"Southern—Charlotte, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Dallas, New Orleans, Kansas City, Atlanta, Oklahoma City and Little Rock.

"Western—San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Seattle, Spokane, Salt Lake City and Portland, Ore.

"The contest will be based upon the greatest improvement in sales and collections recorded in November above the average for the three preceding months, August, September and October. The entire sales force will have to travel at top speed throughout November to show an increase over the average for these three months, for at no time in Pathe's history have the sales and collection figures been as high as during this period.

"Among the current releases, and those which will be issued before the conclusion of the drive, are found such sterling box office attractions as Geraldine Farrar in the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., production, The Riddle: Woman; Forbidden Valley, a J. Stuart Blackton attraction featuring Bruce Gordon and May McAvoy; Jesse D. Hampton's great special, Half a Chance, featuring Mahlon Hamilton and Lillian Rich; The Money Changers, Benjamin B. Hampton's remarkable screen version of Upton Sinclair's novel of New York life; The Beggar in Purple, another big Edgar Lewis production; Her Unwilling Husband, a delightful Blanche Sweet farce comedy from the Jesse D. Hampton studios; The Devil to Pay, a Robert Brunton feature special with Fritzi Brunette, Roy Stewart and a cast of prominent players; Dice of Destiny, another Jimmy Valentine play which should be H. B. Warner's greatest success; The Empire of Diamonds, produced by Leonce Perret in many European cities and in the United States; Rogues and Romance, which introduces George Seitz as a feature player, being costarred with June Caprice, with Marguerite Courtot in the next leading female role; That Girl Montana, in which Blanche Sweet scores another winning performance."

In the field of serials, Pathe has for booking Ruth Roland in "Ruth of the Rockies," Juanita Hansen in "The Phantom Foe," a Seitz produced serial and George Seitz and Marguerite Courtot in "Velvet Fingers."

The Pathe short-subject department is also represented to have never been in a more advantageous position to commandeer business.

Hollywood Colony Celebrates

THE Hollywood Film Colony was nine years old October 27th and in commemoration of the anniversary Al Christie, the director of the original company gave an anniversary celebration at the studios of the Christie Film Company on Sunset Blvd., at Gower St., the site on which the first permanent Hollywood Company made its first screens and established a studio.

The celebration at which Christie served as master of ceremonies, consisted of musical numbers, short comedy and dramatic sketches and concluded with the giving of a number of prizes, one went to the couple married the longest, being awarded to Mr. and Mrs. Francis Pryne, who displayed a wedding certificate showing they were bride and groom 67 years ago. Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Wiley, of the Mack Sennett Studios, received the Christie loving cup for being the couple of the film colony who had been married the longest, their record being 53 years. Mr. and Mrs. George French, of the Christie Company, were given the prize by the Hollywood National Bank, a painting, they being the married couple who have worked continuously in films in Hollywood for the longest period. T. Roy Barns gave a prize to the couple having the oldest pair of twins. The celebration ended with a luncheon served by girls of the studio and following this the visitors saw a number of screens made by the several Christie companies at work at the studio.

The original organization came to the Coast in 1912 and established the first studio and was composed of Eugenie Ford, Victoria Ford, Gordon Sackville, Alice Davenport, Mrs. Wallace Reid (then Dorothy Davenport), Milton Farney as western comedy director, Tom Ricketts, dramatic director, Al Christie, comedy director, Tom Brierley, technical director, and Wm. Piltz, cameraman.

The only persons present at the celebration who had belonged to the original organization were Al Christie, Eugene Ford, and Tom Brierley.

Following coming to the Coast, Mr. Christie wrote and directed some four hundred comedies which were released under the Nestor Brand on the Universal program. About half of these were made on the site where the present Christie studio now stands. Later he went to Universal City with the company and there produced for two years. Four years ago this Fall, Mr. Christie with his brother, Charles, organized the Christie Film Company and under their successful guidance the small producing organization has gradually grown until at this time it consists of five producing units, making one and two reel comedies and five reel comedy features. The plant now covers a city block and is considered one of the best and most efficiently equipped medium sized studios of the Coast.

During the celebration motion pictures were made which will be used as an advance feature for showing at the Kinema theatre. This will announce a contest for the oldest married couple who attend the showing of "So Long Letty," the first Christie comedy feature to be released by Robertson-Cole Company. The showing at the Kinema theatre is scheduled for showing early in November.

"The Barbarian" to Be Pioneer Special

The genuine trend of modern civilization is reflected in "The Barbarian," a Pioneer Master Special, starring Monroe Salisbury, which will shortly be released by the Pioneer Film Corporation according to an announcement issued yesterday by president A. E. Lefcourt.

This story is from the pen of Theodore Seixus Solomens; the screen version arranged by E. P. Heath.

The theme centers around Eric Straive, played by Monroe Salisbury. Brought to the wilds of Canada at the age of two years, to be developed into manhood according to the ideals of his father, who has sickened at the false standards of so-called civilization, Eric becomes a true child of nature.

J. Natteford Speaks to University Class

The class of cinema composers at Columbia University was addressed recently by J. F. Natteford, the subject being "Subtitles and Scenarios."

The speaker drew upon his experience as an author of fiction, which occupation he combines with that of subtitle writer and film expert. Comedy and feature titles were analyzed and discussed, and different methods of avoiding the old-fashioned "time-lapse" title were indicated. The stiff and blunt captions of ten years ago were contrasted amusingly with present-day descriptive and emotional titles.

Frank Lloyd Prints in Goldwyn Exchanges

Goldwyn announces that prints of the first featured Frank Lloyd Production, "The Great Lover," adapted from Leo Ditrichstein's great stage success written by himself and the Hattons, went forward to all twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges last week and by the time this appears in print exhibitors will find the film in all branch offices awaiting inspection.

"The Great Lover" is the finest type of screen comedy and Goldwyn believes that the same essential comedy elements which made the stage version such a great success have been retained in the picturization.

Object to Similiar Names

Associated First National Sees Confusion Caused by Use of Title

"IN the interests of exhibitors and all concerned too much stress can not be laid on the confusion that inevitably arises from such practice," says an exhibitor official of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in drawing the attention of the industry to the not infrequent of an essential part of an established organization's name by another firm having no connection with the original, and usually a newcomer into the business.

"So far as Associated First National is concerned," states the representative of that organization, "we cannot lay to much emphasis and exhibitors cannot note too carefully that any organization coming into the industry and using the words 'First National' in connection with its main title, has no affiliation of any character whatsoever with our company unless the announcement of its incorporation and activities is made officially by Associated First National."

This statement is said to have been issued because of an announcement which appeared recently in the trade journals by an organization under a firm name commencing "First National" and it is the contention of the organization of which J. D. Williams is manager that many exhibitors are thereby subjected to the misapprehension that the announcement is authorized by Associated First National and that that organization has entered a branch of the amusement field with which it has, in fact, nothing to do. However free from ulterior motive such employment of the words 'First National' may be it is pointed out that its use cannot but be a source of confusion and misconception in the minds of the exhibitors. "Misconception once entertained is difficult to eradicate," the statement adds, and for that reason we desire to impress upon exhibitors that only in the case where official announcement is publicly made by Associated First National is there any connection whatever with other firms using the words First National as part of its main title.

To Build Big Set in Armory

Metro Negotiating for Armory Big Enough to Contain Huge London Set

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announces that negotiations for the rental of an armory sufficiently large to accommodate a setting representing five London city blocks, are being made for its screen presentation of "A Message from Mars," the first of the forthcoming series of Maxwell Karger productions starring Bert Lydell. Arrangements have been practically concluded in the scleetion of the armory, states Metro, and production work upon the sets will be commenced at once by M. P. Staulcup, art director of Metro's Eastern studios.

The special street set for "A Message from Mars," which, it is planned, will occupy the armory for three weeks, will constitute an entire section of five city clocks in the city of London, ranging from a business and financial district to the residential—both aristocratic and tenement. In this manner there will be reproduced within the armory a whole section of London, in which much of the action of "A Message from Mars" takes place.

The story of the stage play by Richard Ganthoney opens on the planet Mars and has to do with the journey to earth of a Martian inhabitant and his undertaking to redeem the most selfish man he can find in London. The action, therefore, carries a prosperous but uncharitable Englishman out into London streets, where, accompanied by the messenger from Mars, he is shown the many phases of metropolitan life, its poverty and its misery, and is finally redeemed from his egoism.

Another innovation will be a scene in which London fire engines are shown responding to an alarm. In this regard it was found necessary by Metro officials to select an armory with doors through which horses and apparatus could enter.

Pilgrim Pictures Make Industrial Films

Through an error in the announcement of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., last week its new series of two-reel pictures written and produced by Rufus Steele, Saturday Evening Post writer, were given as the output of Plymouth Pictures Corporation when it should have been the Pilgrim Pictures Company.

"The Kick Back" and "The Big Idea," the first two of the Pilgrim Pictures have been completed and are scheduled for release by Educational early in December. The third has also been finished and is now being cut and titled under the supervision of Mr. Steele. While these new two-reelers have as their background the industrial life of the country, they are in no sense commercial pictures. Not even the name of the big plants that form the backgrounds for the stories appear in the films and they have been produced with entertainment value always in view and industrial conditions secondary. The first two pictures have already received the hearty endorsement of the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry.

Goldwyn Broadsides in Liberal Display

The Goldwyn offices have received many letters of commendation from alert exhibitors who have been quite appreciative of the very original and artistic advertising one-sheet broadsides which have been sent to the trade as supplemental to Goldwyn's advertising in the trade journals. The exhibitors have found a striking use for these broadsides as an exploitation accessory, hanging them up in their lobbies several weeks in advance of their showings, it is stated.

Goldwyn one-sheet broadsides have been sent out with the following pictures: "Earthbound," "Madame X," "Prisoners of Love," "The Penalty," "The Revenge of Tarzan," "The North Winds Malice," "It's a Great Life," "The Slim Princess," "Jes Call Me Jim" and "Scratch My Back."

Realart Announces Two Recent Promotions

Two more promotions from the ranks of Realart's sales forces have been announced by General Manager John S. Woody. Paul R. Aust, formerly assistant branch manager at Seattle now takes the manager's desk at the same office. James S. Hommel has been transferred from the Buffalo office, where he had been assistant manager to the Pittsburgh office. He is now to take charge as branch manager of the Pittsburgh office.

These promotions, according to Mr. Woody, have been made on the strength of the men's efficient and loyal service. Their ability as salesmen and executives and the good will which they have always maintained between themselves and the exhibitors had long before made a place for them on the company's promotion list.

Abraham Lehr in charge of production at Goldwyn's Culver City studios

Buffalo Exhibitors at Special Showing

Mr. Murphy, manager of the Buffalo branch of Pioneer Film Corporation, has sent a highly enthusiastic telegram to Vice-President M. H. Hoffman, of the home office of Pioneer in New York, in which he stated that he has screened "The Son of Tarzan" to the exhibitors of Buffalo recently.

"I screened 'The Son of Tarzan' at the Statler Hotel," wires the wide-awake Buffalo manager. "This was set with a luncheon for the benefit of local exhibitors and any such exhibitors as we could entice to come in from out of town for the showing. Out of sixty-nine Buffalo exhibitors, forty-nine were present at the showing, and in addition there were present quite a number of out-of-town. We had the largest number of exhibitors who ever attended a screening in Buffalo."

The biggest and best thing in the telegram, states Howells, is what follows. "The exhibitors went wild over 'The Son of Tarzan,'" reads the wire, and I heard nothing but praise for it and for Pioneer. There is no doubt but that other exchanges will follow our plan in giving a screening to this serial. Everybody is talking about it, and I have already obtained considerable business. Have our publicity department boost this strong."

RothackerConcernCommended for Work

To Alfred Walker, director general of World production, Watterson R. Rothacker replied: "Thanks twice—once for the letter and again for the business."

Here's the letter: "Unsolicited I desire to congratulate your concern on the high class and excellent work that you are doing in elevating the moving picture screen as far as printing positives is concerned. It proves to us and should prove to all distributors and producers that no one but experts should handle every detail in all departments.

"Although we have not closed negotiations with you yet, we intend to give you the majority of our work over what we print in our own laboratories."

Dead Men Tell No Tales

Abraham Lehr Arrives in East

To Confer With Head of the Goldwyn Organization

ABRAHAM LEHR, vice president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, in charge of the Culver City Studios, arrived in New York last Thursday for conferences with Samuel Goldwyn and other executives of the company. This is the first time Mr. Lehr has been East since early last spring when plans were made for the distribution of Goldwyn's fourth year product.

"The tremendous success being scored by 'Earthbound,' 'Madame X,' 'The Penalty,' 'The Branding Iron,' 'The North Wind's Malice,' and other productions included in the first group of new year releases, is proof positive," said Mr. Lehr, "that Goldyn is on the right track, and that we are giving exhibitors the kind of pictures they want, which is the same as saying we are giving the public what it wants.

"And what is more, we are prepared to keep up the pace we have set. In motion picture exploitation extravagant language has been used until words have lost their meaning, so I shall only say that we have just completed six corking pictures.

"My unwillingness to indulge in sensational phrases must not be considered a lack of enthusiasm. On the contrary, I believe these productions will break box office records, but I promised not to indulge in extravagances."

The pictures on which Mr. Lehr bases high hopes are "Guile of Women," starring Will Rogers; "Bunty Pulls the Strings," a Reginald Barker Production; "The Concert," with an all-star cast; "Hold Your Horses," starring Tom Moore; "The Highest Bidder," starring Madge Kennedy; and "Get Rich Quick Edgar," the ninth of the Booth Tarkington boyhood comedies.

"The pictures just completed are so varied in theme and character that while they were in production the studio took on something of an international aspect," said Mr. Lehr.

"We had a motley throng on the lot, made up of Swedes from the Rogers picture, Scotchmen from 'Bunty,' Irishmen from 'Hold Your Horses,' French, German and Italian musicians from 'The Concert' and an assortment of nomadic circus performers for the Tarkington series.

"It goes without saying that such a variegated ensemble of themes and characterizations could hardly fail to strike responsive chords in the hearts of theatregoers.

"Taking each of the six pictures individually, 'Guile of Women' is the first foreign characterization which has been given to Will Rogers. He not only had to become a Swede, as far as externals, but he had to change his cowboy walk to a sailor's roll. Director Clarence Badger has made an excellent picture from Peter Clarke MacFarlane's story.

"Our big task in 'Bunty Pulls the Strings' was to retain consistent Scotch atmosphere throughout the entire picture. Our ca was either directly Scotch, or Scotch descent. Reginald Barke who directed it, besides being Scotch extraction, lived for near ten years in Scotland, and knov intimately the Scotch hamlets. retain fidelity to Scotch atmosphe we leased a ranch which abound in highlands and lowlands, with stream so situated as to enable o workmen to build streets on ea side of it. Near the 'brig o' a (the Scotch name for a bridge) put in an old moss grown mill, a along the banks of this stream constructed the quaint thatch roofed houses of the cottagers."

The Goldwyn policy of dove-tai ing as far as possible all elemen concerned in the production of p tures was brought out again Mr. Lehr in his reference to "T Concert."

"Victor Schertzinger, who direc this picture, was at one time a me ber of Damrosch's orchestra, h directed his own orchestras, and an all-around musician and co poser. To get in tune again wi the world of music after his absen in the picture profession, M Schertzinger conducted his own o erture to 'The Sympathizer,' h new opera, at the California Th atre in Los Angeles while worki on 'The Concert.' He will al write the music cues for the p ture before it is released. Lev S. Stone, who impersonated t maestro, played the part ma times on the speaking stage."

"Passion" Arousing Interes

UNHERALDED, with no definite release date announced, and with no public presentation as yet given to it with the exception of a 'try out,' in a comparatively small town, "Passion," the European super-drama with the continental star, Pola Negri, to be distributed by Associated First National is conceded to have already created a keen demand from exhibitors and public alike, and to stand out as perhaps the most talked of picture in the United States today.

Had the present standing of "Passion" been the result of a carefully planned publicity campaign, from the viewpoint of results obtained that campaign would have been considered remarkable for its efficiency. On the contrary, however, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has not thus far advertised the attraction and has abstained from present publicity for the feature. "Passion," it is true, has been reviewed, by certain critics in New York and the eulogy of the feature has been notable.

"The scenes reach the ultimate in realism. Their effect on the emotions is little short of sweeping. They are full of color, action, excitement and thrill," is the comment of one critic.

"Perhaps the most impressive thing in 'Passion' is the enthralling work of Pola Negri, the Polish star. It is doubtful if a performance so superbly shaded as Miss Negri's has been seen on the American screen. From a spectacular point of view 'Passion' is nothing short of remarkable," states another, while yet another critic says, "Pola Negri's performance has never been excelled and very rarely equalled by any of the eminent American stars, and her support throughout evidences a finish and subtility new to our screen. 'Passion' is an exceptional contribution to the photoplay art."

Notable too, is the manner in which the public learned of the attraction. It was recently shown in Paterson, N. J., for seven days and while it is credited with capacity business in that engagement the number of people who crowded into the theatre there could scarcely have started the wave of interest that is conceded to have spread over the United States. Fan letters are the inevitable result of popularity on the part of a star, but even before she has made her debut Pola Negri is said to be receiving more than her share of such epistles. Telephone inquiries as to where she can be reached in America are frequent in Associated First National offices.

Exhibitors in various parts of the country have come in contact with this interest on the part of the public. Much inquiry as to whether they intended to show "Passio and as to the dates of the showi has been made of theatre own and managers according to lett from franchise holders and ot exhibitors which have been ceived at the home office of F National.

The plans for the general lease of "Passion" will, it is pected, shortly be announced by D. Williams on behalf of Associa First National.

"The U. P. Trail" Being Booked Heavily

B. B. Hampton's production made from the Zane Grey novel, "The U. P. Trail," which the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will release in November, is being eagerly booked by exhibitors throughout the United States. W. W. Hodkinson declares. The volumes of bookings is so great that the Hodkinson officials confidently declare that the gross of this picture will be even larger than B. B. Hampton's other great successes. "Desert Gold" and "Riders of the Dawn" have been more than popular with exhibitors and theatregoers alike, for Zane Grey's name is one which is possessed of "pulling" power.

Among the advanced bookings already reported on this production is that of the Rivoli theatre, Toledo, Ohio, where it will play a seven-day engagement; the Liberty theatre, Fresno, Cal., and the Liberty theatre, San Jose, Cal.

Praise Photography in Fox's "Bride 13"

The serial, "Bride 13," is winning applause from exhibitors for more reasons than one, declares William Fox. In the first place, the title has been a puller, and in the second place, the fact that a fleet of U. S. warships have a vitally active part of the picture has been a big advertising factor, but the chief thing that appears to please the exhibitors is the extraordinary photography and the beautiful, and at times startling, "shots" in this production, asserts Fox Film.

N. Y. Herald Lauds Clyde Cook's Screen Work

The Fox organization has issued only one release thus far of its "Clyde Cook Special Comedies," and immediately upon witnessing the first showing of this at the Rialto in New York, the New York Herald chronicled the happy affair with words to the effect that "he tied himself up like a frog, wriggled like a snake, and hopped like a grasshopper." The Herald opines that "Cook in his first motion picture here displayed not only Chaplin's wistful earnestness and expressiveness, but also a gift of contortionism that made him several knots faster than Chaplin."

Film Attorneys Open Up-Town Office

Keppler and Hochman, well-known attorneys for motion-picture interests, are establishing a new office in the Astor Theatre Building, New York City. The uptown office of the film district is being opened because of the firm's wish to keep in closer touch with their motion-picture clientele. The law-office in the Woolworth Building will be maintained at the same time, and the members of the firm will divide their time equally between the two offices. The new office in the Astor Theatre Building will be in charge of Fanny E. Holtzmann.

Key to News-Reel Success

Truth and Impartiality Must Be Observed, Says Pathe News Editor

EMANUEL COHEN, editor of Pathe News, holds that the most important factor in achieving success for a motion-picture news-reel is the strict adherence on the part of the news-reel to the principle of presenting the news story in an absolutely truthful and impartial manner. He also declares that the screen has accomplished a marvelous feat in attaining within a period of ten years a prestige, as a news agency, as great as that of any of the oldest and honored publications.

"So far as the Pathe News is concerned," its editor stated, "I can say that we have endeavored to cover every big story of national or international interest that could possibly lend itself to photographic reproduction, and a comparison of Pathe News with the front page newspaper stories, week after week, I believe will show that we have succeeded in the majority of cases. In order to accomplish such an aim a large force of trained cameramen must be maintained. With the experience of ten years behind it Pathe News has been able to organize such a force, so that at present it has experienced men in all parts of the world and is ready at all times to make pictures of news items everywhere.

"These cameramen are charged with the duty of getting pictures of every event of real news interest. This is an important duty of the Pathe News cameraman. But there is a duty imposed upon him which is equally important and that is that in photographing an event he must take it from all angles, showing it just as it actually appears and in such a way that not any one phase of the event in question is given an importance greater than it really plays in the thing as a whole. For throughout its career Pathe News has maintained and will continue to practice absolute truthfulness in its pictorial reports of news events."

Paramount Has "The Bait"

Hope Hampton Production is Purchased for F. P.—Lasky Release

HOPE HAMPTON'S latest starring vehicle, "The Bait," which was adapted from Sidney Toler's stage play, "Tiger Lady," and was personally directed by Maurice Tourneur, has been purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and is slated for early Paramount release.

In this production Miss Hampton's work as a screen artist of promise and ability are said to stand out more forcibly than in anything that she has previously done, and it is noted by the many who have watched her work during the course of production and who have viewed the finished product on the screen, that Miss Hampton is living up to every expectation and confidence that the producers have in her ability.

The story itself is a happy selection which permits of a wide display of dramatic emotion, balanced by a proper amount of comedy relief. Briefly, it is the story of a young girl who becomes the victim of a gang of blackmailers, but who finally emerges triumphant through the love of a man.

The adaptation of "The Bait" was made by John Gilbert, who also assisted in the direction.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Arbuckle Kept Busy on Two Productions

Roscoe Arbuckle is leading a nice quiet life these days, being so absorbed in his work that he doesn't have any time for anything else. For the last few days the rotund comedian has been engaged on two different pictures for Paramount. The moment one director finishes with him the other puts up a call sheet summoning him to work in the other production.

For scenes in "Brewster's Millions," which is almost completed, a massive setting some sixty or seventy feet high and of an equal length, provided with a double system of rockers and representing the complete deck and cabin exteriors of a yacht, had to be constructed. As this occasioned a few days' delay during which Mr. Arbuckle would be idle, Director James Cruze, who was all set to launch production work on "The Dollar-A-Year Man," the next picture in which Mr. Arbuckle was to star, decided to begin work right away. The call went up and soon the popular "Fatty" was portraying his role of amateur detective in the new picture.

New York Strand Books "Kismet" Special

As a fitting tribute to Robertson-Cole's "Kismet," starring Otis Skinner, which was given its introduction to the American public at a trade premier last Monday night in the grand ball room of the Hotel Astor, Moe Mark, owner of the Strand theatre, one of Broadway's most popular picture houses, has booked this attraction for his theatre.

"Kismet" will play the week of November 14 at the big New York house. Robertson-Cole will surround the Broadway premier at the Strand with an elaborate campaign of exploitation and advertisement.

The publicity force of Robertson-Cole has been placed at the disposal of the Strand, and both the theatre and the distributing corporation will exert every effort from now until the opening day to put the picture over big, says Robertson-Cole.

Jerome Storm Secures Irving J. Martin

Jerome Storm this week added to his production staff Irving J. Martin as art director and title illustrator for the first Lillian Gish production bearing the Storm trademark.

Mr. Martin is the artist who originated the scheme of illustrated sub-titles for Thomas H. Ince pictures. He was associated with Ince for six years, during which time Mr. Storm was directing Enid Bennet and Charles Ray. It was through this association that the director was able to secure the artist's services.

According to the terms of Mr. Storm's contract with the Frohman Amusement Company, the Lillian Gish picture which he now is directing will bear the trade-mark of Storm Pictures.

Tour Proves Concern's Success

Hammons Reports Enthusiasm in Educational Exchanges

PRESIDENT E. W. HAMMONS, of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., this week held a conference of heads of important departments to consider the report made to him by Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager, who has just returned from a tour of all the educational exchanges and the Los Angeles producing plants. Mr. Hammons told his staff that he was more than pleased by the conditions as they were found on this trip and announced some secondary changes designed to cure minor defects and afford even greater service to the exhibitor.

Mr. Hammons also stated that he would shortly announce some important additions to the product released through Educational, and that he expected that this would enable his organization to fill every need in the short subject field.

One of the most important things reported by Mr. Ginsberg to his superior was the enthusiasm that he found in every exchange. From the important exhibitor interests who are concerned in the various individual offices down to the shipping clerks he declared that he found that they were a "hundred per cent sold on Educational" and that they were giving their very best efforts with an enthusiasm that was bringing results.

During this trip the three territories that had not been open, New Orleans, Dallas and Denver, were supplied with exchanges, and Educational is now functioning through every section of the United States and Canada. Even from the three new offices the results already achieved are said to be very flattering.

Another important point emphasized was that exhibitors generally have been so delighted with the comedies, the specials and the single reels that they are getting that they are practically demanding that their short subject be Educational pictures. Several of the exchange managers reported to Mr. Ginsberg that they had never handled any films in which they found the exhibitors imbued with such confidence in advance.

"This portion of the report," said Mr. Hammons, "is particularly pleasing to me and the one that I want every member of the organization to bear in mind. Since the beginning of Educational more than five years ago we have always resisted the temptation to adulterate quality with quantity. We have preferred to build slowly and now that we have come into the commanding position in the short subject field this policy is to be just as carefully guarded.

"When we announced our policy of expansion and the plan to establish our own exchanges we were deluged with offers of product. We picked only the very cream of it. Many of these pictures then selected other releasing methods; but we have never been sorry. Since our success with comedies we have been offered many other series. We are always glad to look at new product and offer an opening for all that meets our standard, but you may be sure that standard is going to be maintained.

"We will shortly announce some additions to our schedule and they will be short subjects that are worthy to be released under the general name of 'Educational Pictures.'"

Goldwyn Units Busy in West

AN all star cast has been selected by Goldwyn for Gertrude Atherton's first original screen story now entering the production stage under the working title of "Noblesse Oblige." Mabel Julienne Scott, who has just finished acting in "The Concert" in which she has one of the principal roles, will head the cast in the leading feminine part. Lewis S. Stone, recently seen in Goldwyn's production of "Milestones" and creator of the leading role in the screen version of "The Concert," will play opposite her. R. D. McLean, famous on the American stage for his acting in the classic drama, Arthur Hoyt, Charles Clary, Josephine Crowell and Kate Lester are other members of the cast.

Jane Atherton, aged seventeen, a niece of Gertrude Atherton, will make her film debut in the picture as an extra. Wallace Worsley, who directed "The Penalty," will wield the megaphone. Mrs. Atherton collaborated with Louis Sherwin on the continuity.

Director Clarence Badger and the Will Rogers company are back from Jackson, Calif., where they have been several weeks on location for Rogers' new picture, "Boys Will Be Boys," from the stage adaptation of Irving S. Cobb's popular story. The townspeople of Jackson, many of whom will be seen in the picture as extras, gave the company a great send-off on its departure, presenting the members of it with gold nuggets as souvenirs.

E. Mason Hopper and the company which he is directing in Rupert Hughes' first original screen story bearing the working title of "Mr. and Miserable Jones" are on Catalina Island taking exteriors. Nearly 100 extras, mostly girls, will appear in the production.

Frank Lloyd, who is to direct "The Water Lily," Gouverneur Morris' first story written directly for the screen, is ready to start the photography on that production. Wallace Beery has been engaged to play one of the important Chinese roles in the picture. "The Water Lily" will be released as an Eminent Authors' Production.

Reginald Barker is hard at work getting his next production ready for photographing. It is "The Bridal Path" from the play by Thompson Buchanan, author of "Civilian Clothes," etc. Mason N. Litson is in the midst of the tenth Booth Tarkington Edgar Comedy which bears the tentative title of "The Country Cousin." Johnny Jones, the featured player in the cast, it is stated, will be seen to excellent advantage in this episode.

Torchy Comedy Seen in All New York Bill

Alhambra theatre, Cleveland, O., rranged a program last week typiying life in New York City with 39 East" as the feature picture nd "Torchy's Millions," made rom the stories of the red headed ffice boy by Sewell Ford and reeased through Educational Exhanges.

"Torchy" is a typical New York haracter and as all of the scenes or the comedies are made in that ity, it has been pointed out by everal critics that they are almost s good as a trip to the big city self. Many exhibitors have oupled these comedies with strictly merican spirit pictures and the eports to Educational have uniormly been that such presentation ave scored strongly with audinces. "Torchy's Millions" will e followed by "Torchy Turns upid" and "Torchy's Double Triimph."

Pledges Hodkinson Support

Prominent Exhibitor Promises His Help; Big Response to Celebration

MESSRS. BRANNIGAN and Conners, who operate a number of theatres throughout the Middle West, have long been enthusiastic supporters of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, according to a statement from the Hodkinson headquarters. There has been an immediate and gratifying response from exhibitors throughout the United States to the proposed "Hodkinson Month," during which there will be celebrated the third anniversary of that corporation.

A letter recently received from Mr. Conners reads as follows:

"Let me be among the first to extend to you every assurance of continued support in the noteworthy fight that you are making on behalf of the exhibitor. I, and my associates, will do everything possible to aid you, for it is perfectly obvious to us that your success means our success.

"As I said before to your representatives, I believe that the Hodkinson release list comes nearer to being 100 per cent successful than the product of any other distributor or producer on the market, and I say this after having tested out your product in competition with what are generally considered the the best programs in the industry.

"I can say to you truthfully, that on the average, we have grossed more on Hodkinson pictures than we have on an other product,—and we use the best from all programs. Incidentally, we have made more profit from Hodkinson pictures than from any other pictures that we run.

"As I have said before, you may be assured of our hearty support in your successful efforts to select from the whole industry profitable pictures for exhibitors."

Give Midnight Performance

Midnight Showing of "Earthbound" at St. Louis on Election Night

THE attendance at Goldwyn's production of "Earthbound" at King's theatre, St. Louis, was so great that a midnight performance was given on election night. The late election returns were read from the stage.

"Earthbound" played to 26,200 persons the first week of its St. Louis run at the Delmonte theatre. It was then transferred to King's theatre where it is now finishing the third week of its run.

The popularity of "Earthbound" in St. Louis is rivaling its drawing power in Los Angeles where it continues to pack Miller's theatre. Its presentation and exploitation have been consistently dignified in both cities, its appeal to picture fans being in the powerful theme, the great drama of the story and the excellence of production, acting and photography.

In Los Angeles the production has aroused so much discussion that it is being taken as a text for sermons. Margaret C. LaGrange, president of the National New Thought Association, Inc., and pastor of the First Emerson Church in Los Angeles, sent out a printed card to the members of her church and of the New Thought Association, announcing that she would speak on "Earthbound—Truth or Fiction," based on "'the remarkable production now appearing at Miller's theatre," at her 11 a.m., lecture on Sunday, October 24.

The announcement served to draw out the biggest crowd the First Emerson Church ever held, with possibly one or two exceptions, bearing witness to the great popular interest in the subject of Basil King's picture—the continuity of consciousness after death.

Christie Pokes Fun at "Bedroom Farces"

Al Christie, directer general of the Christie Film Company, has gone the writers of "bed room farces" one better in naming one of the two-reel comedies which will be released through Educational Exchanges early in December. There is a suspicion that Mr. Christie intended to have a little fun at the expense of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" when he named this latest creation of his "Dining Room, Kitchen and Sink."

As a matter of fact it is not a bedroom picture at all, but tells the adventures of the leading lady of a "road show," and the other members of the company with a pair of crooks at the home of her rich uncle. Fay Tincher is the featured player, while Eddie Barry, who is featured in many of the two-reel Christies, has another important role.

"Madame X" Approved by Exhibitors

Goldwyn's production of "Madame X," starring Pauline Frederick and directed by Frank Lloyd, has shown to such uniformly exceptional business and so pleased patrons that exhibitors are writing and wiring in to Goldwyn to express their appreciation of the picture, it is stated.

J. E. Tompkins, owner and manager of the Liberty Theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo., wrote to the manager of Goldwyn's Denver exchange as follows:

"I want to say this for "Madame X," that in the nine years I have been in the business I have never heard so many favorable criticisms on a picture. Men as well as women claimed it the greatest story of mother love they had ever seen and critics, who had seen the stage play, all claimed the screen version to be much greater."

Capitol Bill Headed by "Madame Peacock"

As the outstanding feature of the "Metro Week," on Broadway, commencing October 24, when Metro pictures were the main attraction at five of the leading Broadway cinema houses, Nazimova in "Madame Peacock," scored heavily at the Capitol theatre.

The talented Russian star in her latest release headed the exceptional bill chosen for the first anniversary week at the world's largest motion picture temple.

Dorothy Dalton at New Paramount Studios

Dorothy Dalton, Paramount star, has just returned from Chicago, where she played her old role of Chrysis during the run there of the Morris Gest spectacle, "Aphrodite." Immediately upon her arrival here Miss Dalton went out to the new Long Island City studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation which she inspected from basement to roof and expressed much admiration for the entire plant.

Louis B. Mayer announces that he last week signed Tom North to act in the capacity of assistant general manager and other duties that will make him benefician to general manager, Paul Mooney.

Mr. Mayer induced Mr. North to resign his position of managing directorship with the Tom Moore Theatres Corporation of Washington, D. C., to accept the position and Mr. North entered upon his duties with the Louis B. Mayer Productions, Inc., Monday, November 1st.

"The Sand Man," Rolin Comic Due Nov. 14

"The Sandman" has been chosen as the title of the latest Rolin Comedy featuring the Vanity Fair Girls and Eddie Boland, which Pathe will release November 14. In this production the new policy of Hal Roach, who also produces the Harold Lloyd comedies, is seen, inasmuch as the comedy, while presenting uproarious situations and showing the beautifully gowned Vanity Fair Girls, is of a fantastic variety containing surprises without number and a prettily told story, says Pathe.

B'dway Legit Actor to Be Lead for Allison

Theodor von Eltz has been selected by Bayard Veiller to play opposite May Allison in her forthcoming starring picture, "Are Wives to Blame?" Mr. von Eltz is a newcomer into the motion picture industry. Only recently he arrived in Hollywood from New York, where he has appeared in numerous successful Broadway productions in the past few years.

Edward T. Lowe, Jr., wrote the scenario from the magazine story, "More Stately Mansions," by Ben Ames Williams. Philip E. Rosen will direct "Are Wives to Blame?"

Irene Dalton, now on the Coast playing in Christie comedies. She was "discovered" in a Rothacker industrial film.

Change of Policy Announced

A SERIES of conferences [illegible] Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, presided over by Adolph Zukor, president, have developed new policies for the making of Paramount Pictures which are revolutionary in character.

This plan has as its purpose the elevation of all Paramount stars to the position of "super-stars" in productions of such quality that they will be booked for months in theatres where heretofore the best pictures have been booked only for weeks.

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president in charge of production, who already has installed the plan in the Eastern studios, will leave at once for Los Angeles to put into effect the new system, which calls for the coordination of the entire resources of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation —stars, directors, authors, playwrights, leading men and leading women—into one huge all-star stock company for the production of genuinely big special pictures.

The working of the new idea is best exemplified by the way in which it first functioned. Immediately after the executives had made their decision, Mr. Lasky called Cecil B. DeMille, director general, who is in Los Angeles, upon the long distance telephone. Mr. DeMille already had in contemplation the production of Arthur Schnitzler's "Anatol." He was told that the entire resources of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were at his command.

Within a few hours, Mr. DeMille with great enthusiasm notified Mr. Lasky that an ideal cast had been selected for "Anatol," and that the entire force at the Lasky studio in Hollywood was eager to cooperate and at once had appreciated the tremendous advantages the idea would bring to stars, to authors and most of all to the public. The result is that the cast for "Anatol," will include Wallace Reid as Anatol, Elliot Dexter as Anatol's friend, Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels, Wanda Hawley, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts and Theodore Kosloff. Among the authors who will collaborate preparing "Anatol" for the screen are Jeanie Macpherson, Avery Hopwood, Beulah Marie Dix and Lenore Harris. Wallace Reid gladly accepted such an important part. Gloria Swanson was delighted to postpone temporarily her new starring venture. Such other stars as Wanda Hawley, Bebe Daniels and Agnes Ayres were highly enthusiastic, as were the others chosen for the cast of the production.

"In the near future," said Mr. Lasky, "it is probable that motion picture fans will see three or more Paramount stars such as Elsie Ferguson, Ethel Clayton, Wallace Reid, Dorothy Dalton, Mae Murray, Thomas Meighan and Billie Burke playing together in big productions.

"The only plays that have been great successes recently have been those that have had a big, popular theme and have been well cast and directed. Our thought is to make productions that will be tremendously popular with the public, and therefore big successes for star, author and director, pictures in which every person concerned in their making will appear to the very best advantage.

"The big play will come first. The greatest stars we have will be given the much-sought opportunity to appear in the excellent roles that always are a part of a fine drama.

"I feel that at last my dreams have come true, that now the entire Famous Players-Lasky producing department is in a position to concentrate its efforts upon the making of only the highest type of motion pictures. The announcement to the different departments has charged them with enthusiasm. To authors it means as much as it does to stars, for it guarantees big productions for big stories."

Mr. Lasky will be accompanied on his trip West by Edward Knoblock, who will complete in the Hollywood studio a special story based on a theme originally discussed with Mr. Lasky in London last spring. Both Mr. Lasky and Mr. Knoblock are jubilant over the fact that the story is one that will demand unusual acting ability and which contains three starring parts which will be cast according to the new plan.

Edith Roberts in New Role

Comes Back to Screen in "White Dove;" Norman Dawn Will Direct

WORK has begun on "White Youth," which will serve to bring back to the screen Edith Roberts, who has been resting in New York and on the Atlantic coast since she finished "The Adorable Savage" four months ago, so word comes from Universal City.

"White Youth" is a story of old and modern New Orleans and of creole life in Southern Louisiana. It is by Clara Beranger and Forrest Halsey, well known as scenarists and who wrote the Broadway stage favorite, "His Chinese Wife." Norman Dawn is directing the feature.

In this story Miss Roberts appears as the granddaughter of old General Belame, a French Creole, who has been raised in a convent and knows little of the world until her grandsire writes that he will send for her in a few days to meet the man he has selected for her husband.

The incidents and situations in the story are altogether novel, for the customs of the Louisiana French differ in most ways from the accepted conventions, and the authors have contrived a delightful mixture of the quaint and the up-to-date.

Norman Dawn spent several weeks with a camera man and a technical director in New Orleans and other points in Louisiana in search of atmospsheric shots. Actual settings he found reproduced at Universal City, such as the public square of a Creole village, the old market in New Orleans and the French opera house in that city.

First National Engages Prominent American Artist

Leone Bracker to Start Poster Subjects at Once for Holubar Feature

M. Leone Bracker, who is making posters for Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

MR. LEONE BRACKER, internationally renowned American artist and creator of "Keep 'Em Smiling." "Help Lest We Perish," "Hunger Knows No Armistice," "Velvet Joe," and a score of other far-famed money-raising posters, is at work upon a series of art posters for the motion picture, a task for which he was selected because of the unprecedented success of his posters in raising funds for nation-wide patriotic and relief drives.

The announcement this week by J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National, that Mr. Bracker's services have been secured by that organization will readily be conceded as marking at once a notably progressive step in the history of the industry and a unique move towards the perfecting of motion picture poster advertising. That First National's enterprise in enlisting Mr. Bracker's artistry is of first rate importance to the industry, setting as it does a precedent pregnant with possibilities and marking a notable innovation, will be readily seen, and the forthcoming posters will undoubtedly be awaited with expectant interest by exhibitors and producers alike.

Mr. Bracker, who left last week for Los Angeles, will have the complete cooperation of Allan Holubar in facilitating his work on the poster subjects for the Dorothy Phillips picture, "Man, Woman and Marriage." This forthcoming Associated First National feature was selected as the object of the artist's immediate work partly because the course of its production fits opportunely with Mr. Bracker's undertaking, but primarily because the magnitude of that offering makes it specially worthy of the distinction. For the Holubar feature Mr. Bracker will make a set of seven picture posters comprising a twenty-four sheet, two six sheets, two three sheets and two ones. This artist's subjects are invariably taken from life, and Miss Phillips and the principals of her supporting cast, individually as well as in scenes in the play, will be studied by Mr. Bracker and tentative sketches composed, after which Mr. Bracker will return to New York, where, in consultation with C. L. Yearsley, director of Associated First National advertising, the final compositions will be decided upon and the work put into completion. It is believed by those interested that the collaboration of the director, stars, actors, artist and advertising manager will result in posters of maximum artistry and sales values.

Reluctant to speak of himself and expressing his belief that "rather an artist's work should speak for him," Mr. Bracker on leaving for the Coast was, however, induced to make in a letter to Mr. Williams some expression of his views of what the poster can accomplish in the motion picture field.

"I am entering upon this new project," writes Mr. Bracker, "feeling that a revolution can be accomplished in this field. I feel that we can make posters so dramatic and human and withal so illustrative of the real pictures inside the motion picture theatre that the layman will be influenced and will go in.

"It is not my plan to do anything highbrow, but to get right down to earth, to create something that will affect 'the man in the street;' but withal that will have the dignity of work well done, and done with pride, and I feel that this will redound with credit to First National for the step they have taken.

"Perhaps I differ from most artists in that I draw my pictures entirely from real people. My first picture was the story of an old sea captain and I hunted the waterfront till I got one to pose. And so, to this day, each picture is as faithful and dramatic as I can make it. I realize that it is the pictures and not myself that counts, and if my pictures serve I will succeed in the measure that they do serve."

Illustrative of the powerfully human interest for which Mr. Bracker's art is famous is an authentic incident which occurred during the exhibition of the original of his poster, "Help Lest We Perish." The picture was placed above an empty cradle. There was nothing whatever suggesting an appeal for money, except the picture itself. No soliciting was allowed or suggested, nor was there a sign asking for contributions in the picture itself. At the end of the showing the cradle was found filled with bills and checks and coins—actual and totally unsolicited proofs of the power of the poster.

Notable among Mr. Bracker's poster work will be recalled "Keep 'Em Smiling," done for the Armenian Relief Drive, and in one form or other printed over thirty million times; "Help Lest We Perish"; "Hunger Knows No Armistice," and, as distinct from these examples of work on behalf of philanthropic objects, in the commercial field. "Velvet Joe," who never existed yet is more widely known than many real men, and "Skookum Apples" posters. Mr. Bracker drew the prize-winning black and white poster for the national competition of the War Savings Stamps drive, and for years he has drawn the pictures for the Bruno Lessing stories of the East Side. There are few magazines of standing in the country whose readers are unacquainted with Mr. Bracker's illustrations.

Commenting on the consummation of the negotiations which have resulted in Mr. Bracker's entering the motion picture's art field in the interests of Associated First National franchise holders, J. D. Williams said in part:

"We regard, and undoubtedly the industry in general will regard, the success of our negotiations with an artist of Mr. Bracker's high standing and universally recognized talent and the acquisition of his distinctive art as one of the most strikingly important forward steps to that end so largely to be desired and so vital to the interest of the exhibitor and producer alike, namely the greater effectiveness of the poster advertising. It was not our aim to secure something merely artistic in the way of 'paper.' First National—the industry at large—desires something beyond that, something that possesses not only the great appeal of artistry but, in addition, that more important factor—the highest possible selling power—posters that will be of direct financial benefit to the exhibitor by compelling money into the box office.

"To have to this end secured the cooperation of a great artist of international reputation, one whose poster pictures have not only arrested the attention of the world but have coined that attention into unprecedented millions of dollars for philanthropic objects and again for purely commercial organizations, is highly gratifying to our organization, not merely because First National thus sets a precedent for the industry but because we believe that every cent invested in sending Mr. Bracker to the Coast, every penny laid out in securing the services of one of the highest paid poster artists in the world will bear fruit a hundred-fold through increased receipts at the exhibitor's box office. Nor have we been anxious merely to get the services of an artist of Mr. Bracker's calibre simply because he was of that calibre. Not any merely great artist would have satisfied us. We were not seeking for mere passing publicity. We required, more important than that, an artist who combined art with practical ideas and a zeal for the motion picture, and Mr. Bracker does that. He is zealous. He has undertaken his mission for the motion picture industry with the enthusiasm of the crusader. In him, I believe, is found that rare combination of draughtsmanship and appreciation of the dramatic and of selling appeal. And that is essential to and must be present in the truly successful picture poster.

"Most artists in their views of pictorial advertising consider only the purely artistic standard, and that, to my mind, is the reason why few artists may be given a free hand in the designing of motion picture posters. Combined with the attention arresting artistry of the poster there must be that special quality which, in the case of the motion picture, will sell tickets. In the last analysis that is the first and last reason for the advertising poster."

Fox's Great Melodrama Drawing Crowd

The success scored by the William Fox special production "While New York Sleeps" when it was presented in the metropolis where it ran simultaneously at two leading Broadway theatres within a quarter-mile of each other, is being supplemented by record-breaking reports from every part of the country where this screen masterpiece is shown, according to Fox.

In some of the smaller cities near New York, photos have been taken of long lines of motor cars parked in every direction from the theatre where the picture was being shown. As one exhibitor wrote: "'While New York Sleeps' seems, by the universality and force of its appeal, to attract to the theatre not only the theatre-going public, but a class of new patrons hitherto unknown."

SEATTLE

The Clemmer made a big hit with the colored pictures it showed recently. Manager Clemmer has announced that in a very short time motion pictures, taken by the same process, will be shown on his screen. The pictures are made under the chroma process of color photography. Still pictures were thrown on the Clemmer screen, which showed every color in all naturalness just as seen by the eye and apparently in their true perspective.

Mr. Clemmer said that these pictures were taken by a new process which is a departure in the photography and shown for the first time at the Clemmer. The pictures shown and those that will be shown are Seattle pictures. They are being produced in Seattle by the Natural Color Photographic Products Company.

Mr. Harry Sigmond, well known in Northwest filmdom as counsel for and secretary of the Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit, has accepted the position as assistant branch manager for Vitagraph.

ATLANTA

Plans at last are formulated whereby Atlanta, in the name of the entire Southeast, is to have a motion picture exposition that will be a real one. The exposition is being planned, under the auspices of the Film Exchange Managers' Association, and Atlanta, naturally enough, has been chosen as the locale.

The committee which has the plans in hand is headed by Mr. John Ezell, of the E. & H. Film Company, and Mr. Wassman, of Wassman & Stephens Film Service. Mr. Ezell and Mr. Wassman have just returned from New York, where they were in consultation for some time with film executives, who have pledged the presence of various stars at the exposition, the dates of which will be December 6th to 11th, inclusive.

Among the film stars who have agreed to come are Eugene O'Brien, Zena Keefe, Rubye de Remer, Bert Lytell, Lillian Walker, Muriel Ostriche, Helen Gardner, Dorothy Gish and her mother, and a number of others are expected.

Mr. R. E. Martin, who owns and operates the Bonita theatre, in Columbus, Ga., will open two new houses the first of December. They are the Bijou, in Columbus, and the Phoenix City Opera House, in Phoenix City, Ala., which is just across the river from Columbus.

The theatres will be the same size—seating eleven hundred and seventy, 42x160 in size. They are stucco-and-concrete bungalow type, and will be modern in every respect, large enough, with fly-loft, big stage, and so on, to accommodate good road shows as well as pictures.

The Howard theatre, owned by S. A. Lynch and Troupe Howard, will open in Atlanta December 13th. This is doubtless the most pretentious house in the South, and one whose opening has been awaited with eager interest by film patrons throughout the territory.

The house will seat twenty-seven hundred, with twenty-seven exits. The front is in the Greek style, with big round columns, a generous lobby space, and will have a stage large enough to permit of prologues and specialty numbers. There will be beautifully fitted writing, ladies' and lounging rooms, and, it is rumored, there will even be a nursery attached.

The old Bijou theatre,, Anderson, S. C., has been remodelled and redecorated. Its new name is the Imperial. A $10,000 organ is an important item of the equipment.

L. P. Davis, of Arcadia, Fla., has purchased a Powers 6-B machine, and a Minusa gold-fibre screen, for a new theatre in Arcadia to be called the Star.

The Tennessee Enterprises have begun the erection of a new theatre in Knoxville to be known as the Riviera theatre.

The Tivoli theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., will open soon.

NEW ORLEANS

"Because of the high cost of vaudeville acts the increased railroad fares and the increased salaries of stage hands and other theatre employes," the Orpheum here has been forced to raise its nightly price of admission to the orchestra from $1.00 to $1.25. There will be no change in matinee prices and no special prices for holidays, Sundays or Saturdays.

Moving pictures will be used to fight venereal diseases in New Orleans according to Dr. Charles Chassaignac, chairman of the committee on education of the New Orleans Social Hygiene Society.

Merit and loyal service have found their reward in the promotion of Louis J. Boudreaux to chief projection engineer of the Strand theatre, following nearly a year's service as assistant in the South's finest photoplay palace.

Mr. Boudreaux's assistant in the Strand operating booth will be Charles Watsky. Watsky jumped from Saenger's 'midget,' the Plaza, to Saenger's finest house.

OMAHA

Within calling distance of 1,800 persons who were witnessing the finale of the performance at the Empress theatre, Omaha, last Sunday night two masked bendits robbed W. Ledoux, manager of the theatre, of $3,500 in cash the day's receipts. The hold-up occurred at 10.30 P. M.

Ledoux told the police he took the money from the box office to his own office and was alone when two men covered him with revolvers, led him into an adjoining room, where they bound him to a chair, and then returned to the office, where they looted the safe. The bandits were not captured.

OKLAHOMA CITY

Announcement has been made by Tucker Brothers, lessees and managers of the Deamland theatre, 308 West Main street, for the last seven years, that they have disposed of their interests to the Texas-Oklahoma Enterprise Company for a consideration of $40,000. It is said that the new management, which is understood to be controlled by the S. A. Lynch interests, plans extensive improvements to the amount of $100 000 and that the theatre will be closed in a few weeks for remodelling. The new company also has obtained leases on the adjoining building sites on which to erect a much larger theatre than now occupied by the Dreamland. It is understood that the new management will rename the theatre the Capital and that only Paramount-Artcraft pictures will be shown.

The Paramount Picture interests recently bought the controlling interest in the New Yale theatre at Muskogee, and also in the Yale and Busby theatres at McAlester, Okla. They have already planned to enlarge seating capacity, remodel and renovate all of these theatres and to operate upon a much larger scale. The approaching session of the state legislature which will be held in January is causing a great deal of comment as to the action that will be taken on questions of the Sunday showing of pictures and state censorship. It is expected that the motion picture industry will derive a large amount of front page publicity in view of the widespread interest among the people regarding these subjects.

BOSTON

After a successful run of over a month at the Majestic theatre, drawing crowds to last night, "'Way Down East" moved up to the Tremont Temple. The crowd still follows the big attraction and the old prices, 50 cents to $2 are the same.

Some 200 members of the Boston Jesters, an association comprised of managers of theatres and exchanges, gathered together last Friday evening at Healy's on Washington street where a real get-together party was staged. Sam Moscow of the Boston Photo Play was the leading spirit of the affair.

The office of the Vitagraph reports, that they have received six prints of "Dead Men Tell No Tales," which they are placing in houses in Boston and New England.

CINCINNATI

The Queen Anne theatre, 2915 Colerain avenue, has been purchased by the Shakespeare Amusement Company, the price being $42,000. The new management, also the owner of the theatre at Eighth and Depot streets, took immediate charge of the property.

The holding belonged to Lawrence Bueche, and in the deal the Shakespeare Amusement Company did not acquire the flat building adjoining, but obtained a perpetual easement on a ten-foot strip separating the two in order to gain entrance to an airdome, also the property of Mr. Bueche. The theatre proper, which contains 750 seats, is on a lot 50 by 180 feet.

PROV., R. I.

"The Leopard Woman," shown at the Rialto theatre the week of October 18, broke all records for attendance since the theatre opened a year ago, save for one week when "In Old Kentucky" was shown. Anniversary week, last week, was big, being the second biggest week of the theatre's career, but Miss Glaum's picture set the record aside.

The Liberty Theatre, Inc., of which Samuel Bomes is the owner, has put $400,000 worth of its stock on the market in Providence to be sold at $100 per share. Mr. Bomes announces that he will install a $25,000 Moller organ in the theatre, while he is installing a new seating arrangement whereby spectators may see from the sides as well as the centre. The seating capacity will be 864 with standing room for 350. He believes the stock will pay a dividend of from 15 to 25 per cent.

The Emery, Fay's Rialto and Victory, gave special performances starting at 10:30 o'clock election night. Special wires were connected with the manager's offices and detailed announcements were made during the shows, which lasted until after 1 a. m. Wednesday morning.

The Palace (Junior Orpheum vaudeville house) has boosted its Saturday and Sunday prices to: Box seats, 75 cents; orchestra, 55 cents; balcony, 40 cents, and gallery, 15 cents. War tax is included in these prices.

Southern Enterprises, Inc., owners of the Paramount-Artcraft franchise, has established itself in a new building at 944 Perdido street. The exchange is under the management of Harold F. Wilkes. The building also houses the Realart exchange, now a part of the Southern Enterprises, but still guided by the genial and rotund Truly B. Williams.

Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation exchange, managed by Jack Dumestry, also has moved into new quarters, across the street from 944 Perdido.

"Screencraft," heralded as "a motion picture trade paper for exhibitors of the South," is to make its appearance this week. It is edited and managed by A. Jules Benedic, former New Orleans newspaper man.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Papers of incorporation for the Asheville Enterprises have been filed at Asheville, N. C., by Y. F. Freeman, C. E. Holcomb and D. R. Millard, all of whom are connected with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises at the headquarters in Atlanta Ga. The corporation is authorized to issue stock in the sum of $10,000, and the incorporation is presumed to presage the construction of a new motion picture theatre in Asheville. The Lynch interests, it is understood, have been endeavoring to obtain a theatre in Asheville for several months.

Announcement is made of the organization of the Greensboro Enterprises, Inc., at Greensboro, N. C., to operate moving picture theatres. The authorized capital stock of the concern is $10,000. The incorporators are M. C. Talley, Atlanta, Ga.; Jake Wells, Norfolk, Va., and Don P. Trent, Greensboro, N. C.

F. L. Seely, motion picture theatre owner of Raleigh, N. C., and Lynch Enterprises, of Asheville, N. C., staged a motion picture performance at the Orange Street School in Asheville, Saturday, October 30, and the performance proved such an unqualified success that it has been arrangeqd to have it held each Saturday in future during the school term.

The Norma Talmadge Company, of New York, is contemplating coming to South Carolina this winter to make moving pictures, a telegram having been received by the Chamber of Commerce of Columbia, S. C., from the company requesting information as to climatic conditions, scenic advantages, etc. The Columbia Chamber of Commerce officials are enthusiastic over the company's proposal to come to the Palmetto State and every encouragement will be offered. it is understood, to induce the Norma Talmadge Company to carry out its plans.

CANADA

Mr. Charles Lalumiere, Montreal sales manager of the Specialty Film Imports, Limited, Montreal and other Canadian cities, has announced that his company is no longer the distributor for the British pictures, which are controlled in Canada by the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Ltd., of London, England, and Montreal, Quebec. The English releases were introduced on the Canadian market last February, and a number of the latest subjects have been screened in Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa and other Canadian centres. No definite reason was given by Mr. Lalumiere for the cancellation of the agreement between the Specialty Film Imports, Limited, and the Anglo-Canadian Corporation, whereby the former had arranged to book the British features through each of its six offices across the Dominion, these being operated at Montreal, St. John, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

The Specialty Film Import, Ltd., is the Canadian distributor for all Pathe releases and independent subjects and also produces the British-Canadian Pathe Weekly and other pictures. The Specialty company recently has been making a special drive with the seven-reel production, "Half-A-Chance," starring Mahlon Hamilton. An important private screening of this feature was held at the Electra theatre, St. Catherine East, Montreal, on October 25, and the picture was also privately presented at the Family theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, on October 27, before a large gathering.

The Provincial Government of British Columbia has been enforcing a law which was enacted at the session of the Provincial Legis ature. It requires all exhibitors in the Province to present at least one 1,000-foot educational or scenic reel in conjunction with every programme. The plan has entailed the use of many releases of this type and

Harry Revier has made a picture that is a masterpiece of stupendous direction and has made good his claim that a serial picture could be made on a par with successful feature productions. We take this opportunity of publicly expressing our thanks and appreciation.

LibertyFilm Exchange,

Washington, D. C.,

Gentlemen,-

I have just seen the first three episodes of the serial "THE SON OF TARZAN" which you kindly screened for me and I want to say that I am more than enthusiastic over the possibilities I can see in this serial.

The story and interest seems well developed, the action and photography is fine, and the various characters well portrayed. A feature I especially like is that the synopsis of preceding episodes is enacted in a few short scenes so that the thread of the story is never lost.

I think so well of "THE SON OF TARZAN" that I intend playing it in one of our first class theatres in Newport News where we have not played a serial for years.

I wish you the success you deserve with this serial.

Very truly yours,
E. F. Grall

A SYNOPSIS of the opening chapters of "The Son of Tarzan" is reproduced in the following for the information of those who are interested in the character of the story unfolded in this serial production.

In the heart of the African jungle a group of blacks were gathered around a camp fire. One of them was telling the Story of Tarzan of the Apes, of how Lord and Lady Greystoke were washed ashore from a wreck, and after the birth of a son were both killed by an ape who desired the baby for his mate Kala, a she ape.

He told how the boy grew up in the jungle and because of his strength and skill became ruler of the tribe. Of how he was found by his people and persuaded to assume his rightful position in society as Lord Greystoke, married Jane Porter and settled down in England.

"The Son of Tarzan" opens in the selfsame African jungle. Ivan Paulvitch, who had been an enemy of Tarzan's, is rescued by the crew of a sailing ship, and takes with him Akut, the Ape, who had been Tarzan's constant companion while he lived in the jungle. Paulvitch arrives in London with Akut, the Ape, who he trains for the vaudeville stage. Tarzan now has a son Jack about sixteen years old. The boy has inherited his father's love for the jungle and surreptitiously reads and learns all he can of jungle life. His mother fears this instinct and endeavors to keep the knowledge away from him.

Jack steals out at night to the music hall to see Akut, the Ape. The minute the Ape sees the boy a strange attraction developes. The trainer tries to separate them, a riot ensues, which is only quelled by the appearance of Lord Greystoke, who recognizes Akut and calms him.

Jack visits the Ape at Paulvitch's lodgings. Lord Greystoke, not recognizing Paulvitch, arranges with him to take the Ape back to the jungle. Paulvitch desiring vengeance against Lord Greystoke, who he believes has wronged him resolves to kill Jack and escape, letting Lord Greystoke believe that his son was killed by the Ape.

On his second visit Jack is suddenly seized and thrown violently to the floor where after a strenuous and long-drawn-out fight he is finally choked into semi-insensibility by Paulvitch. The Ape, which is chained to the wall, struggles with might and main, until at last just as Jack is about to succumb he breaks his bonds and goes to the rescue of the boy who had befriended him.

Vile hatred dulls Paulvitch's eyes as he grasps Jack's throat. Akut the Ape gives a mighty heave, and by some miracle the strong ropes part. Soon Paulvitch and the ferocious beast are locked together in combat. Akut, however, is soon the victor, and, raising a trap door in the floor, drops Faulvitch into a swiftly flowing sewer. As he strikes the dirty water he regains his senses, and is carried swiftly away.

When Jack regains consciousness he realizes what the Ape has done. Frightened at Paulvitch's supposed death, Jack plans to escape. The next day he boards a steamer with his heavily veiled grandmother in a wheel chair, who in reality is Akut the Ape so disguised.

Paulvitch swims from his sewer to a schooner anchored near by and is shanghaied for a cruise to China.

Lord Greystoke calls in detectives to search for his son, but after several days they report that they can find no trace of him.

Jack with a great deal of difficulty keeps Akut concealed from the passengers, but on a few occasions he is accidently seen by them, causing great disturbance.

A crook of international reputation named Condon sees Jack taking a roll of bills from his pocket. He enters the boy's cabin at night and searches for the money. Akut awakens; a terrific fight follows, in which Akut finally gets the death hold of the bull ape on his adversary, severing his jugular vein with his protruding fangs. The whole ship is aroused. Akut hides in the upper berth while the Captain questions Jack. He is unable to learn anything from Jack, so he confines him in the ship's detention room. Akut rescues Jack and they both jump overboard. Someone throws Jack a life preserver, which fortunately saves Akut, who is unable to swim. Luckily the steamer was sailing close to shore, and soon after both had nearly drowned a dozen times they landed on the edge of the jungle.

Utterly exhausted, Jack falls asleep at the foot of a tree. Akut climbs the tree and remains on guard. Suddenly a lion appears. Just as the lion is about to spring Akut grabs Jack and climbs with him to safety. The swaying of the branch of the tree causes him to lose his hold, and he falls to the ground, where the stalking lion is waiting.

As Jack falls Akut reaches out a hairy paw from a branch below and draws the boy to safety. The lion soon loses patience and departs, leaving them to continue their journey.

In their next adventure in the jungle Jack and Akut rescue a little girl named Meriem from the hands of a cruel Arab who has kidnapped her from her father, Captain Armand Jacot of the French Foreign Legion, and is holding her for ransom. Meriem and Jack soon become fast friends, and together with Akut they face the jungle, where adventures without number await them. Human greed and cunning stalk them at every turn, and untamed beasts of the jungle add to the insecurity of their position. How they face this menace from man and beast and together win their way to safety and love is realistically unfolded in the succeeding chapters of "The Son of Tarzan."

The cast for this character of production must necessarily be large, but a list of the important members of the cast and their roles is given as follows:

Lord Greystoke, "Tarzan of the Apes" ..... P. Dempsey Tabler
Lady Greystoke, also known as Jane ..... Karla Schamm
Jack, "The Son of Tarzan," age 15 years ..... Gordon Griffith
Meriem, The Sheik's Daughter ..... Mae Giraci
Korak, Jack five years later ..... Kamuela C. Searle
Ivan Paulvitch ..... Eugene Burr
Meriem, five years later ..... Manilla Martan
The Sheik ..... Frank Morrell
Malbihn ..... Ray Thompson

The picture was directed by Harry Revier. Roy Somerville adapted the serial production to the screen from the jungle romance written by Edgar Rice Burroughs. A brief account of some of the principal members of the cast is given in the following.

Often described as "America's greatest juvenile screen actor," Gordon Griffith at the age of four began his career with Universal. It was not long before he was discovered by the larger producers, appearing with Dustin Farnum in "The Price of Silence" and "A Son of Neptune." His portrayal of Tom Sawyer in "Huckleberry Finn," a Paramount release, was probably the greatest of his screen efforts. He played in juvenile "Tarzan of the Apes" in that picture, and today he is one of the "first string" boy stars on the West Coast. When the National Film Corporation was looking for the "son" of Tarzan for the film version of the Edgar Rice Burrough's book, Gordon was selected to play this role because of his daring and ability before the camera.

The "jungle-girl," as described in the book, "The Son of Tarzan," is a distinct perfect type, and the costume of animal skins make camouflage impossible. Director Revier long sifted the field of the legitimate and motion picture drama to find the right sort of girl. And then he remembered Manilla Martan, whose classic dances and exquisite voice had secured for her an enviable reputation as a society entertainer in the fashionable circles of New York, Bar Harbor and Newport. She had been induced to appear in dramatic roles in some of his former productions, notably "The Sin Woman," "The Grain of Dust" and "What Shall We Do With Him?" Her portrayals were so impressive that she received many offers to continue in pictures, but she declined. She finally yielded to the persuasions of Director Revier, and the verdict was unanimous that she was the jungle girl of the authors conception.

Miss Martan enjoys the distinction of having been born on July 4, the very day on which Admiral Dewey won his celebrated victory at Manilla. She was christened "Manilla" in honor of the memorable event. Much of her childhood was spent abroad, and while traveling in Italy with her parents she attracted the interest of the famous Ambrosia, who used her in several pictures. He was so enthused with her work that he named her "The Soul-Child," and predicted a great future for her on the screen. In "The Son of Tarzan" Manilla Martan as the wild, half-savage girl of the jungle is incomparable.

Born in Leavenworth, Kansas, April 14, 1882, Eugene Burr at an early age displayed talent for the stage. He achieved considerable success and invaluable experience in both musical comedy and dramatic work. He is one of the best "heavies" of the screen, specializing in he-vamps, home-wreckers, master crooks, lounge lizards and Western badmen. Supported Margaret Illington, Charlotte Walker, Geraldine Farrar and Fanny Ward. His last big part was heavy in the Helen Holmes serial, "The Danger Trail." As the villainous and vindictive ape trainer in the jungle serial, "The Son of Tarzan," Burr

Some Ready-Made Press Notices : : : :

THE circus has ever had an appeal to young and old. Time shatters our romances, as a rule, but there is a spell about the tan-bark circle and big "round-top" that never fails to attract no matter how time may have disposed of the other dreams of our youth. And in the chapters of "The Son of Tarzan," which will come to the .....theatre on.....of ..... week, there are found the selfsame elements that make the coming of the circus such a happy event of anticipation for young and old.

To begin with there are wild animals galore, not pacing back and forward, barred in by the steel bars of the circus cage, but romping about in their native jungle haunts or engaged in combat with cunning man or others of their kind. What a fascination there is to behold the lion, king of the jungle, gazing savagely out through the bars of his cage or bellowing forth his defiance to man and the other beasts around him. Can you appreciate the suspense the same king of the jungle must create when you see him in all the freedom of his natural state pursuing the Son of Tarzan through the fastnesses of the dense forest?

And here again are the adventures of the circus. How you delighted to see the trapeze-artists swing and turn somersaults at dizzy heights or watch the daring animal trainers put their charges through their stunts. But in "The Son of Tarzan" the flying trapeze becomes the swinging limb of a jungle tree, and the performers must carry on their dangerous work at the risk of falling victims to the wild animals that spring and sport about them.

To this powerful appeal of the circus, "The Son of Tarzan" adds an element not associated with the tan-bark circle—the attraction of a well-knit story in which love, youth and adventure hold your attention from the opening episode to the closing chapter. If you still feel the call of the circus and in addition love a story of romance and adventure, told in a realistic fashion and replete with suspense, then do not fail to see the opening chapter of this remarkable serial, "The Son of Tarzan," when it opens at the .....theatre on.....of the ..... week.

The serial entitled "The Son of Tarzan," which is due to appear at the ..... theatre on .... and .....of the week beginning ....., is something decidedly different, in the way of picture entertainment, from any continuous production ever screened before. Director Harry J. Revier has broken all precedents in the filming of this unique picture and has laid aside all the customary rules of thumb followed in the production of a chapter picture. The result is a picture which is bound to hold you from the opening episode to the close. Romance, adventure, strange jungle settings, life in the fastnesses of the African forests, wild animals and cunning men are all presented in this remarkable production with realistic and novel effects that mark a distinct departure in this type of production.

The story unfolded in the episodes of "The Son of Tarzan," the remarkable serial that opens at the ..... theatre on ..... and ..... is one of the most novel literary creations of the decade. The author of this jungle romance, Edgar Rice Burroughs, has won distinction for his Tarzan stories, and "The Son of Tarzan" is hailed as his most interesting Tarzan work thus far.

The first installment of this serial photoplay begins with a pictorial prologue, depicting the life of "Tarzan of the Apes," how he was rescued from the African jungle by a band of explorers and how he goes to England, where he marries Jane Porter after assuming his rightful rank and position as Lord Greystoke. It is Tarzan's son, Jack, who is the hero of this serial. The boy feels the call of the jungle in his blood, inherited from his father and, in company with Akut, an ape, Jack goes to Africa where he lives with the apes, fights wild beasts, desperate savages and revengeful Arabs. The love interest is natural and logical, appearing after Jack has rescued Meriem, a kidnapped French girl, from the clutches of the Arab shiek.

How public officials are co-operated with by motion-picture producers is one of the many lessons that the actual filming of "The Son of Tarzan" teaches. There are numerous animals appearing throughout the length of this unusual serial production, which is scheduled to appear at the ..... theatre, on ..... The Los Angeles Chapter of the Society of Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the Humane Society sent representatives frequently to the studios where this production was being filmed. The purpose of these officials was to supervise the feeding and the proper housing of the hundreds of animals which appear in this picture.

After the production of "The Son of Tarzan" Director Harry J. Revier was given a clean bill from the humane societies, both for the considerate treatment the wild animals received while in his charge and for the cordiality shown the representatives.

The lions, tigers, leopards and other jungle denizens which appear in the remarkable serial production, "The Son of Tarzan," an attraction scheduled to open at the ..... theatre on ..... and ..... of next week, wrought a great deal of material damage to studio equipment in addition to the excitement that they more than once occasioned when they ran amuck in the huge steel arena in which the settings for this picture were built. Photographic equipment valued at $10,000 was completely destroyed or rendered useless during the filming of the jungle scenes. Four sets of almost priceless lenses were smashed and many tripods were broken by the lions, tigers, leopards and other jungle animals in their mad chases about the huge steel arena.

The filming of "The Son of Tarzan," the chapter-picture which is due to open at the ..... theatre on ..... of next week, was accomplished only after many hazardous experiences in which the principals did not always come through unharmed. An angry lioness scratched Gordon Griffith, the young juvenile star, appearing in this production, and he narrowly escaped blood poisoning. Mae Giraci received painful hurts when she was attacked by a small ape that appears in this picture.

P. Dempsey Tabler and Eugene Burr, both actors, were the first to suffer hurts. Both men sustained broken ribs when a small rowboat capsized. George Morrell, an assistant director, came next with an injured limb, torn during an automobile accident, when Roy Somerville, the scenario writer who adapted "The Son of Tarzan," for the screen, nearly lost his life.

Do you realize what extreme care and precautions must be taken in the filming of a great animal serial such as "The Son of Tarzan," which is scheduled to appear at the ..... theatre on ..... of next week And do you appreciate the wealth of detail attendant upon the production of so huge a picture play A few excerpts from the "history sheet" compiled during the filming of this remarkable chapter-picture will furnish some idea of what it means to put through successfully a gigantic picture enterprise of this character.

Over a hundred wild animals were used throughout the entire production, three of which were actually killed by the actors, following the story by Edgar Rice Burroughs to the most minute detail.

At times five motion picture cameras recorded the action, especially during the swift-moving and furious jungle combats between men and beasts.

Ten special animal trainers, one for each group of beasts, were at all times at the call of Director Harry J. Revier.

Five actors were seriously injured during the filming of marine scenes on the Pacific ocean.

The entire cast of principles was "hand-picked" with due regard to their abilities to "take chances" with death.

The author, Edgar Rice Burroughs, was present practically at all times during the production of "The Son of Tarzan."

Special steel screens, with loop holes for the lens, were built to protect cameras and operators from the rushes of the jungle animals.

Elephants were goaded into fury and allowed to uproot trees and almost permitted to escape in order to secure desired effects.

"Mistress of three of the seven arts"—that's the title which Karla Schramm bears, and in addition she appears in an important part in

Musical Suggestions for "The Son of Tarzan"

S. M. BERG has written musical scores for each episode of "The Son of Tarzan" and also makes an important announcement in connection with the musical numbers suggested. Mr. Berg says:

"In order to meet the requirements of exhibitors throughout the country who are declining to pay the tax demanded by the American Society, the musical suggestions are confined to such music as can be publicly performed free of all tax, as neither the publishers nor composers of the music suggested are members of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers.

"The timing of the picture is based on a speed of fourteen minutes to a thousand feet.. End of reels is not given, because progressive operators either join reels together or diffuse so quickly that an audience or musician is not aware of the changes. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues, which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 28¾ T, 'Come to my home,' is a sub-title, and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 26 D, 'When ape seizes Tarzan,' is a description of action."

In order to musically interpret 'The Son of Tarzan,' four contrasting themes will be found necessary.

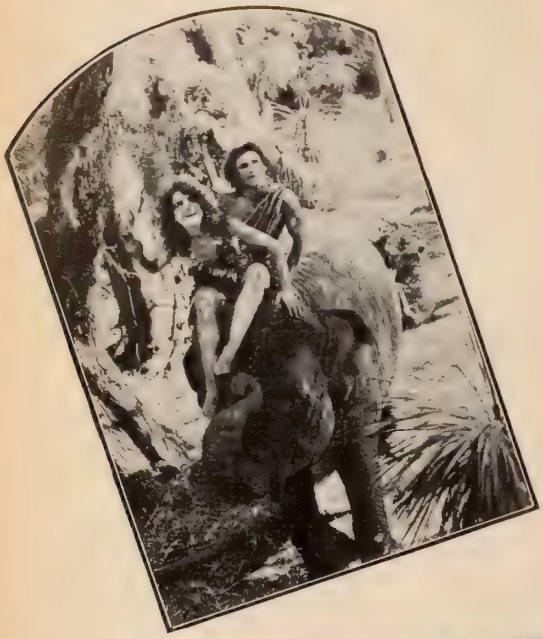
TARZAN THEME is an original composition, entitled "Tarzan, My Jungle King," by Stuckey and Tedman, and will be found particularly adapted to associate with the leading heroic characters of the story. The character of the composition is an Allegretto 4/4.

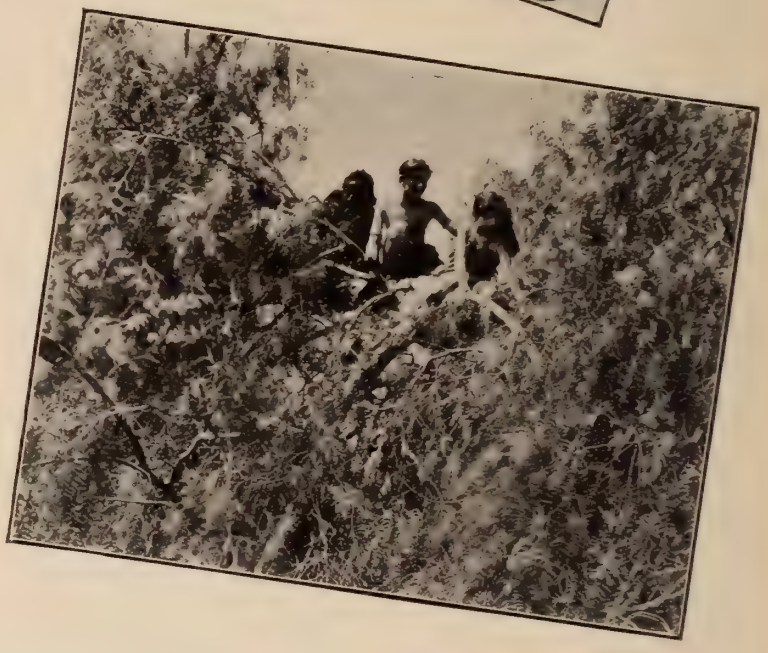
JUNGLE THEME is 'A Cannibal Carnival,' by Sol P. Levy, and is suggested to be played at scenes of the jungle which is the lure to Tarzan's son, Jack. The tempo is a Characteristic Moderato Barbarique. Judicious effects of animal noises should be used in conjunction with this theme.

PAULVITCH THEME, selected for the villain, Paulvitch, is "Sinister Theme," by Vely, the tempo being a Characteristic Ominous Dramatic.

SHEIK THEME is 'Heavy Mysterioso,' by Sol P. Levy, the tempo being a Dramatic Characteristic. Although not strictly an Oriental number, the Sheik is the second villain in the serial, and requires a dramatic characteristic to interpret his nefarious schemes.

Some Interesting Scene Stills from "The Son of Tarzan"





On this page is shown a number of scenes from the serial production, "The Son of Tarzan," an adaptation of Edgar Rice Burrough's famous novel of the same title. The picture has been sold on the states rights basis, another page in this section informing exhibitors concerning the particular exchange where the production may be obtained. The serial is in two acts and a prologue. The illustrations shown herewith are from the first six episodes which cover the story of the son of "Tarzan" as a child complete and gets well into to the part of the production having to do with the life of the "Tarzan's" after he is grown to manhood

Accessories for "Son of Tarzan" : : : :

The producers of "The Son of Tarzan" have prepared many exhibitor accessories for the exploitation of various episodes which will be obtainable at the various exchanges which will handle the production.

These accessories include besides the regular array of standard articles a number of novelties that are inexpensive and designed to be of real exploitation service to exhibitors.

Of the standard accessory articles the following are enumerated. Three styles of one sheets, all descriptive with vivid reproductions from scene stills of the picture. A six sheet that has the proper punch and has as a basis one of the most thrilling scenes appearing in the production. An artistic three sheet that features the title and the author of the novel in large letters. A highly colored twenty-four sheet stand, also an actual reproduction from a scene in which wild animals and the son of "Tarzan" are presented. This stand also presents the title and the name of the author in big letters.

An extra accessory of the stock style is available in a cloth banner, ten by three feet. This is printed in flashy colors and will be suitable for tack work and for the lobby display. Paper for every episode is available with the exception of the twenty-four sheet, which is for the entire production. Ready to use ads, in one, two and three-column sizes, can be obtained at your exchange for the various episodes. Larger cuts running up to a third of a page and mortised for the theatre announcement insertions are also ready. These cuts are all descriptive and contain opportunity for the individual exhibitor to insert such text matter as he desires.

Director Harry Revier introduces Karla Schramm to two new additions to the cast of "The Son of Tarzan"

Announcement slides for every episode are prepared for each week's release and a mailing card ready for addressing, which tells about the author, the thrills and action to be found in the picture, and giving a little idea of what the production is all about can be secured. A stock one sheet for the entire production has also been prepared. This paper shows the son of "Tarzan" being carried about by an elephant with other animals of the jungle realistically portrayed. A producer's press book in which there is ready to cut press matter, cuts of all the ads and paper, a synopsis of each episode of the picture, advertising suggestions, presentation advice, music cues for each episode, stories about the author, director and cast, all illustrated with practical cuts, has been prepared.

Among the many specialty accessories to be furnished the exhibitor at a reasonable price are the following:

Thirty by forty inch and forty by sixty inch lobby display hand painted pictures, all framed and ready to stand at the entrance of the theatre. These pictures are actual scenes that appear in the serial and have been selected with care from scene stills. The work has been done by well known artists and every effort has been made to make the displays artistic and attractive. The frames used are in keeping with the art work.

Designed for distribution among the children are celluloid buttons on which are reproductions in miniature from the picture, a small stamp made of wood with a rubber foot that will print an etching picture of scenes from the picture and which is designed for "Young America" to use in "stamping" everything in sight, a variety of small photographs showing various members of the cast in characteristic poses and which resemble the pictures which were formerly distributed in the Sweet Caporal cigarette packages. These photos come in sets of fifteen, each one showing a different scene and presenting the principal characters as they appear in the picture. A song has been written that is described fully on this page in the box above. Copies of this song may be obtained and an opportunity to tie up with music stores is presented by it.

The complete story of the Burrough's novel has been syndicated and will be furnished newspapers in the cities where the production is booked, in boiler plate, mat form or in copy, for publication simultaneously with the running of each episode. The exchange from which you book the picture has made arrangements to take care of the stories' publication without cost to either the paper or the theatre running the serial. Mats, scene stills, illustrating the picture, will also be available without charge to the papers.

All these arrangements have already been completed and the exhibitor is assured of unprecedented co-operation in exploiting the whole fifteen episodes of the production.

Howells Has Strong Organizaton

GREAT, greater, greatest—that's the motto of the David P. Howells organization, distributors of world's rights productions, which is advancing by strides and bounds in its determined efforts to reach the superlative.

On entering the Howell offices at 729-7th avenue the writer was amazed at the flourishing condition it presented in comparison to what it was a year ago. Now we don't mean that this organization was a small one a year ago by any means. But if we remember correctly the mental picture retained, at the time, its growth is astounding.

With typewriters clicking and clerks, stenographers, office boys, etc., rushing hither and thither, in their anxiety to get the "day's work done," we could not help remarking as we entered "there's money in the world's rights market if you want to dig for it but you must know what you are digging for—the right kind of films."

And in this respect the Howells organization has followed the "straight and narrow," never deviating an inch, for it is their emphatic rule to "stop, look and listen" when they are purchasing films for the market. And the result—take one look at their offices—and their officers.

In one of the inner sanctorums, sits George H. Hamilton, general sales manager and T. O. Eltonhead who handles the advertising, publicity and exploitation.

"If there is a better combination from a directorial standpoint, we've never seen it. Quick, active, alert, these two gentlemen are a credit to any organization. But like most of their species they won't talk."

However, by pursuing our object we heard a rather amazing story and it concerned George Hamilton.

This young fellow is one of the real pioneers in the film business and one of its oldest showmen and an organizer of note.

To show you that he is a pioneer, he is said to be the first man to carry a can of film under his arm and this was back in 1904 for W. H. Swanson.

After wading through the ups and downs of this business, he organized the Buffalo Moving Picture Corporation and produced, directed and sold "The Price of Innocence," "Sport of Kings" and "The Daughter of Devil Dan." The principal feature of this incident in his life being that he did the directing. He was not satisfied with the way things were progressing in this department and not wishing to waste time, took the reins in his own hands with the result—well, those who have seen the pictures liked them and they made money.

Mr. Hamilton also is well known for his connection with the World's Fair in Chicago, the Buffalo Exposition, the St. Louis Exposition and as the organizer and manager of the Moisent International Aviation Exposition.

But the big stunt of his life is the superb way he handled "The Son of Tarzan," and we need only mention the fact that this feature was sold and all contracts closed for the world's rights in six week's time. Is he a genius, well we'll say so.

However, we must not forget to mention Mr. Eltonhead in the latter connection for it was his ideas in exploitation which headed the film on the road to success.—

The fact that thirty-five houses in New York State which never before in their history showed a serial, have signed contracts for fifteen weeks to run an episode of "The Son of Tarzan," each week, is taken as proof of the high quality of that serial. "We have broken in," states Pioneer Film Corporation, which reports the sales, "where never before has a serial ever been shown."

The names of the houses will be announced shortly. The signing of these contracts by such a large number of theatres which formerly avoided all kinds of serials, is regarded as the highest tribute possible to "The Son of Tarzan," and one that proves to a certainty not only that the serial is thoroughly entertaining, but that it has been reproduced in such a high class fashion that it will satisfy the tastes of the most fastidious.

Harry J. Revier, Director : :

Roy Sommerville, on the left, who wrote the scenario for "The Son of Tarzan," and Harry Revier on the right, who directed it.

WHEN David P. Howells obtained the film rights to Edgar Rice Burroughs' "The Son of Tarzan" and made arrangements with the National Film Corporation for production facilities, he decided to have the serial so unusual in character and of such high quality that it would play in the first run houses.

To reach this end he secured Harry J. Revier as the director. There were two prime reasons for his choice. One was that Mr. Revier had the reputation and record of an excellent dramatic director, and the other, that he had never produced a serial.

This was a rather unusual move in an industry where directors, writers and players are classified according to the type of work they have done, but it was only the first of many departures from the beaten path made during the filming of this serial.

When Mr. Revier was first approached on the matter of making "The Son of Tarzan," he rejected Mr. Howells' offer, saying that he knew nothing about serials. His efforts had always been confined to dramatic productions, and he had no desire to enter the serial field, which is a distinct line of endeavor in itself.

It was only after considerable persuasion that Mr. Howells induced Mr. Revier to consider the project. The latter had directed "The Return of Tarzan," by the same author, and was familiar with the location and set needs and other details of such a production. But he hesitated about making a serial until Mr. Howells outlined his plans for "The Son of Tarzan." Then the director realized that he was not expected to turn out a succession of meaningless thrills tied together with a wisp of a story, that instead, he would have an opportunity to do something new, to create a precedent.

Harry Revier is essentially a pioneer. To experiment with an effect or strive for a goal that others have labelled as impossible of achievement fascinates him.

He believed that a serial could be successfully and profitably produced on a feature basis; that, with the proper story, a picture could be just as forceful and interesting in the chaptered length of a serial as in a six reel feature. Serials in the past have not been aimed at this goal. As a rule, they have been a series of thrills for which the theme is more an excuse than a reason.

Mr. Revier's theories regarding the proper form of production for "The Son of Tarzan" marked a distinct departure in the business of making serials and accorded perfectly with the plans of Mr. Howells. The very daring of the idea gave the undertaking its first step towards success.

In order that the adaptation of the story be along the special lines planned for the serial, Mr. Revier got Roy Somerville, prominent novelist and screen writer, to join him in a director-photodramatist combination. They journeyed to California together and there worked in unison on the development of the story, the filming of the scenes and the cutting and titling of the finished product.

How well this theory of producing a serial has worked out is best told in the praise of its critics and the quick disposal of it in the open market. Producers who viewed the early episodes at the studio were unanimous in the declaration that "The Son of Tarzan" represented the opening of a new epoch in film production. As a serial, they stated that it blazed the trail for serials to come, and as a release they frankly admitted it a worthy competitor of the feature for exhibition in the first-run house.

In the making of the serial, both Mr. Revier and Mr. Somerville exercised the same care and applied the same sincere effort that they would have given to a big dramatic production.

Each episode of "The Son of Tarzan" is a complete chapter in itself. A pictorial foreword relating the important developments of the story to date precedes each episode. In quick, interesting sequences the person who has missed a release or two or who sees the serial for the first time in its third or eighth chapter becomes sufficiently acquainted with the story to enjoy the current release as an individual picture.

The plot of each episode is worked up to the climax as smoothly and as logically as though it embodied the entire story. In each case the climax is a suspended thrill that will bring the people up in their seats with a jerk and make them want to see the next release. The lions, apes, elephants, panthers and other ferocious jungle beasts utilized in the serial will help to make it magnetic to the public.

Not once does the production slump in its interest or slow down in its action. Each episode is characteristic of the finesse and artistry which have marked Mr. Revier's dramatic achievements in the past. The superb handling of the emotion and spectacular scenes of "The Son of Tarzan" stamps the director as a master. He has succeeded admirably in preserving the serial the mystic, adventurous spirit of the jungle that made the book appeal so strongly.

Technically, the serial is fully up to the standard set by the feature picture. The jungle locations, rich in Nature's wild beauty, are true to the environment suggested by the story, and the London interior sets are as luxurious as those of any society drama. A splendid cast and remarkable photography are factors that contribute their share to the general excellency of the production.

"The Son of Tarzan" establishes a record for consistency and quality that will be the criterion of serials hereafter. In it the elements which have made serials so popular in the past are combined with the production advantages and dramatic strength of the feature picture.

eclipses any of his other performances.

P. Dempsey Tabler is by birth and family a Southerner, both his father and grandfather were Confederate officers. Besides being a champion of the track and ring, he studied for the operatic stage in Leipsig, Germany, and is the producer of several motion pictures. He has starred in quite a few of Thomas H. Ince's Trinagle productions, and after a long absence from the screen he returned to play the role of "Tarzan of the Apes" in the wonder jungle serial, "The Son of Tarzan."

Karla Schramm was born in the suburbs of Los Angeles. In early girlhood she went to Chicago. After graduating from university she returned to her native State, and one day, while being a spectator of an explosion scene that D. W. Griffith was putting on, the great director, after an introduction, asked her to play in a few scenes. That night she was initiated into the moving picture world. She played with Henry Walthall, and later in "Broken Blossoms," also parts with Fairbanks, and many others, having prominent roles in "The Winding Trail," "His Majesty the American," "The Return of Tarzan," etc. As Jane Porter in the "Tarzan" pictures she has had many thrilling experiences.

"The Son of Tarzan," the great serial production picture, which is scheduled to appear at the ..... theatre on ..... of this coming week. Miss Schramm has won distinction as a composer of concert songs, and she also has done some notable work as a mural decorator. Now she appears as a full-fledged photo-play artist, and her dramatic ability is in no way inferior to her other attainments.

"I have three dominant moods," stated Miss Schramm while discussing her various professions, "and all of them are creative. When I sing a song it must be my own; when I decorate the interior of a house, not a detail must be changed, and when I sign a contract for a photoplay production I must play it my own way and interpret the character as I feel it or I leave the studio."

Miss Schramm plays the part of Jane Porter as she "feels" it, and has done so well that she has been allowed to practice her other "trade" during the production of this serial when she asked to be allowed to design a magnificent drawing-room "set" which forms the background of some highly emotional acting on her part.

"All State Right buyers who follow the example of the men in the same field realize that quality counts. High grade pictures in story and direction, if not in featured star, are what count and will alone retain the bright future that the independent market has ahead. Pictures must not be judged by the price asked for them, but upon their production merits and box office power."

The above is the doctrine of Joe Brandt, president of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corp, who sees in the action of some buyers, who offer a minimum price for a certain territory without regard for the picture's quality, or without even viewing the production, the reason why many producers consider the independent exchanges "merely junk shops."

"If the independent will determine upon a policy of only good pictures being brought and handled, it will only be a short time until the producers will offer their best product to the independent. If this is not done the leading producers will not want their pictures classed with the cheap stuff that some of these exchanges are handling."

"Tarzan at Exchanges"

Sam and Jake Flax, of Washington, D. C.

The Liberty Film Exchange, of 916 G Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., who will distribute "The Son of Tarzan" in Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, and the District of Columbia, is headed by Sam and Jake Flax, who opened their independent exchange in March, 1919.

Both men have been in the film business for a number of years. Sam Flax was formerly a booker in the Washington branch of the General Film Company, and Jake Flax was also connected with that organization, serving as Branch Manager during the last two years of its existence.

While no reports have been received to date as to the reception that exhibitors in that territory have accorded "The Son of Tarzan," early news of enthusiasm is expected. The fact that Sam and Jake Flax have chosen "The Son of Tarzan" to add to their already high class list pictures, is regarded as a high endorsement for any picture.

Pittsburgh Showing in "Son of Tarzan"

N. J. Neiland, is president of the Standard Film Exchange, of 119-121 Ninth street, Pittsburgh, who control the rights for West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania on "The Son of Tarzan." Mr. Neiland is a well known state right man in that territory ,and his exchange already has a number of high class features.

A trade showing is planned by the Standard Film Exchange, which is expected to be one of the largest ever held in that city. This exchange, it is said, will make special efforts to break all records with "The Son of Tarzan."

Specialty Film Co., of Dallas, Tex.

W. G. Underwood is president of the Specialty Film Company, of 107 South St. Paul street, Texas, who have purchased the rights to Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. L. G. Bissinger is vice-president and E. T. Peters secretary. The company expects a great future for "The Son of Tarzan," and is said to be making big plans for its exploitation and advertising.

By a sub-lease arrangement, Tucker Brothers will release the serial in Oklahoma.

Richards-Flynn Co. to Sell Kansas

Richards and Flynn Film Company, who are located in the Film Exchange Building in Kansas City, Mo., has sub-leased the rights to "The Son of Tarzan" to Skaunas Brothers, of St. Louis, who will release the serial in Missouri.

Jacksonville New Producing Center

JACKSONVILLE, Florida, is now making a tremendous bid to secure the southern headquarters for the motion picture industry, and has ambitions to become the third motion picture city of the United States after New York and Los Angeles.

Realizing its proximity to New York City, the financial headquarters of the industry, Jacksonville, which is only thirty hours from New York, makes its bid for the establishment of a center there because of this important fact. In addition to this inducement, Florida of course has all the scenic, climatic and other requisite advantages required in the production of motion pictures.

A committee of five of the foremost businessmen of Jacksonville has been appointed an executive committee to do business with the reputable producers of the country. This committee consists of the mayor of Jacksonville, the Hon. John W. Martin; E. E. Cohen, the biggest dry goods merchant in Florida; H. B. Hoyt, president of the Jacksonville Gas Company and other big corporations; H. J. Klutho, a talented architect who already has established a studio here and is familiar with the technic of the industry; and W. R. Carter, a retired newspaper owner.

These gentlemen have thrown all their energy and influence into this movement, and won over the enthusiastic support of the big bankers in Jacksonville. A vigorous publicity campaign has been launched setting forth the advantages of Jacksonville and giving other valuable information in such a way that it is most impressive.

Mr. Carter heads the motion picture committee of the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce and is one of the strongest factors working toward the end of making Jacksonville the third producing center of this country. Mr. Carter has taken the lead in this matter and with his usual energy and enthusiasm he will carry it over.

He is one of the best newspapermen in the South and only recently sold out to S. A. Lynch of the Lynch Enterprises his interests in the Florida Metropolis the largest evening paper in Florida. Being rid of the responsibility of running a great daily he is now applying this energy to the work of arousing interest in promoting financial fellowship between Northern and Southern capital in order to build in Jacksonville a Universal City for the benefit of Northern producers and Jacksonville citizens alike.

Mr. Klutho is one man who has backed his faith in Jacksonville, sooner or later, becoming a Producing Center by investing thousands of dollars in erecting the largest studio for rent in the South.

Mr. Klutho is a member of the special motion picture committee of the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce and a co-worker of Mr. Carter—all working towards the end of making Jacksonville the third largest producing center in the country.

He is an architect by profession but has put in all his spare time and money too to keep alive the spirit and desire to make this city a center. He very naively remarks that it was often very discouraging during the Dark Ages (War) but now with Mr. W. R. Carter at the head of a strong committee and Mr. E. W. Lane one of the biggest bankers in Florida becoming interested and positively enthusiastic the future of Jacksonville looks bright.

The members of the executive board were chosen by Mr. Carter for their expertness in various phases of civic life and industry which have a bearing on the motion picture interests.

The mayor was selected because he is not only a thorough enthusiast upon this subject but because he can speak authoritatively on behalf of the city and the city government in inviting these producers here. Mr. Klutho, owner of the Klutho studio, the only motion picture plant in Jacksonville, is on the board because of his familiarity with the production end. Mr. Klutho is recognized as the first local authority on motion picture production and requirements and his services are expected to be invaluable to the committee. Mr. Cohen represents the largest retail establishment in the State and will represent the retail merchants. He, also, is thoroughly enthusiastic in the work of the committee and has given much time and thought to this work. Mr. Hoyt, head of the Jacksonville Gas Company and the Jacksonville Ferry and Land Company, will represent the public service industries on the committee. Mr. Hoyt is noted for his vision and his ability to organize and he is expected to prove one of the most active and one of the most efficient members of the board.

Mr. Carter who will serve on the executive board in addition to continuing his duties as chairman of the motion picture committee, has for years been one of the most consistent and enthusiastic advocates of the city cooperating with motion picture producers. Mr. Carter has made many trips to New York, at one time and another, in the interest of bringing such companies here and has been unusually successful in such efforts. Until recently editor of the evening paper, Mr. Carter worked for more than thirty years for the upbuilding of the city and now that he has retired from active business he intends continuing certain of these efforts.

"I believe the public is at last awake to the opportunity that lies ing the last few days I have received the personal assurance of many business men that they will stand behind the motion picture committee in this effort and that they will cooperate in every possible way with this body and with producers when they come here.

"We have the making here of a second Los Angeles. Jacksonville aspires to become the third great center for picture production. It can be accomplished. We need right now enthusiasm on the part of local people. Open-mindedness, vision and ability to see in Jacksonville what the people of Los Angeles saw in their city a few years ago will accomplish the realization of our ambitions in this project.

"Jacksonville can bring these producers here. That is certain. It also is certain that their coming will mean a new era of prosperity for the city, new activity along building and other lines, new pay rolls, thousands of new residents and new interest in Jacksonville by outside capital. This opportunity ranks with our water commerce and our naval stores industry. We can accomplish the thing we are striving to do and with the help and good will of all Jacksonville we will.

"It does not require a vivid imagination to realize what extensive motion picture production means to Jacksonville," he continued. "The business has developed to such an extent during the last few years that the main facts are well known. We know that it is one of the largest of our American industries, that its pay-rolls amount to millions, that millions are spent on productions and that wherever the big producers locate prosperity follows.

"Jacksonville is after new business, greater pay-rolls, better advertisement to the world as a playground for tourists. No better or more efficient medium could be imagined than motion picture studios, with large companies working regularly to accomplish these aims. Motion pictures bring not only pay-rolls and advertising but provide an attractive new angle for tourist interest. The popularity of Los Angeles as a tourist resort is largely due to the presence in that city of the largest studios.

"Jacksonville's opportunity is at hand. This committee has carefully examined into many plans for bringing producers here, and it now believes it has struck the proper note. We believe we have the way provided and we believe Jacksonville will back us up."

"Rubin Mats" Is. "Nuf Sed"

"Publicity is only half publicity without a good illustration—and no illustration is good, no matter what the quality of the photographic original, unless the matrix retains all its value."

That is the theory and axiom of newspaper pulicity on which the David Howells organization worked in planning the complete line of matrices available for exhibitors in exploiting "The Son of Tarzan." All this work for the serial was entrusted to the capable hands of I. Rubin, who is gaining a unique place in his field as a motion-picture specialist.

More and more screen advertising men are coming to realize that they must carry their efficiency right through to the newspaper stereotype room where the final result is weighed.

Special Service on
Edgar Rice Burroughs's "The Son of Tarzan"

"THE SON OF TARZAN" is a serial picture presented through independent exchanges which are announced on another page. The story told in the various episodes begins with a synopsis in pictorial form of the novel and picture "Tarzan of the Apes" showing the rescue of 'Tarzan" from the uninhabited island where he has grown up as an ape-man, his subsequent development in to his natural sphere, through education, as an English peer and presents him at the beginning of the story proper as a man of middle age with a son some fifteen years of age. After the prologue the picture is again divided into two parts, the first presenting the son of "Tarzan" as the boy of the age mentioned and ends when the sequence of the story have brought the lad and the ape, "Akut" to another uninhabited tropical island under circumstances similar to those which "Tarzan" lived up to the time of his rescue as related in the "Tarzan" stories by the author of the novels, Edgar Rice Burroughs.

The keynote of "The Son of Tarzan" is action in which thrills are presented with sufficient regularity to please the most exacting and hardened serial devotee.

This is more particularly true after the prologue which does not take up any great amount of footage, being well out of the way before the end of the first episode. Next in importance is the tropical atmosphere with its jungle inhabitants from elephants and lions to the smaller denizens of the forest. Other highlights of the picture as screened to date are the work of a capable cast or rather of three casts since "Tarzan" is presented, played by P. Dempsey Tabler, the son of "Tarzan" as a boy in his teens, a role in which Gordon Griffith is entirely adequate and the son of "Tarzan" as a man in which role, Kamuela C. Searle appears.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the picture and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

The author of the "Son of Tarzan" is Edgar Rice Burroughs who wrote the other "Tarzan" stories, all of which have been great successes when adapted for the screen. The continuity and scenario for the picture was done by Roy Somerville, one of the veterans of the game and recognized as one of the experts since the days of the old Triangle program. The director is Harry Revier, also of established reputation and long experience in making photoplays and acknowledged to be especially fitted for the production of melodrama, as many of his pictures, among which are "The Spell of the Yukon," "The Revenge of Tarzan," "The Grain of Dust" and "The Challenge" will testify.

In the leading roles the picture boasts Manilla Martin a pretty engenue who plays the jungle girl of the last act. She has had a considerable experience appearing in such pictures as "The Sin Woman," "The Grain of Dust" and others. In "The Son of Tarzan" she appears clad in the abbreviated costume consisting principally of a leopard's robe, concealing her torso but leaving bare limbs and shoulders. There is audience appeal in this fact. It is not to be inferred however, that any portion of the picture is suggestive. The role does not call for emotional acting but does make imperative an ability to put over considerable in the way of stunts and requires that the actress playing the part be willing and capable in the matter of handling herself in rough and tumble scenes.

Kamuela Searles, who plays the part of the son of "Tarzan" in the last act is a fine looking actor, of unusual physique and splendid abilities. His role calls for much agility and also for much manhandling by the other members of the cast. He puts over a number of great fights and will be found a likable figure by both men and women.

In the first act of the picture, not the prologue, two clever children are featured, Gordon Griffith as the son of "Tarzan" at the age of fifteen and Mae Giraci the sheik's daughter, as a child. The role which Master Gordon has requires a varied acting ability. The part which little Miss Giraci plays is not so important but both roles are sure fire audience stuff with both children and grown-ups. Especially will the scenes in which Gordon appears appeal to Young America. These are melodramatic and have required a considerable athletic ability.

The heavy role that of a renegade enemy of "Tarzan" is played by Eugene Burr, an actor of long experience, who has appeared in support of such screen stars as Charlotte Walker, Geraldine Farrar and Fanny Ward. He is also a well known player to serial audiences, having appeared in many of the episodes of Helen Holmes' serial.

The other members of the cast are all thoroughly competent. Large casts of extras are employed in various sequences, especially those which take place on the tropical island.

The general exploitation angles for the production are to be found as follows and listed according to importance, according to the writers opinion in the sequence in which they are given. (1) The fame of the other "Tarzan" pictures, notably "Tarzan of the Apes" and "The Revenge of Tarzan," the current multiple reel feature. Both these pictures have had unusual publicity and while the first named is probably on the shelf with most exchanges except for the very small towns or return dates, the memory of it is still fresh in the minds of audiences. It was a big money maker for both exhibitor and producer, and through its success a big audience has been built for other "Tarzan" films. Concerning "The Revenge of Tarzan" all that need be said is that it is going big according to all reports and is getting big exploitation. (2) The action and exciting sequences of "The Son of Tarzan" so far as it has been viewed to date which was six episodes. Once a person sees an episode or so of this serial it would seem certain that he will be sold for all succeeding numbers. (3) The opportunity presented for outside exploitation, such as lobby display, window displays, and "hokum" stunts.

Exploitation Suggestions

Build a lobby display that will conform to the tropical settings used in many of the scenes of the picture. Make up an actor to play the part of "Akut" the ape and place him in a cage or use a cutout from the producers paper for the same purpose.

Get the children interested in the offering. Use the stunts that will suggest themselves to you for this purpose unless a free matinee is one of them. Of free shows we do not approve. Give prizes, arrange a contest or do anything else that will get the children out for the first episode but do not give a free show unless it be a special showing to some particular class, like the newsboys or a club like the Boy Scouts. The reason we warn against public free shows is that it is a well known fact that something free to everybody is not appreciated. A special invitation is a different matter.

In the matter of interesting the children a contest in which the boy who can give the best imitation of "Akut" is given a prize would be an interest builder. Use plenty of paper especially the 24 sheets and also see what you can do with cutouts of the ape placed in advantageous positions. For those who aren't afraid of getting in trouble with the police the planting of an ape man in your city to make mysterious appearances like showing up the tops of tall buildings and at at windows high above the ground an be depended upo to get attention providing your "ape" is careful that some excited citizen doesn't fill him full of buck shot.

Here is a stunt that is original, will cause talk, and will bring crowds together wherever it is pulled.

Get a big motor truck. Fit it up with palms, plants, creeping vines, and trees as an African jungle. Have two tree trunks set up, well braced with a strong cross bar.

Get a big kettle drum that you can get the tom-tom effect with, and conceal it in one corner. Have a crew of men dressed in monkey costume. Four of them should have voices, the fifth should be a good gymnast.

Cover the outside of the truck with big signs telling all about the "Son of Tarzan," where it is to be seen, etc. Send this truck about the city. Have it stop on busy corners. Start the tom-tom going in the rhythm of a fox trot. Start the quartet singing "Tarzan, My Jungle King. "Immediately the song is concluded have the gymnast do all sorts of monkey shines on the horizontal bar. While he is performing have the other men in monkey costume distributing throwaways.

Newspaper Displays

Feature the title referring to the other "Tarzan" pictures with promise of more action than these melodramas contained. Use scene stills especially those showing 'Meriem" as she appears on the island. Mention the author and the players but do not put any great stress on them. Make your ads bold and black and do not be afraid to buy big space for the first episode.

Synopsis of "The Son of Tarzan"

The "Tarzan" stories, by the famous author, Edgar Rice Burroughs, have become history to the lovers of the motion picture art. In a short while "The Son of Tarzan," the greatest of these marvelous jungle romances, will begin its run at this theatre in serial form.

The son of "Tarzan of the Apes," through inherited instinct and circumstances, is lured to the jungle. With his companion, Akut, a bull ape, he conquers the wild beasts, blacks and Arabs of the African wilderness and thereby gains the name of Korak, the Killer.

The youth thrives on the life of the outdoors; the companionship of the ever-faithful anthropoid and a child of the Wilds, Meriem, to whom he is devoted, gives him fourfold courage. With his giar strength he keeps at bay the savages of the forest. Alone he conquers tribes of Arabs and blacks They are beset by enemies who covet Meriem, but love for his girl-treasure gives Korak superhuman strength to defend her.

The Killer is attacked by ferocious baboons, and after a terrific struggle he subjugates them, placing Akut as their leader. With his tribe of Apes, the Ape man rescues Meriem from the savage blacks, after a murderous slaughter on both sides.

The girl is again taken prisoner by two villainous Swedes, who hold her for ransom. One of them seeks to possess her, but this attempt is frustrated by "Tarzan of the Apes," who has come to the jungle in search of his wife.

Korak is tortured at the loss of his jungle mates, and, seeking her, with his mighty strength he overcomes prowling hungry lions, fierce tigers, cannibals, venomous Arabs, and the many other horrors and perils that abound in the heart of the black country.

Meriem is lured away from Tarzan of the Apes by the Swede. Tarzan, vowing vengeance, returns to his old jungle life in search of her.

Meriem, after a fierce struggle with the Swede, escapes only to fall into the hands of the Arab Sheik. Korak, who had been tracking her with Tantor, his elephant companion, routs the Arabs and blacks and disappears into the heart of the forest with Meriem.

Tarzan, after days of weary search, finds the two. He recognizes his boy. Korak's reunion with his mother and marriage to Meriem are the final scenes in this jungle romance.

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

ABOUT DIRECTORS

ELECTION night, falling upon the first Tuesday of November, necessitated the meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association being held upon the previous Monday night. Director James Vincent, in the chair, welcomed a representative attendance. There were a goodly number evidently able to get to lodge and to the poles. Despite the furore of political issues, there seemed to be considerable "shop talk" before order was called, which prevented the otherwise inevitable argument as to which of the national contestants would make the better motion picture director.

James W. Horne, who is directing the Thomas H. Ince adaptation of Louis Joseph Vance's exciting tale of India, "The Bronze Bell," announces that the production will be complete within a week. Mr. Horne is said to have utilized more than half a hundred double exposure effects in his screen transcription of the Vance novel. And upon viewing the rushes to date, Mr. Ince has expressed his great satisfaction with results.

Herbert Brennon, who has just returned to this country after producing several pictures in Italy and Sicily, has been engaged by Joseph M. Schenck to direct Norma Talmadge in "The Passion Flower," the Spanish story by Jacinto Benavente, in which Nance O'Neill is making a great success on the speaking stage.

Wesley Ruggles, director of Louise Glaum's initial Associated Producer's release, "The Leopard Woman," is now on the Metro lot. Bayard Veiller has signed this enterprising young director to a lucrative contract which provides that Ruggles current feature with Alice Lake in the stellar role be known as "A Wesley Ruggles Production." Ruggles is the first director on the Metro lot to direct and personally supervise his own production.

There are but few stars in the motion picture industry, whom J. Searle Dawley has not directed, either in the prime of their careers or before they "arrived." There is one, nevertheless, who has reached fame and never been told in gentle instructions just "how" he wishes a scene done. Therefore, immediately upon being signed to direct pictures for William Fox, Mr. Dawley was informed that the first star he would direct would be no less than Pearl White. So, another celebrity is added to the list of the director who, for three years, directed Marguerite Clarke in all of her pictures with the exception of two.

Betty Compson, who stars in "Prisoners of Love," a Goldwyn release

There must be something of grave importance to have brought Director John Adolfi back to New York from Los Angeles, with the north winds blowing a warning that winter is soon at hand.

Chet Withey states that he prefers pictures with a purpose, although his interest is not limited to any particular type of photoplay. Having decided upon "The Man from Toronto," as a vehicle for Constance Talmadge under his direction, he is busy with preliminaries. "Worth while stories that suggest a moral with subtlety and charm, in my opinion, are far more entertaining than tales of impossible adventure, and I believe, also, that the public is beginning to tire of sensational melodramas, unconsciously demanding better and more artistic photoplays." Evidently "The Man from Toronto," fills the bill, to Mr. Withey's satisfaction.

Director Emile Chautard will direct "The Black Panther's Cub" for the Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation, and is already provided with some of the best material in the market, including players such as Norman Trevor, Virginia Hammond, Earl Foxe, Mlle. Dazie, and other Broadway favorites.

"It is worthy of Griffith," says the New York Tribune, commenting upon "Peaceful Valley," another hit scored and credited to the already enviable account of Director Jerome Storm. It is his fourteenth Charles Ray picture, the final one, and seems to have elicited the supreme efforts of moth star and director according to press and public. Everybody, therefore, is happy that at last a fitting 'script for the first Lillian Gish starring vehicle has been found, and that within the present year we may hope to see Mr. Storm's initial efforts with the Griffith protege, surpass even his wonders with Charles Ray.

George Fitzmaurice enjoys developing new "touches" in his pictures. "Scotti," his fine Airedaye, was therefore given a role in the Paramount-Artcraft release, "The Right to Love," and earned an increase in salary for the next picture made by his master, not to the exclusion of his other dogs, one a German police dog, and one a greyhound, making their debuts before the camera in the director's current work. It is also of interest to note that the private home of Mr. Fitzmaurice is being used for a number of scenes in his picture. One place where regard for the property is "up to the director."

Charles Urban, "who has been making and collecting motion pictures in England and America for the last twenty years and is now issuing 'Movie Chats' and 'Kineto Reviews,'" according to the New York Times, believes that "the success he has had with exhibitors is the small opening in the wall that shall widen until there is room for all good pictures to go through." A fitting monument to the director of one-reel subjects, which may be described as "sugar-coated classics," or informative, entertaining short subjects deserving the editorial comment of the New York Daily under the head of "Noticed and Noted."

Edward Jose, who ranks among leading directors of the present day, has been engaged by Associated Exhibitors to make a big, special feature. He is already at work upon the subject at his New Rochelle Studio. Mr. Jose has established for himself a precedent by having made some worthy photoplays and having a great deal to live up to, has engaged the following cast, through his manager, Edward Small: Anna Q. Nilsson, Allan Forrest, Jane Jennings, George Majeronia and Earl Metcalfe.

ABOUT PLAYERS

ANNA Q. NILLSON, Matt Moore, the veteran Frank Currier in the role of the Minister, and Charles Lane as the gambler, have been selected for the principal roles in "Temple Dusk." Director George D. Baker has completed the continuity of the story, which will be published as the first George D. Baker Production, and, working hand in hand with the author, Calvin Johnston, Mr. Baker is said to have evolved a script which stands as a masterpiece of screen technique. Great care has been exercised by Mr. Baker and Mr. Sawyer in selecting a cast commensurate with the importance of the production and after interviewing scores of applicants for the respective roles, decided upon the aforesaid popular players. Mr. Moore was also in

Stanton "Vacations" in America

THE summer of 1920, now finally disappeared in nature's "fade out" was one which marked the motion picture industry with an unprecedented supply of interesting items regarding celebrities connected with screen plays. It would have kept one person busy to have recorded the arrivals and departure of native players and directors, who, "having seen America first" joined the ranks of celebrities vacationing abroad.

Among these was Richard. Not Richard, the Third, but Richard Stanton, ex-leading man and present director of motion pictures. For many months in the past, he has been attached to the William Fox organization. While identification is more or less superfluous, it might refresh the memory to mention Mr. Stanton's successful screen dramatization of "Checkers," the much talked of serial "Bride 13" and the promising current release "The Face at Your Window."

The majority of the American visitors returned—trunks loaded with wearing apparel and much finery, weighing into tons, but Mr. Stanton was content to salute the statue of Liberty bringing back nothing more than lasting impressions. Some of them are most humorous.

"Contrary to the belief, in America, that our 'sleeper' is an evil necessity, an uncomfortable convenience, players and directors commuting from Los Angeles to New York, or vice versa, have found it a boon to the persecuted," said Mr. Stanton.

We admit it is a bit hard on a full sized, regular grown up man like Mr. Stanton to look upon the ordinary Pullman as other than close quarters. Nevertheless "since Richard came over the ocean" he can sing praises which would delight Mr. Pullman himself. For, according to his description of his journey from "'Somewhere in France" to 'Somewhere else in Italy,' the American mode of traveling while one sleeps is likened to the proverbial 'bed of roses,' compared to accommodations on the Continent.

"The most exasperating part of all," explained Mr. Stanton, in talking of a "sleeper jump," "is that one is subject to unwelcome intrusions." The custom, according to Mr. Stanton, of the traveler remaining fully clothed throughout the night, eliminates the possibility of an embarrassing encounter. Nevertheless, an intruder who understands no English, is apt to mistake a request to seek other roosting quarters, for a "welcome to our compartment." "So," continued Mr. Stanton, "if a director of motion pictures has forgotten when 'one night stands' were his order of residence, all he needs do is to travel from twelve to twenty-four hours in many parts of Europe to be convinced that 'even the honky-tonks were never like this.'"

And, as to finding fault with the much abused taxi, blaming the driver if he does not make the time expected, and blaming him moreover, if he smashes into an accident and stops the parade, Mr. Stanton dwells upon the respect developed during his absence for the Manhattan taxi-driver.

"In Venice, for instance," said Mr. Stanton, "slowly, with other water vehicles continually in the way, bumping gently, but deliberately, one's patience would be tortured into shreds were he trying to go, say a distance such as from Fox studio to the Pennsylvania Station. And if one decides, suddenly, that he would speed to some destination—his longing for the taxi in America will develop into almost an affection.

"Despite that I fully enjoyed my trip abroad, I am more than ever convinced that America is the place for the American—especially if he happens to be a director of motion pictures, for depending upon the speed controlled by European customs, by the time a director could finish a picture, it would be out of style."

About his career as a director, Mr. Stanton talks but little. He answers the stereotyped inquiries often put to the celebrated director who forsook his make-up box for the megaphone, but prefers to talk of his future.

About to begin another picture, he had been busily engaged perusing stories, books and plays. Finally, after finding nothing which suited his exact purpose he made a speedy decision. It might wear out a Corona and put all of his last Christmas fountain pens out of business, but he would at least "speed 'em up." He would write his own story.

Thus, having interrupted his pursuit, we left him to his work, wondering if the story would center upon "The Trials of the American Traveler in Europe" or "My Tribute to the Taxi Man"—by Richard Stanton, director.

Mr. Baker's last cast, under Cosmopolitan production.

In a coming Fox release, starring George Walsh, Virginia Valli will be seen, as well as in "The Better Way" with Hope Hampton. Miss Valli has now joined the cast, supporting Mae Murray in Miss Murray's forthcoming Famous Players production under the direction of Robert Leonard.

Norma Talmadge and her company of seventeen, are now in Kingston, Jamaica, where they are taking exteriors for Norma's next picture, "Satan's Paradise," an adaptation by Albert Parker and Paul Anthony Kelly, of Andrew Soutar's novel "On Principle." Harrison Ford and Montague Love will have prominent roles. Many hundreds or native Jamaicans will be employed as supernumaries, and many of the scenes are laid in the jungle and rubber forests.

David Winter, of Los Angeles, and said to be latest "movie find" of B. P. Fineman of the Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation, is starting his histrionic career as leading man to the beautiful Katherine, with whom the "find" will be seen in First National's release —"Conscience." Following the completion of his work in "Conscience" Mr. Winter will play opposite Miss MacDonald in two additional picture plays. Mr. Fineman recently announced that he had signed Mr. Winter to a long contract, the third picture of which probably star the newcomer. Mr. Winter, a good looking stranger, will find a hearty welcome from the feminine fans.

Donald Cameron, who is Billie Burke's leading man in her newest Paramount picture, "The Education of Elizabeth," made his start on the stage in Margaret Anglin's Shakespearian repertoire in no important capacity. In a year and a half, however, he had improved to the point of being selected for leading man in "Lady Windemere's Fan," when Miss Anglin went on tour.

Now comes the news that Helen Lee Worthing, who has won recognition as one of the brightest spots of the Greenwich Village Follies, will make a screen debut. Miss Worthington won the beauty contest conducted early this year by the Motion Picture Classic, in Boston, but when she arrived in New York City, she happened to meet John Murray Anderson, who was then putting on "What's in a Name?" So her professional debut was made therein

Jessen's Snappy Player Notes

Sol Polito who has been at the New York Metro studios photographing Bert Lytell and Company has returned to the Metro West Coast studios and has been assigned to the Dallas Fitzgerald Company, making "What is the Matter with Marriage." Polito has photographed "The Price of Redemption," "Alias Jimmy Valentine" with Lytell and "Should a Woman Tell," starring Alice Lake.

To be lost in the mountains for 24 hours while deer hunting and to sleep in a mountain cave with coyotes howling at the entrance and then to be directed back to civilization by a prospector, is the experience Cullen Landis had this last week. He went to Little Lake country in the California mountains with a party of five friends on a deer hunt. The hunters separated in following a big buck and that was the last the party saw of Landis until late in the afternoon of the second day following. The first night he spent in a cave keeping warm by a fire he built in the doorway and which proved to be an attraction for all the four-footed animals for miles around. After wandering about all the following day he came upon a prospector's tent. He remained there all night and the following morning started on a 23 mile hike which took him back to the hotel where the party had been stopping. Landis is quoted in saying he would not take a million dollars for the experience, but would refuse to give a dime for another similar one.

Rosemary Theby this week received the opinions of many. A large number said "You are very foolish, Thebe," and just as many, if not more said, "I think you were real smart." All the discussion arose over an act of Miss Thebe's in which a hair-dresser played a most important part, in fact, the h.d. was the executioner and Rose's wealth of jet black hair disappeared under the shears. It all came about because she accepted an engagement to play the role of a Greenwich Village girl in a new Fox production.

"System Sam," the efficiency expert of the business world has stepped in and given a pair of continuity writers a new idea which they are using to great advantage in preparing scripts. The co-workers in this instance are James Colwell and Reed Heustis. The new system they have consists of writing continuities by card index. Each scene is written on a separate card, as is also each sub-title and each sequence is on a different color of card. After the scenes are all written the hundreds of cards are assembled in proper order after much juggling about to secure the best dramatic effects. The only work that then remains is that performed by the typists. The plan both men agree is a great time and labor saver and at the same time conducive to a better script, all of which leads to the remark that continuity writers always have been over-burdened with work. This innovation should be gleefully welcomed by all continuity writers. At the present time Heustis and Colwell are writing the continuity for Monroe Salisbury's next Independent production "Practice What You Preach."

Vignola Completes Preliminaries

With only a few minor roles remaining to be cast, and with every other detail completed, the fourth of the Vignola Special Productions for Cosmopolitan-Paramount will likely be under way within a week at the most, according to a statement by Robert G. Vignola, producer-director.

While production reasons prevent the revelation of the title and authorship of the story, Director Vignola is authority for the statement that his fourth special follows out his original plan announced a year ago to produce famous stories by famous authors. He points out in substantiation the fact that his first three Cosmopolitan-Paramount Specials were by noted writers, viz., "The World And His Wife," by Charles Frederic Nirdlinger; "The Passionate Pilgrim," by Samuel Merwin; and "The Manifestation of Henry Ort," by Ethel Watts Mumford.

The forthcoming production is based on a powerful dramatic theme which received widespread attention and comment recently when it was first revealed to the public in fiction form. It is not a problem nor a propaganda subject, but a novel and surprising treatment of a popular phase of everyday life. It will be produced with the same careful attention to scenic beauty that Mr. Vignola observes in all of his productions, and with that end in view, as well as to preserve better the spirit of the story, the exteriors will be taken in Bermuda. The interiors will represent the last word in artistic charm combined with visual appeal, and Mr. Vignola is leaving nothing undone to make this production the best of his entire career.

An all-star cast is now being assembled. The casting process is slow because Mr. Vignola is finding it necessary to interview hundreds of applicants before he can pick the types he needs.

The Rex Beach story of the "Mafia" laid in New Orleans and Sicily, originally published under the title of "The Vendetta," is now being adapted for the screen and is to be known as "The Net."

J. G. Hawks, who for the past year has served as head of the Goldwyn scenario department, has signed a long-term contract to continue in this capacity, which is a high tribute to the ability of Mr. Hawks. During the past year he has personally edited the scripts for "Earthbound," "The Penalty," "The Branding Iron," "Godless Men," and "Bunty Fulls the Strings."

The story emphatically stated that Bayard Veillers was to be "let out" and Mr. Loew answers this by saying Veillers has placed his name to a renewal contract which provides he shall remain with Metro for a long time. At the present time Veillers is in the east securing additional stories for Metro. the British Columbia Government itself has been producing a series of Pacific Coast scenics. These releases have been received with mingled feelings apparently, however, because the Vancouver World has declared: "The B. C. Government continues to wish its educational films on the long suffering public. The film is good in every detail except photography, sub-titles and editing."

The extension of Allen theatre interests to various parts of the world, in addition to Great Britain and the United States, is apparently contemplated by the Allens of Toronto, Ontario, according to an announcement by Mr. Ben Allen, father of Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen and head of the Allen moving picture enterprises in the Dominion. Mr. Ben Allen recently returned from a business tour through Canada to the Pacific Coast and he announced that he would shortly undertake a business trip around the world for the purpose of studying the development of the moving picture business in all civilized countries. He declared that he would be accompanied by his nephew, Mr. I. H. Allen, on the long journey.

The Allens recently reorganized their theatre and film distributing interests by the establishment of the Allen Theatres, Ltd., with headquarters in Toronto. Their chain of more than fifty theatres, film agencies and distributing offices all come under the jurisdiction of the new company, but their activities are controlled by the same policies as before and the Allens also retain charge of operations.

Mr. Rex Beach, one of the "Eminent Authors" associated with Mr. Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and his wife, Mrs. Beach, were prominent visitors in Ottawa, the Canadian Capital, for several days during the week of October 25.

During an interview Mr. Beach declared that the Canadian backwoods afforded endless opportunity for the scenario writer and also many strong locations for the moving picture producer. The party of which Mr. Beach was a member left Ottawa for Kazabazua, Quebec, in the heart of the French-Canadian Hinterland, on October 30 in order to be right on the scene for the opening of the hunting season.

A new policy was adopted for the new Loew Uptown theatre, Toronto, Ontario, to start with the week of November 1. This house, which, with its 3,300 seats, is classed as the second largest theatre in Canada, was opened on September 27 with an all-picture policy. Numerous screen stars and Mr. Loew himself were present at the formal opening. The theatre will continue to offer moving pictures entirely, with high-class orchestration, but the programmes under the new arrangement will be changed twice weekly in place of weekly, while the prices have been reduced. Night prices have dropped from 40c. to 30c., while matinee prices have gone from 25c. to 20c. Practically all other large moving picture theatres in Toronto have raised admission prices slightly since September 1.

An unusual film engagement in Toronto, Ontario, was the presentation of the special production, "Earthbound," at Massey Hall for one week starting Thursday, November 4, at prices ranging from 25c. to $1.00. Announcement was made that the feature was being presented under the direct auspices of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and under the immediate direction of Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, who hold the Goldwyn distribution rights for the Dominion.

The health feature, "Open Your Eyes," was repeated at the Strand theatre, Toronto, during the week of November 1, this being the second week of the engagement. Official announcement was made that the actual attendance during the first week of the run at the Strand was 42,301, this being a new record for the large downtown theatre.

On Tuesday evening, November 2, Manager Clarence Robson arranged for a special news bulletin service by direct wire to the theatre for the announcing of United States election results.

Announcement has been made regarding the re-organization of theatre, exchange and film contract holdings of Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen in Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States. These interests have been placed under the jurisdiction of "Allen Theatres, Limited" but emphasis is placed on the fact that the same management, policy and control as before will be maintained. The new company has been formed to extend the present holdings and to take advantage of the broader fields which has been opened, it is declared. No less than fifty-two theatres in which the Allens hold from 50 to 100 per cent of ownership are affected by the change, and the seating accommodation of these houses totals 51,862. In addition to these there are six theatres under construction in Canada and the United States which will seat 13,200, while sites have been acquired in Detroit, Mich., Halifax, N. S., and Niagara Falls, Ontario, for new houses which will accommodate 5,960 people. The total capacity of all Allen theatres, present and projected, reaches 71,022.

The Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce has received intimation that a number of British films, dealing with British industries and products, and special releases containing messages of good will from prominent leaders and expressions of opinion from leading newspapers of the United States and England, will be distributed in Canada and elsewhere for free exhibition under the auspices of the Anglo-American Unity League.

A great galaxy of moving-picture celebrities attended the formal opening of the new Loew Uptown theatre in Toronto, Ontario, on September 20. These included Bert Lytell, Herbert Rawlinson, Montagu Love, Dolores Cassinelli and Carol Dempster. Mr. Marcus Loew, himself, was also present and made a brief speech.

CLEVELAND

One of the biggest deals in the local movie world was consummated this week, when M. B. Horwitz bought the Shaw-Hayden theatre, and the three-story building of which the theatre is a vital feature. The deal means the transfer of a quarter of a million dollars, and establishes Mr. Horwitz as a leading motion picture theatre owner and exhibitor in Cleveland. The Shaw-Hayden is the fifth large first-run picture house now owned and operated by Horwitz. The others are the Southern, Amphion, Fountain, Globe and Haltnorth.

The Shaw-Hayden occupies a large area on Hayden Ave. The first floor has four stores in addition to the 800-seat theatre. The second floor is being used as a private dance hall. The third floor has been leased for lodge purposes.

The Shaw-Hayden building has been in a state of incompletion for the past six months. Mr. Horwitz has put a crew of men to work and expects to have the whole structure completed before winter. The theatre was the only part of the building that was altogether finished. J. J. Mellert, a large stockholder in the Shaw-Hayden building, and former lesee of the house, has been retained as manager.

The Gordon Square, Detroit Ave. and West 65th street, one of the largest houses on the west side of Cleveland, has just been purchased from Scovill and Essick by William Shapiro. Shapiro has been manager of the local Fox exchange for the past two years. He resigned to get into the exhibiting end of the industry.

Milton Crandall of Pittsburgh, has purchased "Mickey" and "The Spoilers" for Ohio.

R. E. Flagler, who several years ago, was assistant manager at the local World Film exchange under C. A. Thompson, has come back as special feature salesman for Pathe. Monday of last week he took up his new duties.

E. C. Blakeman, erstwhile manager in the Cleveland Pathe office, left town last week to take up the managerial duties of the Buffalo Pathe exchange.

Charlie Rogers blew into town last Wednesday and brought a lot of good cheer with him. His stay was short, however, and he left the next day for the east.

The law suit between the Stillman Theatre interests of Cleveland and the Associated First National Pictures Company was closed this week when Judge David H. Thomas handed down a decision in favor of the Stillman theatre, declaring that the Loew-Stillman interests are entitled to an injunction to prevent the first exhibition in other theatres, of films for which the Stillman company had held a contract for first-run display.

The controversy arose when First National refused to abide by their original contract with the Stillman theatre, whereby first showings of the Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Charles Chaplin and Charles Ray pictures take place at the Stillman theatre. First National contended that the increased salaries paid these stars, subsequent to the signing of the original contract with the Stillman theatre, necessitated a new contract for more money than the first contract called for.

Word was being spread all over town last week that the Schumann-Fein-Kramer motion picture theatre interests in Cleveland have been extended to include the new Five Points theatre, a new house at St. Clair avenue and East 152d street, which will soon be ready to open. Messrs. Schumann-Fein and Kramer have bought an interest in the new house, erected by John Kalafat, who will retain a big share of interest for himself. Kalafat will manage the theatre personally. This makes the fifth big first-run motion picture threatre in the city to come under the Schuman-Fein-Kramer policy, the others being the Dennison Square, Dennison avenue and West 25th street; Yale, St. Clair Avenue and East 81st Street; Savoy, St. Clair and East 103d Street, and the Jewel, St. Clair and East 123d Street.

E. C. Miller, who has gained a wide experience as a member of the sales department of the Goodyear Rubber Company in Akron, has joined the local Metro sales force, and is now covering the eastern Ohio territory.

Harry, Jack and Ezra Skirboll, all of the Ohio exchange for Educational Films, has deserted Cleveland in favor of Cincinnati.

Edmund Manley, of the Western Pictures Exploitation Company of Los Angeles, representing Sol Lesser, was among Cleveland's prominent visitors last week. Among other things, Mr. Manley arranged with Federated Exchange for the distribution of five five-reel features, names of which are to be announced shortly. From Cleveland, Mr. Manley went to Pittsburgh.

The Federated Film Exchange Company has become an active working entity with the appointment of Joseph P. Lefkowitz as manager of the Cleveland exchange. Mr. Lefkowitz is known from one end of Ohio to the other, as being one of the conscientious film men who also sees the exhibitor's side of a proposition. For the past two years he has associated with the local Fox Film Exchange in a sales capacity.

National Film Service is the newest independent exchange to join the Cleveland film colony. L. Levenson is the man behind the National Film Service. He has offices in Cincinnati and Indianapolis in addition to the newly created Cleveland office. H. A. Wagner of Indianapolis has been named manager of the local office, which, at the present time is located at 305 Sloan building. The Ohio exchange will distribute in Ohio and Kentucky a series of five two-reelers featuring Helen Gibson; a series of eight two-reel westerners with Wallace Coburn; "Witch's Lure," a five reel feature with a big cast including Augustus Phillips and Gene Gautier, beside a quantity of re-issued westerns and single reel comedies.

Victor and Fred Schram of Ohio Film Classic, 512 Sloan building, Cleveland, announce the purchase of "Woman Untamed," a six-reel drama featuring Doraldina, for distribution in all of Ohio and Kentucky, from Elmer McGovern.

Owen J. Bannon and Ralph Reisenger, exhibitors from Elyria, Ohio, have simplified the motion picture business by doing away with all competition. Bannon and Reisenger own all of Lorain's motion picture theatres, of which there are four. These are the American, Colonial, Strand and Dreamland. They're all first run houses, located downtown on the main street.

A Simple Brick Front with White Stone Ornaments is a feature of the Lyceum Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio

Lyceum Has Entire 1750 Seats on One Floor

Stadium Type of Construction Employed by Architects

SEVENTEEN hundred and fifty seats all on one floor. Not a post to cut off the view of a single patron. All the difficulties of securing proper ventilation under a balcony entirely eliminated. And all accomplished within an area of a little over thirteen thousand square feet.

This is what was accomplished with the Lyceum theatre, Cleveland's newest and largest west side motion picture theatre which is situated right in the heart of a high-class residence section on Fulton Road.

The Lyceum theatre is a striking looking building from the outside, but the outside hardly prepares one for the surprises within. The exterior is striking principally because of its severity. Everything has been done to make it conform with the neighborhood, and not to make it a glaring offense to the people who see it daily. The marquee is well lighted and the usual theatre lights are evident from the distance. But the posters, and the stills are reserved for the outer lobby. The outer lobby measures approximately 30 ft. x 40 ft. Both walls have sets of frames into which the stills of the pictures booked at the house are artistically displayed. The ticket booth occupies the centre of this lobby.

Large French doors open from the outer lobby to the inner lobby, where the ticket man collects his tickets. This inner lobby looks more like the lobby of a high-class hotel than a theatre. In the centre of it is a big stone basin where gold fish keep in eternal motion while the small fountain which springs from the middle, shines through ever changing irridescent lights. There are eight big palms stationed at regular intervals in the inner lobby, as well as flower stands with ferns and native greenery. One section of this lobby is recessed. A step down into this recess brings you into the waiting room, elaborately furnished in wicker up-

This "Perfect Play House" just completed is equipped throughout with FA Major Remote Control System of Switchboards.

This system has no equal for controlling theatre lighting.

Insist on having same in your new theatre.

THE Major Switchboard involves a principle never before used on manual or remote control stage switchboards.

This principle allows the working out of any desired combination of lighting effects with ease, and the setting up of lighting changes for the acts ahead without interference with the effects in operation at the time.

No lighting change is so complicated that it cannot be made instantly by the operation of a single lever.

The Major Switchboard allows the controlling of any individual switch unit, or combination of units, or even the entire board from any part of the theatre.

All modern architects familiar with Theatre Construction specify Major Switchboards our Theatrical Electrical Engineer, R. E. Major will be glad to assist your architect in his specifications covering the electrical specifications.

At the present time the following theatres are being Major equipped.

holstered furniture, tables, desks with writing accommodations, and telephones.

But the big surprise, and novelty of the theatre construction comes when you pass through one of the tunnels situated on either side of this inner lobby. At the end of the tunnel you see before you 1750 seats all on one floor. But they are not on one level.

The auditorium of the Lyceum theatre is a modern adaptation of an old Greek amphitheatre. It begins on the ground level, and gradually slopes upward until the last rows are practically even with the projection room, a distance of 168 feet from the screen. This is said to be the longest throw in Cleveland but the idea of space is so well distributed that the throw doesn't seem longer than usual.

All of the floors of the theatre are concrete. So are all steps that take you to the various levels. But these steps have only five inch risers with thirty-one inch treads, which makes the ascent barely noticeable.

The theatre is also exceptionally well lighted. This is one of the things that attracts attention immediately. Not only are the wall lights kept going through the performance, but every aisle seat is equipped with an electric light, which is also kept lighted.

The big open space without an interruption to the eye; the soft, even lights and the delicate gold, ivory and rose wall trimmings and decorations offer something altogether new in theatre construction.

The auditorium measures seventy-five feet in width, and one hundred and seventy feet in depth.

All the new theatre appliances have been incorporated in the building of the Lyceum theatre, including Powers' projection machines, a Diamond Bead Screen, and a Hope-Jones organ.

The Lyceum theatre maintains a standing orchestra of twelve pieces, under the direction of S. E. Morris. The overture precedes the opening of every one of the two programs offered each night, just as regularly as the news reel follows the overture. And every feature picture that is shown at the Lyceum theatre has its own specially prepared musical accompaniment, just as it's done at the biggest down-town houses.

A. E. Ptak, manager of the house, says he gets the best results in his neighborhood by changing his bills three times a week. Located as he is, right in a residence district, with no business anywhere around, his patrons come more than once a week, and they want changes. But they want only good pictures, so you'll find all the best stars and the season's biggest successes at the Lyceum theatre. But, although the patrons come often, they don't have to pay big entrance fees. The admission prices remain fifteen and twenty-five cents, no matter what the show is.

Manager Ptak has built his program with the idea that neighborhood houses have to compete with the down-town theatres. For that reason he maintains a standard quality of program, which includes a news reel, a comedy and a feature. Even if the feature is of exceptional value, Ptak does not cut down on his program because he says his patrons have learned what to expect for their money, and if he doesn't give it to them, they'll go where they will get it.

The Lyceum theatre was designed by William Koehl, architect, Park building, Cleveland. Mr. Koehl says that when he was commissioned to draw plans for the theatre he spent weeks in the study of theatre construction. He began way back with the earliest Greek stadium idea and followed the history of theatre building right through the ages. He says he was struck with the way the amphitheatre plan could be adapted to modern needs, where every inch of space must be utilized in order to produce a paying investment. The main idea was to construct a house where no seat would have the advantage over any other seat. The amphitheatre plan does just that. No posts, no stairways, no balconys.

It took ten months to build the Lyceum theatre, at a cost of $225,000.

The G-E Compensarc Permits Arc Adjustment Without Breaking the Circuit

THE G-E Alternating Current Compensarc is a simple, inexpensive device with many of the advantages of more costly equipment.

It saves current.

Because of high power factor and high efficiency, the compensarc will effect current savings that will pay for the outfit in a few months of ordinary operation.

It eliminates flicker.

Variation in the arc current is secured by means of a switch handle on top of the device. The current is adjusted without breaking the circuit, thus eliminating all lamp flicker from this cause.

It will not burn out.

Because of its design, the compensarc cannot be damaged by overheating even if the lamp carbons be left in contact indefinitely.

It is easy to operate.

The compensarc can be installed next to the projection machine within easy reach of the operator. Its design is compact, substantial and simple.

Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable.

Report from Users Indicate That "New Era" Organ Is a Satisfactory Theatre Instrument

Flexibility in Installation Made Possible by Use of Small Electric Cable Between Organ and Keyboard

THE Marr & Colton Company, Warsaw, N. Y., are building concert organs which have proved satisfactory in the many theatres where they have been installed. Their beautiful quality of tone, together with their dependability, is reported to make them an ideal theatre instrument.

This company also builds the famous "New Era" organ which has solved the music problem for the theatre owner who wants the best quality of pipe organ music but who does not want to go to the expense of installing a large and costly instrument.

In the "New Era" the organ is in one case which contains all the pipes and can be placed anywhere in the theatre. The only connection between the key-board and the organ is a small electric cable. In most new theatres these organs are being placed in an organ chamber back of a grill. They are played from an organ manual fastened to any piano in such a way that both the organ and the piano are under easy control and can be played individually, or if desired the organ can be played with piano accompaniment.

These organs are artistic in every sense of the word, refined in tone and of ample volume. They are made with the same care as the most expensive pipe organ. The voicing is done by especially trained artists, which accounts for their beautiful tone. These instruments give to an audience that restful, musical background so much desired and at the same time bring out the emotions as they are developed in the story on the screen. They sound like and answer the purpose of a large and expensive organ. On special occasions, when desired, one can secure from these instruments a majestic volume of orchestral tone that is unsurpassed—while under normal conditions the instrument produces unusually soft, sweet and delicate music.

The stops are carefully selected. The Vox Humana stop is remarkable for its human quality of tone. Violin, flutes, bass and violin cello, clarinets, etc., are faithfully reproduced. The expression pedal secures all the various degrees of expression at the will of the player. There are no traps in these organs except when especially ordered. The standard instruments produce nothing but organ music of the finest quality.

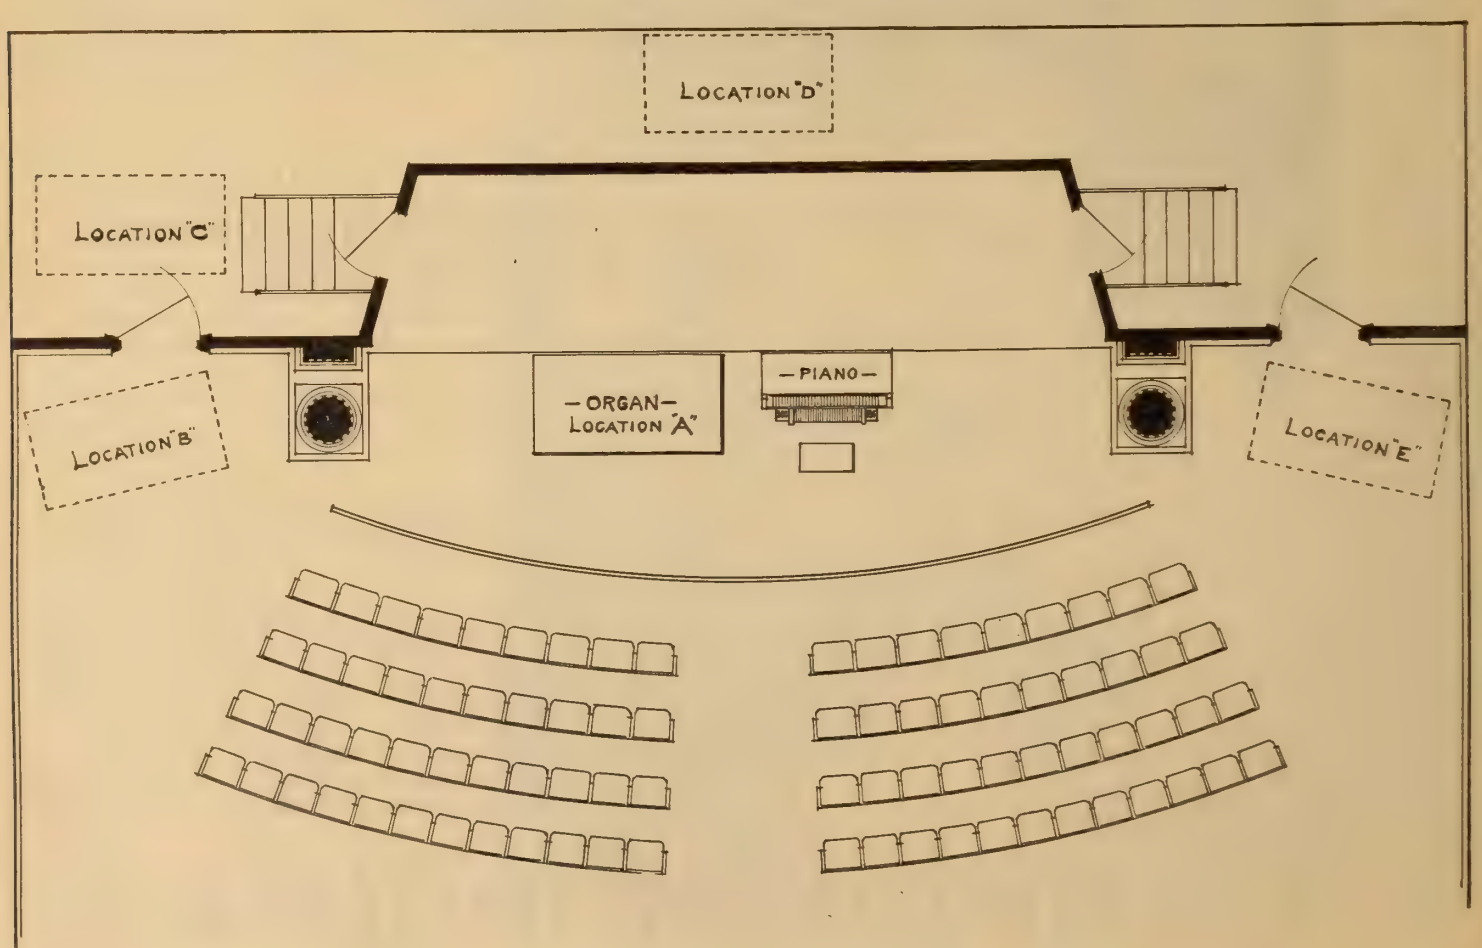
These organs are very simple mechanically and are easily played. Any piano player who is a musician can get beautiful results in just a short time. The "New Era" organ, as noted above, does not contain any traps or jingle. It is all music of a beautiful quality of which one never tires.

The above drawing shows the flexibility of installation. In view of the fact that the only connection between the organ and the key-board is a small cable, which can be made any length, it will be seen that the organ can be placed anywhere in the theatre, near to or apart from the piano and key-board.

The "New Era" has been found to be an ideal instrument for use in theatres all ready constructed where no provision had been made for the installation of an organ. This organ can be installed without making any structural alteration in the theatre and without interfering for a moment with its regular program.

Every organ is guaranteed and they are remarkable for their durability and the small amount of care required to keep them in playing order. There is nothing complicated about their construction, and with ordinary care they will last as long as the theatre in which they stand.

These organs are built in several styles which range in size for from the larger to the smaller motion picture theatres. They are reasonable in price and quickly installed in any theatre or auditorium. They are being used by many well known exhibitors who speak in the highest terms of their tonal quality and durability.



Plan showing several locations for organ. In many theatres they are being placed in an organ chamber at one side

FOCUS!

A good picture, shot first on one side of the house and then on the other, wouldn't make any great hit with your audience. You've got to focus it in one spot, and keep it there.

Why doesn't the same rule apply to your buying? Doesn't it stand to reason that you will get better action if you focus on one spot?

Buying from the Exhibitors Supply Co. assures you prompt, intelligent service, every time. And the oftener you go to that one source to supply your needs, the better will be your service, for in that way we get to know you, your house, what you want, and why.

Theatre Projection—Theory and Practice

LONG and vehement have been the wails of projection experts on the subject of "off-set projection." But in spite of this the architects who plan the theatres continue on their merry way, finishing the theatre first and then placing the projection room where it would do the least harm to the aesthetic properties of the structure. Of course, this is not the way to produce a motion picture theatre of the finest type. While off-set projection may be compensated for by several artifices so that the final screen results are not glaringly offensive to the patron, the picture cannot be made 100 per cent perfect.

But the architect is not to blame in every case. Sometimes—in fact, quite frequently—it is the owner. It often happens that the adoption of "straight-away" or horizontal projection means the loss of 25 to 60 seats in the balcony. When this potential loss is explained to the owner, all too frequently the projection room is relegated to the eaves. In the game of Good Projection versus Potential Income, P. I. wins in the majority of contests.

There is just as much need of "owner education" as "architect education." The machine manufacturers recognize this need and are doing all in their power to rectify the fault. They are succeeding gradually as is evidenced by the increasing number of theatre illustrations which show horizontal—or nearly so—projection. The good work should continue.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

A Study of Different Projection Screen Surfaces

Reprinted from the British Journal of Photography

ALTHOUGH screens for receiving projected images may be regarded as optical devices, and, reasonably, devices of a delicate nature, it is perhaps singular that there has been until recently little or no attention paid to investigating the conditions which determine their efficiency.

By far the largest use of projection screens occurs in the cinematograph theatres, which are so widely distributed. The degree of success which these places of amusement attain is largely determined by the provision which is made for the comfort of their patrons—comfort in the broadest sense of the term—and to the fulfilment of this condition the efforts of the best managements are continually devoted. Now, "comfort," in one important respect, is largely conditioned by the degree to which all causes of visual fatigue or irritation are eliminated. Comfort is not alone, as many might think, the services of polite attendants, quietude, soft chairs, and pleasing decorations. To secure pleasant viewing of any form of projected picture, the chief thing is to utilize for the screen the most thoroughly diffusive surface, whilst economy of the energy used in the lamp house of the projector requires the employment of a surface having high reflective power. The employment of arcs of high as against medium amperage means considerable personal discomfort and inconvenience to operators from the heat (especially in view of the confinement which tends to follow the fulfilment of the rigid conditions imposed by the local authority as to safety) and increased risk of damage to the film under projection. Any inefficiency in the reflective capacity of the screen means a corresponding increase in the energy required in the arc to secure the necessary brightness of image, and an extension in this direction involves extra cost in the working expenses of a cinematograph theatre. In consequence, attention has been given to the subject, but what improvements have been made have been the results of "practical" tests rather than quantitative methodical investigation. Perhaps the worst examples of projecting screens (indeed projection apparatus and projection generally) are to be found in the lecture rooms of colleges devoted to the teaching of science, where neglect of the whole subject seems to suggest that optical problems belong to that category of things existing purely in the realms of abstract ideas.

It is proposed in this paper to deal with the subject mainly in its relation to cinematography, but the observations will apply generally to ordinary static projection.

The advantage of exact information on the problem of what is the best form of projection screen, and, indeed, on projection screens generally, has recently been supplied by a gentleman who is a member of this Society, Dr. P. G. Nutting, who in an able paper records the result of some investigations into the subject ("Projection and Focussing Screens," Trans. Ill. Eng. Soc. 41 (1916), 92), and some little time ago, when Service requirements in the Royal Air Force made it necessary to pay attention to the subject of screens for cinematography, Dr. Nutting's paper proved of considerable value, and frequent reference will here be made to the information which he has provided. Experiments had, however, been made of a comparative character before I had read the communication of which mention has been made.

It will not infrequently be found that the best optical conditions for a given projection are not always fulfilled, sometimes, indeed, cannot be fulfilled, and there is, moreover, a tendency on the part of operators to employ arcs far more powerful than is actually necessary. In many instances the amperage with a given size of carbons is far below what it might be. Although it has been shown that carbons will burn satisfactorily with a current density of 0.2 to 0.3 amperes per square mm. of the positive carbon, it will be found that less than one-half of these amounts are taken, and the reduced amperage means a less efficient crater, and also, what is an item of importance where there is a large consumption, the proportionately higher loss on rejected ends of the rods. Frequently the argument in favor of the low amperage is the rather naively practical one, viz., that it saves the labor of frequently recarboning. Further, the carbons are often badly adjusted. The sum of these things (each apparently small) makes for an inefficiency which is a real loss.

The essential condition which must be fulfilled by any screen which is to receive a projected image is that the whole area must be a plane surface; strictly speaking, this means that the screen will be smooth. Broadly speaking, however, the screen may be in the ordinary way flat and yet present an appreciable "grain," which means that it is not smooth. This quality tends to detract from its ability to render fine gradations sharply, but, provided that the grain is not too pronounced, it does not sensibly affect the rendering of the finer details of the picture. Some of the proprietary screens which have been offered possess this "grain," which has even been claimed as an advantage; indeed, Dr. Nutting himself has postulated as an ideal projection screen a mirror the front face of which is composed of minute hexagonal facets, each of which is a concave mirror of a particular angle. Screens in practice range from a surface of smooth white linen or cotton with a highly diffusive surface to the more or less regularly reflective surface formed by the spread of a metallic aluminium paint upon a smooth white ground.

(To be concluded)

Who Is the Record Holder?

Robert E. Bryant, Palmetto theatre, Rock Hill, So. Carolina, is after the scalps of his brother projectionists: "Would you mind telling me who and in what time holds the world's record in changing reels on one machine? Also, just how is the time counted and how could I make my time official?"

Reply: Don't believe we ever heard of such a record holder. Send in your own record and let the rest of the men compare it with what they can do. To our mind nothing would be gained by making the time official since a lot would depend on the conditions under which the try-out was conducted. So, when you send in your time be sure to tell us just how you did it, how you counted the time and all similar information.

Gentlemen:

We feel that it is only fair that you should know why we installed two POWERS 6B machines in our new Marlow Theatre, which is one of the most beautiful in the state.

Knowing that projection is the most important feature of a theatre we spared no time or money in obtaining the concensus of opinion of the leading exhibitors in this territory and that opinion was POWERS.

United States Government Realizes Need of Training for Navy Projectionists

Establishes Schools at Brooklyn and Hampton Roads Under Joseph H. Taylor

IN the past it has been the custom for the United States Navy to rent all films for various purposes through the numerous film exchanges, a distributing office or clearing house being maintained at the Vanderbilt Building, New York City for this purpose. So great was the demand for good films, however, and so important a part is the motion picture playing in the affairs of the Navy, that a regular Film Exchange was designed and constructed in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, which building was erected under the supervision of Lt. Joseph O'Reilly, U. S. N. With the completion of this building on April 15, 1920, the Navy started the working-out of its new program which called for the elimination of film renting and provided for the direct purchase of all of the film used throughout the entire Navy. At the present time, approximately 15,000 reels are being handled through this exchange with new reels being added each day.

A force of twenty men is required to inspect and care for these reels which are handled and shipped in regulation containers. The film exchange itself can well be placed on the par with the largest commercial exchanges in the industry, being fully equipped with fireproof vaults, inspection and shipping rooms as well as two fuuly equipped projection or reviewing rooms where all films are censored.

More than 250 ships along the Atlantic Coast are supplied with film programs from this exchange, while those ships in European waters and along the West Coast are supplied with double quotas of reels which are distributed and exchanged between the various ships.

Lt. O'Reilly was quick to observe the tremendous amount of damage that could result to his extensive and well-kept film program at the hands of inexperienced and careless projectionists aboard the numerous battleships. To overcome this, a school for developing high class men was suggested and established. Mr. Joseph H. Taylor, the well known head of the Taylor School of New York City, was selected to take charge of this training school which is perhaps the most completely equipped school of its kind in the world.

Every man who is selected to operate a projection machine in the Navy is required to take a complete course of instruction in this chool whether he has had previous experience or not. The men selected for projectionists, are for the most part electricians. The course of teaching covers a period of four weeks and includes everything necessary from putting on a high class performance to the maintenance and repairing of the various electrical and mechanical equipments used in projection.

The men attending these classes put in practically seven hours a day operating the various types of machines. The first week of the course calls for the inspecting, patching, and threading of film, as well as the care and handling of film against fire. The second week carries the student into the disassembling, repairing and assembling of machine mechanisms and lamphouses. The student at this time is also required to familiarize himself with a nomenclature of machine parts as well as that of the optical system. The care and up-keep of various machines specified by the Navy is also taken up here, as well as the wiring and the care of and purposes of the rheostats.

The third week students take up the installation of the projector as well as the adjustment of film mechanisms, optics and lamps, while the setting of carbons, adjustment of arc and incandescent lamps, as well as general projection work complete this part of the course.

The fourth and last week of the course calls for the projection of pictures on the screen with the various types of projectors as used in the Navy, while precautions against fire while projecting the picture determines fairly conclusively just how well the student has assimilated the lessons of the three preceding weeks.

The last day of the fourth week is taken up in final examinations for qualifications. Written, oral, and practical examinations are held each week to determine the man's qualifications, and if at the end of the first week, a man shows that he is not fitted for the work of a projectionist, he is sent back to his ship or station and another man is sent in his place.

The qualifications of each man at the end of the term are placed upon his service record, and in each case the projectionist, after qualifying for the position, received extra compensation amounting to $25.00 a month. A report card is sent out with each show to be filled in by the projectionist, on which card is contained a detailed description covering the condition of each reel, as well as the condition of the projector. In this school, the newly compiled Simplex mechanism chart, as well as machine, optical and lamphouse parts are used as shown in the accompanying photographs.

At Norfolk, Va., is located the official Naval Electrical School, which provides for a nine months electrical course and which at all times has an attendance of four hundred students. At this school, a student is given a most comprehensive course in elementary and practical electricity, covering every form of appliance with which electricity is used throughout the Navy. Lt. O'Reilly of the Brooklyn School, on a recent visit to Hampton Roads, Va., realized that by including his motion picture course with the nine months curriculum at the electrical school, would furnish the naval electrical student with every necessary knowledge in the electrical line.

This suggestion was referred by him and indorsed by the Bureau of Navigation with the result that Mr. Taylor, (the chief instructor) is now at Hampton Roads, preparing to establish his motion picture course in the electrical school there.

F. B., No. 479, asks: Would you kindly give me information on the current angle to set carbons for direct current with ¾" top cord and Silver Tip lowers?

Reply: Set your carbons at an angle of approximately 25° from the vertical with the lower about 1/16" in front of the upper.

The sub-contract for all ornamental brass work on Loew's new theatre in Indianapolis has just been let to the Newman Manufacturing Co., of Cincinnati. Mr. W. J. Newman, of their Chicago branch, arranged the details of the transaction with the general contractors, the Bedford Stone & Construction Co.

The contract covers brass ticket grilles and nickel-plated coat rails, in addition to brass railings for ticket taker, lobby, boxes, balcony and logges. It also takes care of the brass door-bars and kick-plates, and the velour covered ropes.

Gives Fine Results on 285 Foot Throw

TWO illustrations on this page give a vague idea of the conditions under which the two Powers machines were forced to operate during the recent showing of a film in Madison Square Garden, New York City. Having been constructed for anything but a motion picture auditorium the monster Garden was a difficult proposition for the projection experts.

Interior of projection room at Madison Square Garden

The Garden projection room shows in the distance. This view was taken about half the way from projector to screen

The huge screen, 27 x 36 feet in size was placed at one end of the structure and at the other end 285 feet away was the only place where a projection room could be installed. But under the instructions of Mr. Will Smith of the Nicholas Power Co., the difficulties were overcome and the picture as finally shown was most satisfactory to the audiences.

To throw a well lighting picture of the size demanded a distance of nearly 300 feet it was necessary to use 107 amperes at the arc. The equipment of the projection room consisted of two standard Powers 6B machines taken from stock and equipped with the new Type E lamphouse, described some time ago in the Projection Section of the NEWS. Projectionists Abrams and Jackson were in charge of the projection. The screen used was the Raven Half-tone screen made up specially for the Garden exhibition.

The Edison 220 volt three wire circuits were led from the basement to the projection machines and the rheostats were placed on top of the portable projection room. Ample ventilation was secured by the 20" fan shown in one of the illustrations.

Gets Out Machines in Quick Time

The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of the Motiograph De Luxe, has just made a remarkable record for speed. Max Pearl, one of the hustling salesmen for the Amusement Supply Company, Chicago, distributors of Motiographs in that territory, obtained an order for two machines at 11.30 P. M. Friday night, promising the purchasers that he would have the machines in operation by 7 o'clock next morning. The factory reports that the machines were en route at 2 o'clock Saturday morning, October 23rd and at 7 A. M., were in operation.

The Motiograph factory is always prepared for such emergency orders, as they have a night as well as a day service, and Manager O. F. Spahr is proud of this most recent proof that his concern lives up to its preaching about service that serves.

Heating

The losses of an electrical machine are transformed into heat which causes the temperature of the machine to rise above that of the surrounding air. The heat created must be dissipated as much as possible in order to avoid overheating. This is accomplished by so designing the machine that a current of air will circulate thru the windings and convey the heat from the machine. A large amount of heat is also disposed of by means of radiation, the operating temperature of the apparatus becoming constant when the rate at which heat is generated is equal to that dissipated.

Since insulating materials lose much of their mechanical and dielectric strength when heated excessively the operating temperature should not rise over 75 to 80 degrees Fahr., above that of the surrounding air.

The most usual cause for excess heating is an overloaded machine and the line current should be noted immediately whenever an indication of heating is noticed.

Dowser Connections for Three Machines

By P. J. Young

Mr. Young has worked out a scheme of connections for dowsers when there are three machines to be considered. By this method it is possible to close the dowser on one machine without interferring with any of the others.

The diagrammatic sketch in the upper left hand corner of this page shows how one of the systems is laid out. This drawing will answer the queries from several of our readers who have requested a diagram for three machines.

Camera Laboratory | Picture Making | Studio Technique

A Complete, Fully Equipped Laboratory to Serve Needs of Manufacturing Plant

General Electric Company's Motion Picture Plant Accommodates Firm's Productions

AS illustrating what a large manufacturing concern can do in acquainting the general public as to the varied uses of its product, the General Electric Company of Schenectady, with its corps of motion picture cameramen, directors and assistants, occupying a building of its own these days, is successfully carrying on a campaign which should appeal to many concerns and which is capable of individual expansion and which also should be cultivated by the motion picture industry. Without a single word of advertising, the company is now showing motion pictures, cleverly devised, and which portray a thousand and one ways in which electricity is, and can be used to advantage. Each reel, or each subject, deals with one particular phase.

C. F. Batcholts, who is in charge of the motion picture work of the General Electric Company, is now on his way back from the Pacific Coast where he has been taking some pictures that will be used in connection with a film that is to be released, probably under the title of "Lumber." This film will show, through a story all its own, how important a part electricity is taking these days in the lumber industry, showing how electricity can be used in felling the trees, in transporting the huge logs to the mills where electrically driven machinery further prepares the lumber for the trade. Mr. Bateholts is accompanied by a cameraman, one of two which the company employs.

There are some interesting features in connection with the building up of this particular branch of the General Electric Company. The cameramen and others employed in the department have sort of grown up with this part of the company's business. There is no hesitation on the part of anyone in admitting that some of the first pictures taken were pretty poor propositions, but the faults were remedied and today the General Electric Company is turning out a film product of its own that ranks the equal with anything in the world.

The film end of the business has grown so that it now occupies a building of its own and is regarded as one of the most important fixtures of the business. The top floor of the building is given over to a sort of studio, the lighting effects being excellent. Arc lamps are employed as well as natural light. The studio is necessary on account of the fact that practically all of the films carry a story and in some of these it is necessary to use scenes that are devised for the part.

Mr. Bateholts serves as director-general, scenario writer and in short is the whole thing in connection with the film production. That his work has been perfectly satisfactory is attested by the character of films which the General Electric Company have made and which are being supplied free of charge to clubs, organizations and individuals.

One of the cleverest films was made some little time ago and is entitled "The Benefactor." It is a three-reel affair and portrays the life of Mr. Edison. One of the men in the department was found to resemble Mr. Edison so closely that he was used in a number of the pictures. There was some little trouble, however, in finding a boy who resembles Mr. Edison when the latter was a youth.

The difficulty, however, was overcome when one of the office boys happened to come in and caught the eye of one of the men who was interested in the film.

"There's our Edison for you," said the man, pointing to the office boy. The latter, somewhat mystified, submitted to the careful scrutiny of the group and a few days later the boy became the "Edison, aged five," of Milan, Ohio. The film shows many interesting episodes in the life of Edison. At the age of ten he is shown as giving a boyhood chum a sedlitz powder, thinking that by generating gas in the lad's stomach, he could fly. At 14, he is shown in his cellar laboratory. Later on, as a newsboy, then as a telegraph operator, and later on, the real Edison enters the picture.

All told the company has put out some thirty-odd films, dealing with subjects running all the way from the electrification of the Butte-Anaconda and Pacific Railroad, the Panama Canal, the harvesting of sugar cane, down to the revelations of the X-ray, and now comes the film which will deal with the lumber industry.

No expense has been spared by the company in giving the film end all cooperation and free rein. Directly off the studio, a room has been fitted up where the negative is developed, the printing being in a room adjoining, a Bell and Howell printer being used. The equipment is of the very latest and when it comes to electrical devices, the company is right at home in this field of its own, with the result that there are many clever little innovations that would interest the motion picture world.

The laboratory is in charge of William Smith, while Charles Kreitzer is in charge of the printing, the diagrammatic work being under the direction of Fred Jetter, J. A. Westlin, assistant to Mr. Bateholts being in charge of the department, while the latter has been on the Pacific Coast.

The company has its own film distributing department as well as a projection room, the screen being so placed that the projection is from the rear, the room in front of the screen being used for lecture purposes.

The reels are constantly in circulation, being used at gatherings of electrical engineers or persons associated with the industry, by medical societies or by organizations which are interested in the subject which has been handled by the company's motion picture department and in which electricity is of course the predominating feature.

There is absolutely no attempt whatever toward exploiting the company's product. The whole idea is to furnish a type of film in which the pictures tell a story of interest to an audience whose business or professional ends are allied with the subject treated, and yet so treated that it serves to hold the attention of the average person.

The pictures are entirely distinct from those which are being turned out by the Ford company and in which advertising is one of the predominating features, the General Electric films having for their specific purpose the acquainting of the people as to the part which electricity in a general sense is playing in the world's development.

News cameramen don't always travel in airplanes and fast cars. Here is H. D. Blauvelt of the Pathe staff touring Ecuador by slow freight

A Cameraman in the Wilds of Africa

AFTER having spent almost a year with the Prizma natural color photographic expedition to the interior bad lands of South Africa, W. T. Crespinel comes back to the United States with a store of stories that give an excellent idea of what a cameraman who seeks subjects in that part of the world must go through. To give the story its fine color it must be told in the words of the man who lived through it.

"Our party arrived in Africa in July, 1919, completely equipped for making photographic records of life in general in South Africa by the new Prizma Natural Color Process. In departing, it was not just a matter of packing one's outfit and catching the boat; we had first of all to treat the negative film in such a way as to almost guarantee its protection against the various climatic conditions which we had to encounter enroute. Previous experience had showed us the necessity for this precaution. The camera, too, had to be reinforced to withstand the heat of a tropical sun. Extra photographic filters had to be packed in air tight containers. I might say though that all of these details proved their worth as may be substantiated by the results brought home.

Upon our arrival at Cape Town, we were able to travel to Johannesburg by train. Crossing the Great Karroo the background of Kipling's "Boots" and said to cover a distance of over 100,000 square miles, was the most trying part of the journey. Confined to the limits of a train travelling under a scorching sun is far from pleasant.

Three days later we reached our destination having to travel via Bloomfontien instead of by way of Kimberly, owing to a washaway of the rails caused by a severe storm. From Johannesburg we again made the second part of our journey by train, to Ermelo, a small but progressive Dutch Dorp. At this place we secured an ox wagon outfit having a span of fourteen oxen, and with our supplies and equipment carefully packed, started on our journey for the interior of Swaziland.

Travelling by this method is extremely slow, our outfit making only four to five miles per hour. Five days later we reached Oshock the border of Transvale and Swaziland.

We had pitched tents and finished our supper when we for the first time saw an African Moon. It rose in the east over the Linbombo Range, with a brilliancy one cannot describe. We watched it in amazement for fully fifteen minutes as it gradually illuminated the surrounding country.

At the border we were forced to leave our oxen and substitute donkeys, because of the fact that there was an animal disease prevalent in Swaziland and cattle entering cannot leave. So the following morning at four-thirty we were once again "on Trek" with a team of eighteen donkeys. We had always to make an early start "outspanning" during the heat of the day and treking again well into the night. In this way we finally reached the outskirts of the Royal Kraals of Limbombo and Zombodi after a twelve day trek.

Game was scarce, although until quite recently the country was overrun with wild animals. Nevertheless we encountered wildebeast, springbok, monkeys in great numbers, secretary bird, heron, snakes, etc.

It was evening when we reached the river dividing the Royal Ground from the Common Ground. Here we camped for the night awaiting the morning when Prince Lomwazi, the Prime Minister, would come out to greet us But the morning brought us another visitor. A certain chief arrived with two servants. He carried a handful of half eaten Mealie Corn stalks, which he explained to our interpreter were the results of a visit to his corn field by

W. T. Crespinel in civilized clothes and also in the garb of a native Swazi

our mules. He told us that he expected that we would pay him very liberally for the damage done to his Mealies so that he could report our kindness to the Paramount Chief. We finally gave him some tobacco and $1.50. We afterwards found that it was a regular trick of his which he always worked on strangers arriving at the Kraal. Lomwazi eventually arrived with his Impi (Regiment) and assured us of a friendly reception.

The following day we paid our respects to the Queen of Swaziland. This venerable old lady is past seventy and almost blind. She lies on her stomach the day long with her retainers seated all around her. After leaving her we met Crown Prince Sobuzla and his mother. He speaks perfect English and with the Queen Mother did much to make our sojourn there comfortable. It was interesting to hear him ask of the doings in this country, mentioning intimately incidents and personages of America.

We pitched tents some 300 feet from the Main Kraal, under two lucky bean trees. The only shelter we could find with the exception of the Royal burial grounds. Weather conditions were very trying.

Then with full moon came a change. Fourteen days continuous rains. Cold, bleak weather, miles away from civilization with no form of recreation whatsoever. Nothing to do but eat and sleep. The temperature was, during this spell about 45 degrees. I might mention that the rains are a good sign for the Queen who is supposed to have control of the elements, and as they were suffering from drought they came very timely. When our stay finally came to an end we had made many friends who were no more sad at parting than we ourselves were.

An idea of the assistance given theatre builders and managers by the Equipment Service Department is indicated by two requests just received:

From New Jersey: "Will you give me the names of firms selling stage scenery and settings?"

From Colorado: "I would like suggestions as to a good practical heating device for a theatre 30x120 with balconies along sides."

If you are a manufacturer of equipment used in the building or equipping of motion picture theatres you should be represented in the Theatre Construction Section of the News—the only one of its kind amongst the trade papers.

Trade Notes

President McAuley of the McAuley Manufacturing Company, Chicago, makers of the Peerless Arc Control, states that a contract to place fifty-two Peerless Arc Controls in Ascher theatres has just been made by the Exhibitors Supply Company, distributors of the controls. Ascher Brothers has given the controls a thorough try-out in a number of their theatres, where they have been installed for two years or more, and were so well pleased with the results that they decided to equip their entire circuit with the Peerless.

Burr A. Benson, general manager of the Amusement Supply Company, the oldest supply house in the moving picture business, has just signed a contract to install twenty complete De Luxe Motiograph Projectors on the circuit of Fitzpatrick & McElroy. The contract is one of the largest, so far as the number of projectors sold to one exhibitor is concerned, ever made in the retail trade in Chicago.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy, the purchasers of the twenty De Luxe machines, are well and favorably known to the trade in general, as they are the exclusive distributors for the entire United tSates of the Ford Weekly, which is handled for them through the Goldwyn exchanges.

In discussing his latest triumph, Mr. Benson says, "While this is a nice piece of business for my firm, it is only a forerunner of many such installations which will be made in the near future by other enterprising and far-seeing exhibitors.

"The Motiograph De Luxe has been making great headway right along, and our sales have been rapidly increasing. Business is good, and I am making plans for expansion in the future."

In order to handle an increasing volume of business the G. A. Metcalf theatre equipment and supply store, 117-118 Golden Gate Avenue, aSn Francisco, will be continued as a branch office, and new and very much larger quarters will be opened at 307-309-311 Turk Street, corner of Leavenworth, one block from the Film Exchange Center, as the main store and offices. One of the features made possible by this expansion will be a Daylight Repair Shop, equipped on the most up-to-date plan, and in charge of experts.

Musical Movements at Work

visiting star singer to make one appearance at the motion picture house. Of course the very biggest stars wouldn't do that right away, but the lesser lights would surely be induced to see the wisdom and the price. Even though it were not possible for the motion picture manager to announce the appearance of the artist in this manner, because it would seem to hurt the regular business of his concert—the prestige of having him in the house, announced as news afterwards, would be big! And let a manager do this three, five, ten times during a year—and the whole music world (locally) will be watching his every move.

I think of the modern motion picture manager with his hands out to grasp every musical idea—seeking to reflect every musical thought in his house, his programs, his own entertainment, his publicity. I see him directing his advertising, his new stories in such a way as to bring about the effects suggested, making deals with the musical folks locally and distant to aid him, to build—

To build what?

This idea: The Motion Picture Theatre is the house to hear the best music, the music of the moment and the artistic world. It is the finest art theatre in the community.

To aid the reader of these pages to a spurt of his imagination in the direction suggested above, I have given a rapid survey of the country's musical activities, and taking certain cities and towns at random I am hoping that you will see what's happening in your home if I haven't mentioned it.

Music Editor:

As you know I have just returned home and I really have not had the opportunity to read your article appearing in the edition of Motion Picture News under date of Sept. 18th. Personally I am opposed to music tax, not so much as to the cost it involves, but rather the principle. Why hasn't some prominent shoe manufacturer organized and told the merchants who buy their product that they must pay a specific tax. We buy this music outright from the publisher paying his stipulated price and in presenting this music in our theatres we are certainly helping the publisher directly and the author indirectly in popularizing same. Please do not get the impression that we are disposed to be arbitrary about the question. The above is merely an expression of our views on the subject. You can appreciate the fact that it is well nigh impossible for us to maintain a complete library necessary for the proper synchronizing of a picture, without having to use some of this copyrighted music. For that reason we have already paid the tax.—A. B. Cook, Majestic Theatre Co., Jackson, Miss.

Music Editor:

With great interest I have been watching your pages in Motion Picture News, the past two weeks, regarding conference to be held in New York City in the near future. I have been working along these lines, or, I might say, planning along these lines, the past six or eight months, and I congratulate you upon bringing the matter to the focus. Handling a great many musical artists, both instrumental and voice, I have been eagerly looking for this outlet and, rest assured I shall be with you at the conference, whatever date is set. I hope to meet not only the producers, but other musical managers as well.—James Saville, Masonic Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Music Editor:

I have long had it on my mind to write you and congratulate you upon your becoming associated with the Motion Picture News or rather congratulate the Moption Picture News upon acquiring your services as music editor. I have just received your letter of October 7th enclosing proof sheets of the articles to appear in the October 8th issue and this provides the final push to make me sit down and write.

I have always been tremendously interested in music as a feature and vital factor in the presentation of moving pictures. It was I, when connected with G. Schirmer, Inc., New York, who negotiated with the Paramount Company to furnish them with two complete scores a week for their five-reel features which we did for a period of nearly two years at a very considerable loss but a loss which is not to be regretted as it no doubt helped to further the cause which now seems to have come to a point where serious musicians and pregressive producers alike are interested and concerned.

As a means of cultivating the masses by bringing to them the best music and making them familiar with the things that are beautiful in life, motion pictures stand alone and that really good music is appreciated and enjoyed by the crowd when presented in the proper way, has been conclusively demonstrated at all the large picture theatres in New York, particularly the Rialto, under the fine management of Dr. Riesenfeld. Unfortunately, in our country the man in the street is still apt to think of the Fine Arts and particularly music, as something effeminate, something that interests only the so-called "intellectual high-brow" and the idea of attending a Symphony concert in a concert hall is one he cannot get familiar with, but when this same music is brought to him through the vehicle of the motion pictures and he can go to a show, it is different and he hugely enjoys the performance of the music. Many times was I surprised and delighted to witness this.

The feature of symphonic music with the picture program and the appearance of artists is one thing and the adequate and artistic interpretation of the pictures is another and the latter, in my opinion, is in a measure just as important as the former. The musical accompaniment, some producers say is 50% of the performance, I say it is 60% because atmosphere, to which music is the greatest contributor, is the only thing which distinguishes the showing of a picture in a house like the Rialto and Nicolodeom in a small hamlet. The number of feet are the same, the negatives identical, the methods of throwing them on the screen do not differ and it is only in the presentation, the creating of an atmosphere; luxurious surroundings, harmonious light effects, comfortable seats and above all things artistic music that the manager attracts an audience, which would not care to view the film in a cheap house.

Practical experience is developing a large number of able moving picture players among whom I include conductors but altogether too little attention has been devoted by the managers to that feature of the game. Interpreting moving pictures is an art in itself not beneath the attention of serious musicians; whereas several years ago the mere mention of moving picture playing to so-called "high-brows" invariably caused the raising of "eyebrows." I am glad to say that artists and players of no mean quality are taking the idea seriously with the resulting pecuniary gain to themselves and the unquestioned increased enjoyment to the audience.

The development of the art of accompanying of moving pictures is a subject which, in my opinion, might well be taken up at the conference that is proposed to be held. This development in my opinion, should start with the instruction which the pupil receives from his teacher when he is learning the instrument; I am referring of course particularly to the organ and piano. To become a virtuoso is the goal of many but is reached by only few. However, to earn a substantial livelihood as a professional musician is something which is within the reach of all serious students of music and it is in this direction that the new art of accompanying of moving pictures has opened up a wide field.

Why shouldn't an organist or a piano teacher give his pupils practical instruction in picture playing? A competent instructor would be a valuable asset for every music school and conservatory. This is a subject which is not among those mentioned in the articles to be taken up at the conference and which might well be added.

I won't enlarge any further on the subject, perhaps an opportunity will present itself when I can give you many ideas in person. I do not want to tire you with a long letter but I do not wish to come to a close without commending you and the MOTION PICTURE NEWS most heartily upon putting this musical conference under way. It is a long and firm step in the right direction as the future will undoubtedly show.—E. R. Voigt, General Manager, Boston Music Co., Boston, Mass.

Music Editor:

We have read quite a bit about your music department, and think that it is a very good thing for every one in the least way concerned in the motion picture theatre enterprise, and we wish you every success with your new department and want to assure you that any assistance we can give you, we shall be only too pleased to do so, and we are always at your service.—Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.—By E. Peterny.

Music Editor:

It was with unusual interest we read Mr. Johnson's editorial in the October 9th issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and the same interest has followed us through your articles regarding the first annual conference on music and motion pictures.

This movement strikes a keynote in the development of really high class motion picture entertainment. There is absolutely no question but that music plays a very big part in the proper presentation of motion pictures, and considering the enormous amount of money being spent on individual productions these days it is not only a need but an absolute necessity that good music help bring such production property to the public.

As a firm believer of this, our organization has in the past, and will continue in the future, to put on individual showings, of its big product, under auspices, which permit the proper presentation to the exhibitor, and in such presentation the music takes a large part.

If all the success which your movement deserves attends you there will be no limit to it.—Robertson-Cole Co.

Music Editor:

Can you place me in immediate touch with a first class organist for motion picture work? Am willing to pay at least $75.00 per week to the right kind of player. He must know how to cue pictures and must be versatile. Our organ is a style 135 Hope Jones Unit Wurlitzer. The organist must be a union man.

Trusting that you can put me in touch with a good man, and thanking you for the service.—Mgr. Rialto Theatre, Akron, Ohio.

Leading Southern Critic Writes:

After reading the articles you recently sent me I feel inclined to heartily support any movement which would better the quality of music in picture houses, and which would open the way for legitimate concert singers in such theatres.

Any assistance that I may be able to give will be cheerfully given.—Maurice J. Matteson, Columbia, S. C.

From Dallas Music Dealers:

I wish to compliment you on the work that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is doing for the betterment of music in picture theatres. This is a movement which musical people are very much interested in.

We are glad to see a journal, like the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, taking a forward step along this line.—Robert N. Watkin, Dallas Music Industries, Dallas, Texas.

Music Editor:

I am to make a business trip to the East, owing to pressure of business, has been delayed. If possible I want to arrange this trip so as to be in New York City for musical conference, as I do not know if I can make two trips; therefore if you can give me anywhere near an estimate of the date of the conference I will do my best to arrange accordingly. I would like very much to attend the conference, for I believe it is going to be a great stimulus in the musical end of the profession.—Dan Barton, Bartola Musical Instrument Co., Chicago, Ill.

Music Editor:

If I am in the neighborhood, I should be pleased to attend as I think it is a good thing.

Wish you could see one of our shows here. We tried to develop our talent as in that way it becomes educational.—W. G. Stewart, California Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif.

Music Editor:

There is surely a great need for more and better music in every public entertainment.

When you are ready for your meeting in January concerning the fostering of better music with motion pictures, I shall be glad to do anything in my power to help the cause.—W. S. Stoner, The Forecast Magazine, 6 East 39th Street, N. Y. C.

Editor, NEWS:

I have to thank you for your very kind interest in the matter I have written to you about music. I am receiving from various firms communications and music. If you will be good enough to keep me posted with anything appertaining to "our" department, I will be extremely obliged.

Thanking you once more for your great kindness and assistance.—Victor Sheridan, Associated Cinematograph Theatres, London, Eng.

Editor, NEWS:

I certainly appreciate your interest in matters musical, and realize that you need not have replied to my query, but since you did, I thank you warmly. On the day preceding the one on which I wrote you, a letter came to hand from a friend residing in San Francisco to the effect that "there is a scarcity of really high class singers," and suggesting that if I would consider the work, there would be no very great difficulty in securing me engagements at the high grade moving picture houses.

Inter-Ocean Announces Big Lamp Order

Following close upon the heels of the announcement of the acquisition by Inter-Ocean of the rights to the sale of Westinghouse lamps in foreign countries comes another one reporting the company's first sale of Westinghouse incandescent lamps under the new arrangement. This contract calls for the delivery of 30,000 lamps for shipment into Chile and Peru. Inter-Ocean officials are very enthusiastic about this sale, and express the conviction that it is the forerunner to a large volume of business.

A comprehensive sales campaign, designed to increase the consumption of Westinghouse incandescent lamps in foreign countries, is at present in preparation by Inter-Ocean's Accessory Department. The sales campaign will be supplemented by a far-reaching publicity.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Life"

(Seven-Reel Crook Melodrama—Presented by William A. Brady)

WILLIAM A. BRADY celebrates his return to the picture producing field after considerable absence with a hectic melodrama under the title of "Life" announced as an adaptation of a play by himself and Thompson Buchanan. It would seem that a lot of liberties have been taken with the basic plot of the stage production for the picture resembles nothing so much as the sort of original story the old time trained staff men turned out. It is formula stuff from beginning to end with every sequence carefully carried out in all the details, including the dancing party, hero falsely accused, bad bad villain, weak son of a wealthy father, etc., except for one or two twists used in unraveling the skein of circumstantial evidence on which a motion picture jury have convicted an innocent man of murder. The production is orthodox and old fashioned in direction and has been over acted by many of a somewhat nondescript cast, only Arlene Pretty, Rod La Roque, and J. H. Gilbert of the company of players being known to picture fans. It is, however, not without certain audience appeal, or perhaps appeal to certain audiences. If they like action of the 10-20-30 type this should knock 'em off the seats. But the picture is not up to the standards required to please first-class audiences today. Placed in certain houses and distributed by the proper company it will attain considerable success. In the wrong house and sold by the wrong people it will fail to please. The distributing company has not as yet been announced.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Seeds of Vengeance"

(Inter-Ocean—C. R. Macauley)

IT'S a favorite formula that is presented in "Seeds of Vengeance," an adaptation of Margaret Prescott Montague's story, "The Sowing of Alderson Cree," the formula being none other than the Cumberland feud stuff. While there are no clannish families, "furriners," and revenuers, incorporated, still the vital characteristics are retained—such as hate and vindictiveness. The plot is extremely simple—almost single-trick in its conception and revolves around the vengeful desire of a young mountaineer to exact punishment upon the murderer of his father. The action never leaves its groove. For two reels, the villain skulks around until he is advised by the community to leave for his own welfare.

A few years pass and the youth has reached maturity, still abiding his time to have his vengeance. For he had promised his father not to rest until his assassin had paid the penalty. There are no surprises. Every incident is measured in advance. Yet the picture carries a goodly amount of thrills and is staged in some exceptional settings. The woodlands, the mountains, the rugged character of the soil—these are absolutely correct and are necessary to make such a story vital and vivid. Another good incident is furnished in the terrific rainstorm. The natives are attending the meetin' house, arriving in mid-afternon. The next sequence shows night-time and the storm. The parsons must be "windy" down in "them thar hills."

This storm incidentally is the means of the women giving up some of their vindictiveness when they realize how small and insignificant they are amongst nature's elements. So the youth is told that his father repented making his son a prospective murderer. The girl also lends her influence. But it happens that the hulking brute is killed after a terrific scuffle on a mountain road. The earth gives away after the storm and he plunges to his death. The picture doesn't offer any dramatic conflict, and there isn't a note of variety in any of the scenes. Every incident is cut and dried. One just waits for the big punch—the act of vengeance. A very capable cast enacts the parts of the mountaineers, with Jack Curtis as forceful as ever as the villain. He can be relied upon to submerge his identity. He is always in character. Gloria Hope and Pauline Stark are effective in valueless roles, and George Hernandez provides some comedy in a small part. Length 5 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Kentucky Thoroughbreds"

(Kineto Review)

"KENTUCKY THOROUGHBREDS" is an interesting cinema account of the high-spots in the career of a racing horse, born and bred in the blue-grass region. Against a background of broad luxuriant pastures, the development of a Kentucky racer is traced with many intimate touches from the earliest days of colthood down to the fitting climax of a thoroughbred's span of life—the winning of the great Louisville derby. There is a closer approach to dramatic continuity in this subject than is usually found in the educational reel, and action scenes are interspersed throughout the footage, culminating in excellent shots of a whirlwind "home-stretch" finish at the Louisville race-track and the floral coronation of the victor.

Some of Kentucky's most famous racers pose before the camera, and the photographer also gives attractive close-ups of their heads and distinctive markings. Dobbin's introduction to his first saddle and mount and his unwelcome reception of these impediments give the cameraman an opportunity to record snatches of some real rough-riding, in which the rider fares badly. The various stages in the training of a prospective derby winner are also pictured—his daily constitutional around the track, rub-down, leg-bandaging and instruction in the intricacies of the slow-trot, canter and gallop. With the country still agog over the recent victory of "Man O' War," the subject of "Kentucky Thoroughbreds" as presented in this reel should prove very timely and interesting.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Fabiola"

(Raphael Baretta—H. B. Marinelli, Ltd.)

DURING a press showing of this picture the announcer made an apologetic plea to take into consideration the fact that the sub-titles were inadequate translations from the original Italian and that much of the logic of the story might be lost through them. It strikes us that this print should never have been shown until it had passed through the hands of experts and thoroughly re-edited. There is much extraneous matter which is totally irrelevant and such an imposing array of characters that the action becomes entirely confusing. In fact the picture presents a line of broken continuity with scarcely any logic to any of the sequences.

The offering purports to tell the martyrdom of the early Christians which might better be left in history books. The reason is because of the director's uncanny realism. If there is a story here it is so disconnected that one wonders what it is all about. And if it hadn't been for the announcement the spectator would have had no inkling what it offered. A scene is flashed, then a sub-title, then another scene which has no bearing on what has gone before. One can guess even though unfamiliar with text-books that the martyrdom of the early Christians might better be left to the imagination. The sory of "Fabiola" is lost entirely.

There is a good effort at mob scenes and some of the sequences offer effective lighting and photography. But close-ups of a body floating down-stream with the feet coming into view first, to be followed by the harrowing shot of the entire corpse, is pretty unhealthy. And a lion licking up the blood of one of the martyrs and another being tortured to death with arrows and close-ups of more blood flowing from the wounds, tends to make one shudder. However, the picture has possibilities and re-edited might prove to be entertaining. The catacombs, with a burial taking place, is realistic. In fact it is the one bright spot in a picture which carries the most horrible details ever flashed on the screen.—LAURENCE REID.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

Pipe the Penguin
(Educational)

A CHESTER Outing Scenic, which carries the spectator to South America and introduces the peculiar feathered creature, the penguin. They come by the gross and when there is a family scrap it is worse than a world war, for they seem to multiply upon the field of battle rather than decrease. The subject of the one reel is a cross between a bird and a sea lion. They have feathers like a bird and look like a sea lion, especially when wet. The young are buried in holes in the earth, evidently excavated by the sharp beaks of the adult penguin. They are especially at home in water and the wings, which look like huge fins, are used to swim with, rather than with which to fly. But they answer both purposes, for it seems the penguin can paddle as well as he can fly and fly as well as he can paddle. There has been some expert camera work exercised to obtain the shots of these queer creatures, and after having witnessed the reel, one feels thoroughly informed regarding the life and habits of the penguin.—LILLIAN GALE.

Tropical Nights
(Educational)

A ROBERT C. BRUCE West Indian Scenic, one with a decided appeal to the sentimental, for it describes, as no words can, the beauties of the night in the tropics. Beginning with the rustle of the trade wind, the feathery foliage moves in the sway, and as the wind grows stronger, predicting a storm, the beautiful bough bends to the ground, as if bowing mutely to the storm which is destined to rage through the glen. One of the most beautiful natural effects is the disappearance of the evening sun, which suddenly drops into oblivion, announcing that evening is present. Then the moon, slowly rising over the water, spreads a radiant, though soft gleam of light, while the camera registers the gentle motion of the waves. Presumably toward midnight, and when all is still, one can almost hear the insect chorus described in the sub-title. The beauty of a night in the tropics is accurately described in this one reel scenic, from the approach of night until the sun, rising all too soon, brings the picture to a close.—LILLIAN R. GALE.

"A Trip to the West Indies"
(Kineto Review)

THIS is a film record of scenic "shots" taken by the Barbados-Antigua Expedition under the auspices of the University of Iowa. A brief scene at the opening pictures a vessel bound for the West Indies rolling in the trough of the heavy-seas; then follows a long-shot of the port of St. Croix as the vessel approaches the harbor. From here on the camera relates in a leisurely, attractive fashion the progress of the party through the ever-changing scenes of the Barbados.

Native dwellings, locations of historic interest, imposing government buildings, street scenes with the natives bustling about or gossiping on the corners, secure from all worries of the high-cost of leather in the freedom of their bare feet and oblivious of the heat in their loose-fitting garments; a railway train with its toy-like locomotive and lightly-built, open carriages, steaming along, well within speed-limitations—are pleasantly contrasted with long-shots of harbors and stretches of open country.

Intimate views of the manufacturing of sugar-cane products—the crude and the modern methods shown in striking comparison—also lend a touch of interest from the industrial viewpoint. We liked, too, the way the title-writer made the best of his opportunities. One scene shows a location in the Barbados at which George Washington and his brother spent a vacation. And adds the sub-title, Washington later wrote that here he had a pleasant time—and also the smallpox. We are of the opinion that "A Trip to the West Indies" will prove interesting as an educational contribution to the screen.—E. F. SUPPLE.

Urban's Movie Chats, No. 34
(Kineto Co. of America)

MOVIE CHATS NO. 34 opens with some scenes centering around a typical New England pump. Man and beast are served here; and, here, too, the automobilist pauses to replenish his radiator or test for punctures in his inner-tube. Mischief also finds an outlet for its exuberance at the old town-pump, and the juvenile population of the town take the opportunity to splash one another and play pranks on the unwary with the same ardor that they might employ in the rollers at the beach.

Next we view the marsh-lands of Wales with the shell-hunters busy at their tasks. It is the novelty and not the beauty of this scene that holds the attention. Then the setting changes to the English "broadlands," where we are given various angles on the sport of duck-hunting. The huntsman is shown in action with his shot-gun, ably assisted by the traditional faithful hunting-dog, who swims to the quarry, after it has been brought down, and fetches it to shore.

The reel closes with a series of views showing movements of various kinds of flowers as caught by the stop-camera. The tortuous movements of stems and unfolding buds are attractively presented with a view to answering the question raised at the beginning of the series as to whether flowers do really writhe and squirm, like species of the animal creation, under the influence of pain. Some of the effects secured in this series are rather striking for their beauty and novelty.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"The Quaint Isle of Marken"
(Educational)

THE title tells what this subject reveals and "quaint" is the correct word. The little isle of Marken, is as quaint as it is Dutch. The illustrating of its quaintness starts with showing the large fishing craft used by the wage earners, for securing their wares from the deep waters surrounding the isle, while upon the small body of land, itself, canals are plentiful and hauling as well as other transportation is done by the large row boats hauled, many times, by the women. This is a particularly good subject for the juvenile, the interesting views of the children, a delight to the child of a country where wooden shoes would appear a burden to carry around. It is no wonder the quaintness remains, since the style of architecture, for instance, has not been changed for more than a hundred years. The men are sturdy, healthful looking specimens, the women retiring and the children shy. Obviously, they hardly knew what to make of the motion picture camera, and their natural expressions, recorded, proved of considerable interest. This subject would plant, nicely, atmosphere for a feature wherein the characters hail from Dutch families.—LILLIAN R. GALE.

"SIMPLEX BEST OF ALL MADE!!!"
"For 5 years I have had SIMPLEX. They are the best of all made."
LYRIC THEATRE, LEBANON, TENN.

"Falling Waters"
(Educational)

IN this we are reminded of a rhyme often quoted by school teachers: "Little drops of water, little grains of sand make the mighty ocean and the pleasant land." And then, from the time a drop of water from within the rain cloud, we follow it upon its merry little way, sometimes a tiny part of a sluggish stream, again the same small part of an on-rushing brook, helping to make beauteous famous water falls, and finally at the end of the scenic, we are reminded that these little drops go to make up the mighty ocean. There is plenty of opportunity for scenic value and expert photography, both of which are taken advantage of. There is a sort of intense interest held by following the little drop from the clouds to the seven seas and suddenly recalling that we had never thought of how important a drop of water really is. This is a Robert C. Bruce American Scenic of unusual merit.—LILLIAN R. GALE.

Mules and Gobtalk

A CHESTER screenic which states it is co-operatively connected with "Field and Stream," which has the valuable asset of Katherine Hilliker sub-titles, in addition to some beautiful photography. It is mostly concerning the animals which inhabit Yellowstone Park, and which, in the words of the title, are thankful when the fall sets in and they are left to quiet and reminiscence of a summer seemingly made up of sight-seers. There is a tribe of antelope to be seen, both in the long shot and close up. It was easier to secure the close up of the antelope than of the mountain sheep, which are also shown, but on account of their fear of human invasion are not so easily caught before the camera. The herd of elk is the largest, in numbers, in the park, including a family of about 2,000, and when they are tired of their own company, they invite the Dobbins to dinner. Following shots show the marmot about to emerge from a warm resting place under ground, and a herd of buffalo intervenes. The buffalo do not manifest any particular welcome for the picture takers, but the mule-deer are better mannered and seem to beckon the camera man to "come right in." A very educating and entertaining one-reel subject.—LILLIAN GALE.

"TWIN BEDS"
(DeHaven—First National)

Famous Stage Success Scores a Hit on the Screen

MR. AND MRS. CARTER DEHAVEN make their debut as feature producers in "Twin Beds," an adaptation of the successful farce of the same name by Margaret Mayo and Salisbury Field. In choosing this highly laughable hit, the co-stars have shown a good sense of showmanship since it not only gives them an excellent start in the feature field, but will enable them to enlarge their following. In the first place this piece has been well publicized so that screengoers will flock to see it. Those who had the good fortune to witness it in the orginal will be delighted over the fact that none of its charm, humor, pep and spontaneity have been lost in the film translation.

"Twin Beds" was the first of the bedroom farces and it was so good that it has been used as a model ever since. There is a real ideal here which doesn't expend itself every time exits and entrances are used. And being well fortified with rapid-fire action and breezy incident, it makes excellent screen material. With the first few minutes over and the characters fully planted, the picture builds easily and surely without a waste of footage or any recourse to so-called "business" or padding. The bedroom farce has become a tiresome piece of entertainment because playwrights or scenario writers have flooded stage and screen with uninspired ideas on the subject—ideas which have been rank imitations of "Twin Beds." Now that the original is here the spectator will appreciate what composes an entertaining farce.

The offering carries so much incident that the snappy dialogue is not missed and the director has emphasized its highlights by developing it in the correct tempo. Every scene is well timed with no stressing of detail to make it a five-reeler. It may be that certain exhibitors might take exception to the picture through the idea that it carries a risque note. But this note is only established in the title. Briefly, the plot concerns two married couples with a near triangle suggested when a husband comes home one night and gets into the wrong apartment and twin bed. This precipitates amusing climaxes because the respective spouses of the involved couple must be spared the truth at all costs. These same respective spouses had urged their better halves to move out of the neighborhood only to find that they are all under the same roof—in an apartment. It is a laughable bit, the elevator incident when DeHaven doesn't know what to make of the automatic arrangement. This bit is only one of many which are presented in rapid-fire fashion. The DeHavens have had enough comedy experience to appear perfectly at home. And it must be said of them that they haven't missed a single opportunity to make this picture a sure laugh-getter all the way. The supporting cast includes the dependable William Desmond, who again displays a keen sense of characterization. The piece is excellently staged and should be thoroughly enjoyed by any audience. Certainly the Strand, New York, liked it.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

That highly successful farce, "Twin Beds," which, when it appeared upon the stage, delighted millions of theatregoers, has been adapted to the screen for the purposes of presenting Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven as stars in feature length pictures. It comes to the silver sheet with all its delightful humor, zippy action and spontaneity, and will be the main attraction at the ———— theatre the week of ———— the ————. The plot concerns the misadventures of two married couples who are extremely friendly. The husband of one and the wife of the other are too friendly for their respective better halves, with the result that suspicions are aroused.

The less flirtatious pairs urge their spouses to move out of the neighborhood, but it happens that they all find habitation under the same roof. The flirtatious husband comes home one night intoxicated and thinks he has entered his own apartment, but in reality has jumped into the apartment of his equally flirtatious friend. When he awakes in the morning, the trouble begins—trouble which takes a deal of explaining to bring order out of chaos. The picture sends out incident after incident that is as amusing as it is novel. And the DeHavens and their excellent supporting company take advantage of its bright and breezy highlights. The offering is splendidly staged and makes as good a photoplay as it did a play.

PROGRAM READER

Suppose you discovered your wife responding to your neighbor's advances. Wouldn't you move out of the immediate vicinity? Surely you would. But how would you conduct yourself if you found upon moving into an apartment that your neighbor had taken the floor below? Supposing you were a henpecked husband, wouldn't you take solace in the apartment of another woman—even though you were innocent of any evil impulses. And then suppose upon awaking in the morning to discover that the woman in the opposite twin bed is not your wife, what would you do? That is the situation in which Carter DeHaven finds himself. Think of the woman! Think of her husband! Think of the jealous wife upstairs! This explains after a fashion the story of "Twin Beds," the farce-comedy which comes to the ———— next ————. A sure laugh provoker.

"DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES"
(Vitagraph)

Vivid, "Punchy" Story; Production Excellent

TOM TERRIS has succeeded royally in transferring the excitement and suspense, the real drama of E. W. Hornung's famous novel, "Deal Men Tell No Tales," to the screen—which is, after all, the ideal medium of expression for stories of this ilk. The picture gets away to a rousing start and there isn't a slow or draggy minute in the whole thing. The continuity is excellent, the suspense splendidly (and legitimately) sustained, and the work of the long and capable cast deserves special commendation.

The story has been closely adhered to, in the main, and the few changes necessary have been wrought so cleverly that there is no jar or appreciable difference to the interested spectator.

The picture opens with the arrival, at dead of night, of a distinctly unique crew at fine old Kirby Hall, on the British coast. The Squire, John Rattray, is delighted to greet his guests, who arrive by way of a secret entrance. Senor Santos, his villainous servant, Jose, and his equally villainous Captain Harris are followed by a girl whose beauty is in startling contrast to her evil-looking companions. And we learn that she is, by some strange freak of fate, Santos' step-daughter.

The outline of Santos' plan, with reference to the shipment of gold, from Australia, and the subsequent plan of destroying the ship and all passengers, is cleverly and, what's more, clearly explained. And from then on the interest reaches a high pitch from which it does not drop until the finish of the picture.

Santos' plan is carried out with fiendish cleverness. The life-boats are "fixed" by having holes bored through them, and the ropes holding them sliced half way through. When the fire on board starts and the frenzied passengers, men, women and children, fight for a place in the doomed boats, there begins a thrill that lasts all the way through the reel and those to follow.

The burning of the Jermyn is handled in masterly fashion and is most effective.

Catherine Calvert has never looked more beautiful than in the role of Eva, in the semi-Spanish costumes affected by that lady; Gustav von Seyffertitz, always a capable player, acquits himself with honors in the role of Santos; Percy Marmont is a likable hero, and Holmes E. Herbert contributes a well-thought-out characterization. As a matter of fact every member of the cast deserves comment.

Tom Terris has handled the picture in masterly fashion and is to be congratulated on a picture which goes a long way towards reaching the goal of perfect pictures.—Length, 7 reels.—Reviewed by Pearl Gaddis, Atlanta, Ga.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The man who wrote "Raffles" has contributed to the screen a story so closely knit, so filled with action and suspenseful thrills, that everybody who enjoys an unusual picture, is going to be delighted when "Dead Men Tell No Tales," a seven-reel Vitagraph special, reaches the ———— theatre for a ———— run.

The story deals with Senor Joaquin Santos, whose sinister creed is "dead men tell no tales." Santos is utterly unscrupulous, and plans the murder of a shipload of men, women and children as calmly as if they were so many rats. He is abetted in this trick by Squire John Rattray, and a group of piratical cut-throats. Into this evil web is drawn beautiful Eva Denison, George Cole, a young barrister, and any number of other more or less interesting people, so that a surprising, exciting—but satisfactory—climax is assured. A picture all will enjoy. Here ————.

PROGRAM READER

She was a lovely woman, in whose veins ran the blood of youth and the world-old cry for love. When she met Squire John Rattray she believed him all that was good and noble—and she promised to marry him. But when she met young George Cole she wasn't so sure—and then she discovered that Rattray was mixed up in an incredibly evil plan with her own villainous stepfather—a plan which had as its object nothing less than the sinking of the Lady Jermyn, with her cargo of women and children. Held a prisoner by her father's cutthroats, with George Cole thinking her dead, what did she do? See "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

CATCH LINES

He baited his evil schemes with a beautiful and innocent young woman. What did he hope to catch? Can a man plot and execute a fiendish crime so cleverly that he will not be discovered? When she found herself engaged to a man whose hands were red with human blood, on whose soul was the dark blot of murder—what happened? See "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

"THE LITTLE GREY MOUSE"
(Fox)

New Star's First Picture Mildly Interesting

FOX has given Louise Lovely, his new star, an elaborately produced, but only mildly gripping drama in "The Little Grey Mouse." Miss Lovely herself has been given a role that leaves her small chance of impressing herself upon the fans in her first picture. She plays a meek, colorless, muchly-greatly abused young wife. There is nothing zestful and distinct about the part. And it is one that will arise the ire of an audience, because the girl is so long suffering and meek.

The story concerns Beverly Arnold, a private secretary who marries her employer, an unsuccessful lawyer, who has found success as an author. It is really the wife, however, who develops and types the manuscripts, who deserves the credit for his success. His head turned by fame, the writer willingly accepts the number of satellites who flock about him, and eventually falls in love with an artist-vampire—a part played by Rosemary Theby.

Beverly learns of her husband's infidelity and in her meek little way goes to the vampire's apartment to beg him to return. It is a strong but harrowing sight, to see the husband discard his wife. He takes the vampire in his arms and kisses her before the eyes of the now heart-broken "little grey mouse." Thereafter Beverly attains fame herself as a writer, and eventually marries the staid and steady lawyer, played by Sam De Grasse. The husband comes to no dire end, his only punishment for his conduct being a wounded pride when Beverly refuses to take him back. Thus the story lacks a punch at the end.

There has been a great effort put in the production of the picture and as a result there are some distinctive office, cabaret and studio sets. Philo McCullough as the writer seems to overdo his snobbish and conceited part. The star makes the role as appealing as possible, but "little grey mice" are no more popular figuratively than they are literally and we think an audience would prefer a movie heroine with a backbone. The suggestion of the husband's infidelity is not very delicately done.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

It is a new picture with a new star that is to be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. "The Little Grey Mouse" is the story and Louise Lovely the new star. The public demands new faces occasionally. They like a change in their entertainers and they will welcome Miss Lovely with open arms.

Although she is an experienced screen actress, she has never before played the starring role in a picture. She has been leading woman for William Farnum in more than six of his productions. She is an Australian by birth and completed her education in Switzerland. Previous to her motion picture debut she was well known on the vaudeville and musical comedy stage.

The picture that marks her elevation to stardom is "The Little Grey Mouse," an original story by Barbara Le Marr Deely, who has already written many Fox successes. Beverley Arnold, played by Miss Lovely, is just an old-fashioned girl, whom the worldly-wise call "a little grey mouse, so unsophisticated, so—so—quaint!" She does not drink, nor even smoke! She cannot prattle of art and new thought! And even the man who once loved her, having drank deep of worldly success, comes to believe that she is a bit too old-fashioned to be the wife of a popular young author.

But there are men—of sturdy manhood and clear vision, who can appreciate even a "little grey mouse." Beverley finds one, and in him her true happiness. The story is a delightful romantic drama, and entertaining throughout.

The sooner you become acquainted with this new star, the more pleased you will be. And you could not meet her in a better picture than "The Little Grey Mouse."

PROGRAM READER

A new star will be introduced to the patrons of the ———— theatre on ————, when Louise Lovely will appear in her initial starring vehicle for Fox, "The Little Grey Mouse." Miss Lovely has been the leading lady for William Farnum, the popular Fox actor, in a number of pictures, and it was because of her good work in these productions that she was elevated to stardom. "The Little Grey Mouse" is a story of an old-fashioned girl, whose husband rose to dizzy heights of popularity as an author. Like so many others, fame and wealth went to his head and changed his entire nature, and he was no longer satisfied with the "little grey mouse" of a wife, who was so "unworldly, so unsophisticated, and so quaint!" But there was one who appreciated her, with all her old-fashioned domesticity.

"The Little Grey Mouse" will be shown for ———— days, beginning ————. It is a fitting offering to introduce this beautiful star to the motion picture public.

SUGGESTIONS

You will want to give this picture a good send-off, especially if you contemplate showing further Louise Lovely pictures. Use lobby photographs of her and get as many press stories as possible in the dailies concerning her. You have Rosemary Theby in the cast, and if you have shown "Whispering Devils" it would be well to use her name in your ad. copy.

CATCH LINES

Don't be afraid of the "little grey mouse"—she was only a demure, old-fashioned girl, who loved her home more than her "art."

This is Louise Lovely's first starring picture. A story of a world-wise, catty adventuress, and a demure, mouse-like little wife.

"OFFICER 666"
(Goldwyn)

Fair Entertainment, But Titles Earn Most of the Laughs

IN "Officer 666" another opportunity of comparing the productions of the past with those of today is presented. The famous Cohan and Harris melodramatic farce comedy, with Howard Estabrook and others of the original cast in their respective roles, was released on the George Kleine program some five years ago, and if memory serves us reasonably well, the Goldwyn production scores as entertainment in about the same degree, fairly amusing, and in about the same way, by sticking closely to the original and using the speaking lines as titles, as did the initial picture.

Director Beaumont in directing Tom Moore's "666" has picked some very good types in support of his star and then virtually transferred the stage play to the screen. The result is a picture that interests only so far as reading the script would interest and has a handicap of much running in and out by the various characters and the squad of police, that will be confusing to those who do not read titles quickly or are not familiar with the stage version. However, Mr. Beaumont's failure to provide a variety of scenes or to make additions to the incident can hardly be called a shortcoming, since the story provided no opportunity for such interpolations, being a series of incidents that happened in and about one house during the afternoon and evening of one day. The picture interests as a production and no single player succeeds in lifting his role above the others unless it be Raymond Hatton in the fat part of "Whitney Barnes." As a starring vehicle for Moore it is not so much, since it provides little opportunity for acting and gives better chances to other members of the cast. However, with intelligent audiences it will be found an amusing evening's entertainment, and the titles earn quite a number of laughs. Viewed from production angles it is up to standard except that perhaps too many long shots were used. The stage settings are good and the attention to detail commendable.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Popular Tom Moore will be seen at the ———— theatre for a ——— days' run, beginning ————, in his latest comedy success, "Officer 666," a story of a young man who came home from a trip abroad in time to get mixed up with a gentleman crook who was robbing his house of valuable paintings.

The picture is an adaptation of the famous Cohan & Harris stage play that has lived these many years in the memory of those who saw it as one of the best funmakers ever written. In adapting it to the screen all the situations and clever business of the original has been retained. Tom Moore in the leading role is admirably cast and a strong supporting cast has been secured for him. "Officer 666" is a melodramatic farce, full of original incident and with especially clever titles, many of which are from the original play. For entertainment the offering will not be excelled this season.

PROGRAM READER

Perhaps no play of recent years has been more successful than the famous Cohan & Harris melodramatic farce comedy. "Officer 666," which has now been adapted to the screen with popular Tom Moore in the leading role and will be the attraction at the ———— for a ——— days' engagement beginning ————.

"Officer 666" is a chronicle of a remarkable series of events which happened in a single night when a gentleman crook undertook to rob a young millionnaire of his collection of rare paintings. Tom Moore is the rich young man who is being robbed and who has returned from a trip abroad incognito. The picture is purely entertainment, but as such it is a remarkable success, since to the many amusing situations which the stage version furnished a lot of original incident has been added that will register with any and all audiences. The star is offered one of his best roles and takes full advantage of the opportunities presented. A strong supporting cast has been secured for the lesser roles of the production. Throughout the picture a pleasing romance is woven, although the action and incident of the plot have to do with the robbery and the capture of the burglar.

SUGGESTIONS

Make much of the fame of the stage success promising good entertainment in the picture. Bill Tom Moore as having an ideal role and one which gives him plenty of opportunity. A lobby display of paintings would be in keeping with the picture. Since this is a picture where the police figure prominently special showings for the members of the local force could be arranged with prominent officers testimonials secured for publication purposes.

As a ballyhoo have a young man in a policeman's uniform with the number on his badge 666 patrolling a beat in front of the theatre. Dress your ushers in police uniforms. As a prologue use the opening scene of the stage play, in which a room with the walls covered with painting and the furniture with white coverings is entered by a Jap who lights it up by opening the draperies over the windows and gets things in shape for his master's homecoming. For a prologue in which music is used attention is called to a description of one staged by S. L. Rothafel for the run of "Officer 666" at the Capitol theatre to be found within the pages of this issue.

CATCH LINES

Tom Moore in the role of the "man who went out to arrest himself." A story of an eventful evening that won Travers Gladwyn a wife and saved his valuable paintings from being stolen.

"FOOD FOR SCANDAL"
(Realart)

Very Obvious, But Fairly Interesting

WANDA HAWLEY'S newest Realart picture, "Food for Scandal," does not measure up to her initial vehicle, "Miss Hobbs," in point of story interest and characterization, nor does it carry as good incident and action. In fact it is quite a conventional offering which pleases after a fashion because of its first rate interpretation. The "scandal" hinted at in the title is really much ado about nothing and presents a heroine who consents to act as an innocent co-respondent in an impending divorce action so that she may bring the quarrelsome couple together again.

The opening flash shows her the heiress of a depleted fortune with nothing tangible in the way of assets except a broken down ranch. She is engaged to an equally impoverished young lawyer. So each goes to 'Frisco to gain a livelihood. Hero has failed to write because of his misfortune and heroine, piqued at his conduct, has joined the chorus under an assumed name, rather than ask any assistance from him. The director has provided a faulty touch in the setting for the lawyer's office—an office which is as luxuriously furnished as a bank president's. Certainly he gives the lie to the fact that he is poverty stricken. As for the girl the appearance of the ranch might lead one to think that she could easily have it mortgaged or raise produce in California's sunny clime. Again she dresses a la Fifth Avenue and mainatins an apartment in a hoetl—which is certainly beyond her income.

It is an obvious tale and the title gives it away when the heroine flirts with scandal. The quarrelsome couple are friends of her fiance and it develops that she retires from the stage to enter the husband's employ as the co-respondent. And having her wits about her she brings them together and makes the husband promise to become the lawyer's client. This little twist does much to lift the story out of its single-track channel and the development of it carries no small amount of humor. But the poor protagonists are not presented in a consistent manner. The background of their lives would lead one to believe that they reveled in riches. The romance is well treated, with emphasis placed upon the conflict. And Miss Hawley and Harrison Ford are perfectly at home in their respective parts. The analytical spectator may wonder how people of such high estate ever sunk so low in worldly goods and are able to appear prosperous and well-fed at the same time. The picture should offer a fairly interesting hour.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Wanda Hawley, the charming actress, who made her debut as a star in "Miss Hobbs" will return to the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest photoplay entitled, "Food for Scandal." This is an adaptation by Edith Kennedy of Paul Kester's play, "Beverley's Balance," and is considered ideal for the expression of Miss Hawley's personality and talent. The star assumes the role of Sylvia Figeuroa, a girl who has inherited her father's decrepit ranch. Unable to make both ends meet she goes to San Francisco in search of a position and finds it as a member of the chorus in a musical comedy. Also in the Californian city is Watt Dinwiddie, her lover, who is having an equally difficult time in making a living at the practise of law.

Good fortune smiles upon the girl when she elects to become an innocent co-respondent and thus permit a wealthy man to gain a divorce. But she enters into the agreement under the stipulation that Watt will become her benefactor's attorney. In the end she is instrumental in bringing the quarrelsome couple together and finds happiness with the young lawyer. There is a charming element of romance introduced and the picture is well punctuated with humorous incident. Miss Hawley receives excellent support in which Harrison Ford and Lester Cuneo are prominent. James Cruze directed.

PROGRAM READER

Wanda Hawley, last seen here in "Miss Hobbs," the picture which established her as a star after serving the screen as a leading woman for several seasons, returns again on ———— in her latest feature production entitled "Food for Scandal." The star plays the part of a girl who has come to the end of her resources and it behooves her to flirt with scandal—of course in an innocent way—in order to keep the wolf from the door. How her decision precipitates an unique situation—how she emerges with flying colors is told in a picture which psarkles with comedy and sentiment throughout its bright and breezy action. Miss Hawley is supported by the dependable Harrison Ford.

SUGGESTIONS

If you showed Wanda Hawley's previous picture, "Miss Hobbs," there is no question that you have some arguments to work upon here. The above mentioned feature established her as a star Tell that "Food for Scandal" is a fitting companion picture to "Miss Hobbs." Bring out that it offers a colorful character sketch of a girl at the end of her resources and who nearly stoops to folly to keep the wolf from the door. Bring out that it is a most enjoyable comedy-drama—one which is ideal for her personality and talent. Play up the leading man. He is well known to your patrons. Mention that the picture is an adaptation of the play, "Beverley's Balance." Since Miss Hawley is one of the beauties of the screen, by all means don't neglect to distribute stills of her for lobby display.

"AN OLD FASHIONED BOY"
(Ince-Paramount-Artcraft)

Not Much to the Story, But Ray Puts It Over

AGNES CHRISTINE JOHNSTON, who has furnished Charles Ray with more than one fine idea for screen expression, has not been found wanting in inspiration with "An Old Fashioned Boy." The pyschology of feminine nature is caught admirably—which establishes the fact that contrariness of the sex must be expected in matters of love and marriage. She brings out the conflict between a young man, too sure of his girl, and the latter, who, because she is caught in the matrimonial net, is equally determined to prove her independence. Hence when the old fashioned boy brings her out to his fully equipped bungalow and argues in favor of babies and suburban life, the ultra-modern girl rebels.

But the idea soon spends itself. The note of conflict is relegated to the background and what is developed is nothing but a pleasing farce-comedy which relies upon sure-fire hokum for effect. There is a good twist and it shows the hero employing strategy to re-capture the girl. A counter-plot, showing a quarrel between friends of the couple develops in the wife leaving her children with the old-fashioned youth. So he goes to the trouble of having himself and the youngsters quarantined for black measles and then inviting the contrary sweetheart over so that she may be forced to stay. Most of the action details, incidents resulting from the quarantine notice. For instance, the old fashioned boy makes taffy for the children and this bit becomes extremely "slapsticky."

It is a regular Mack Sennett touch which scores because it is really genuine and funny. But the would-be benedict changes his clothes after the episode which shows that he must have stocked the bungalow with a wardrobe as well as household effects. Putting the quarantine sign on the house precipitates a rather novel situation and in the end the ultra-modern girl is taught her p's and q's. The picture is quite a departure for Ray. He is not the country yokel, but a city chap blessed with homespun ideas. And he makes the most of the disappointment, born of being too sure of the girl. His individual touches are as pronounced as ever. Realizing that the idea isn't heavy enough to be treated seriously, Director Storm has emphasized the farcical note. And trust him to provide some bottled A No. 1 brand of hokum! The Rivoli audience was delighted with the picture. Which is proof that the Johnston, Storm and Ray combination is a mighty effective one. The feature is technically first rate.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

David Warrington	Charles Ray
Betty Graves	Ethel Shannon
Doctor Graves	Alfred Allen
Herbert	Wade Boteler
Sybil	Grace Morse
Violet	Gloria Joy
Herbie	Frankie Lee
Ferdie	Hal Cooley
The Baby	Virginia Brown

By Agnes Christine Johnston.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Ray, the star without an equal in the delineation of country boy character, will be the star at the ———— theatre next ———— in "An Old Fashioned Boy." This story by Agnes Christine Johnston, an author who has been responsible for many Ray successes, takes the star away from his country boy role and places him in a modern characterization. As David Warrington he is old fashioned in regard to romance and marriage. In other words, David is all for the home—the suburban home where children may have free development away from city life and cramped apartments.

Charles Ray gives color and individuality to the part in his customary manner and manages to extract a vast amount of humor and sentiment from the story. His fiancee, Betty, is strictly modern and her ultra-fashionable ideas take exception to country homes and their upkeep. But David works a bit of strategy. He has himself quarantined with several children so that when Betty comes visiting she is forced to remain in the bungalow. This sequence precipitates a novel situation which carries the utmost in appeal. The picture has a strong heart interest and is well directed by Jerome Storm and capably played by an exceptional cast.

PROGRAM READER

He was an old fashioned boy—particularly old fashioned on ideas of romance and marriage. He was old fashioned enough to believe himself sure of his girl—that she would agree with his ideas on suburban bungalows and whether children would be happier in the country than in the city. But the girl rebelled. How the old fashioned boy conceived a plan to win the girl over to his ideas—how he changed her from an ultra-fashionable coquette into a girl after his own heart is told in a story which flashes with humor and sentiment. The star, Charles Ray, gives another of his cameo performances and is supported by players who are excellent in their several roles. Agnes Christine Johnston wrote "An Old Fashioned Boy," while Jerome Storm directed. The picture will be shown at the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is Ray again in a part which takes him away from his country yokel type. Make it plain that he is superb in the delineation of the homespun boy. The type here is a familiar one and Ray makes it natural as ever. Make plain, too, that the author, Agnes Christine Johnston, has written another fine story for the star. Dwell upon the direction. Bring out that Jerome Storm has put Ray through his paces again, which is sufficient guarantee of its excellence. Make use of the title in your publicity campaign. You might give a hint of the plot, dwelling upon the conflict engendered between an ultra-modern girl and an old-fashioned boy. Make mention that it points out the difference between city and country life. Bill it as a joyful comedy-drama of youth, love and suburban life.

"THE FACE AT YOUR WINDOW"
(William Fox)

Propaganda Picture Developed Along Orthodox Lines

THE names of Max Marcin, Richard Stanton and William Fox, combined with a theme based on Americanism, held forth much promise for a worth while picture—a promise that, viewed from the accepted standards of present day production, is not realized. Frankly, "The Face at Your Window" is just the usual overdrawn, over acted, orthodox propaganda melodrama, that resorts to long titles to tell its story and preach Americanism; that grasps every opportunity to appeal to patriotism even with such ancient methods as D. W.'s Klu Kux Clan roles covering the uniforms of the American Legion boys as they ride forth to put down the revolutionists, the G. A. R. veteran getting out his tattered uniform of blue, and flag waving titles. Mr. Marcin's story is commonplace and his titles, which make up fully half the picture, are not inspired. Mr. Stanton's direction is stereotyped and his incident ordinary. It is a picture to take seriously for only one reason—that reason being that the industrial unrest in this country and the Bolshevist regime in other countries certainly is to be taken seriously, and that since the production is unadulterated propaganda, it has been developed along lines that perhaps will appeal to those at which its message is aimed—the rank and file of those who are socialistically inclined and those of our loyal, but uneducated people, who like their melodrama of the 10-20-30 variety.

We saw this production in a theatre where a picture of Lenine and titles giving extracts from his published doctrines received greater appreciation than did a picture of Roosevelt. Hisses drowned this demonstration and some of the titles we have criticized were given hearty applause. Also a considerable portion of an election day crowd seemed to enjoy the offering, all of which indicates that there is an audience for this sort of a production and that the theatre which has such an audience will be passing a good bet in not playing it.—Length, 7 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Directed by Richard Stanton.
Story by Max Marcin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A motion picture with a greater theme than something which merely entertains has been booked for the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ———— in "The Face at Your Window," a super-special production from the William Fox studios that preaches the sermon of Americanism and relates a story of what happens when the Bolshevist and the "Red" are allowed to continue working toward their goal of revolution with its reign of murder, arson and rioting.

"The Face at Your Window" is a picture that every true American should see for it has a tremendous message, besides being absorbing photoplay entertainment containing many thrilling scenes and a realistic well told story of what would happen if a "Red" revolution would begin in this country. The production was as timely as was the famed "Battle Cry of Peace" of some years ago that did more to awaken the American people to the menace of Germanyism than all the sermons, or editorials that were written. The story of "The Face at Your Window" was written by Max Marcin, the famous playwright and the picture was directed by Richard Stanton, acknowledged to be one of the best producers of melodrama in the country. The production has many big scenes that will compare with the never to be forgotten sequences of "The Birth of a Nation." The cast which enacts the various roles of the picture is all-star with several players of international reputation on the stage and screen.

PROGRAM READER

For people who think, who want something more than entertainment, who would be educated and thrilled, the feature picture booked for this theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————, "The Face at Your Window" is to be recommended. Based on a theme of Americanism, a preachment if you will for the simon pure brand of patriotism that has no patience with Bolshevism, the rule of the Soviet or any of the other disciples of revolution, riot and arson that are at the bottom of the industrial unrest now apparent in the United States, this picture is as timely and as potent a warning as was the famed "Battle Cry of Peace" of before the war and at the same time a tremendously interesting melodrama that has many a thrill and some scenes that will be found as gripping as any ever conceived for the motion picture. "The Face at Your Window" is the story of what would happen if the "Reds" ever accomplished their vowed intention of starting a revolution and like the "Battle Cry of Peace" which showed what might be expected of German invasion, it drives home a tremendous lesson. It wakes people of a realization of a danger that really does exist and suggests the only remedy to prevent such a terrible event. It is a big picture founded on a big theme. The production is sponsored by William Fox and is directed by Richard Stanton from a story by Max Marcin, the famous playwright.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the theme and refer to it as a second "Battle Cry of Peace." Do not bother with members of the cast but bill it as a production. Use scene stills that will give some idea of the sort of production it is. Mention Marcin and Richard Stanton in your advertising. Get your prominent citizens, and labor organizations interested and pay special attention to the employers of labor. A picture to be treated seriously with no attempt at hokum exploitation.

CATCH LINES

"The Battle Cry of Peace" of 1920. A picture with a message that is of tremendous moment and a production of such scope as to be classed with "The Birth of a Nation."

"SOMEONE IN THE HOUSE"
(Metro)

Interesting Crook Story, Well Directed and Acted

IT isn't often that a crook story fails on the screen. Many directors think it is necessary to go into every detail and point out the why and wherefore of every scene to drive their points home. And many crook stories slip up through employing a deal of wild incident and improbable hokum. "Someone in the House" is a credit to John Ince's capable direction. He might easily have made it just an ordinary affair by presenting a scene and then showing just how it was made. In other words he has eliminated the obvious. There is no planting of the idea or the characters. Incidents flow from some real tangible sequence.

"Someone in the House" is quite novel and it packs a sure-fire brand of action, most of which is rapidly executed with full emphasis placed upon the suspensive value. The most case-hardened critic will find that he cannot guess the conclusion. Is the crook-in-chief a detective? You suspect it but you aren't sure. Anyway, a picture is flashed which builds with ever-increasing interest. It marks quite a departure in crook stories. Of course one is acquainted with the pawn-broker "fence" who takes the stolen jewels from the gentleman Raffles' hands. But one finds a new angle in the idea which shows the crook staging a "fake" rescue so that his victim might introduce him to his society set.

An amateur play is in rehearsal and the crook has information that the leading woman will wear her famous jewels. He ingratiates his personality so well that he is offered the part of leading man. It is no trouble to duplicate the necklace and the imitation is substituted at the proper time. The police are drawn into the net, but a surprise comes when the leading woman declares that the robbery is written in the lines of the play. Eventually she discovers the true character of the thief, but his better side has been touched by the influence of love. So the conclusoin brings the inevitable reformation. The finish is rather abrupt and might better have represented a scene than a subtitle. And closeups of the substitution might have been shown. But these are minor flaws in a story which travels on high and carries several clever surprises and unique twists. There are no lapses of action. The tempo is well caught to correspond with the hectic life of a crook. Edmund Lowe is easy and natural in the Raffles role. And the others are entirely capable. A clever title, adorning an equally clever picture, should make it well liked.—Length, 5400 feet.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "Someone In The House," a Metro picture adapted from the stage play by Larry Evans and George S. Kaufman. It offers a most interesting crook story, the plot and characterization being rich in action and color. A cast that includes several well known players, among them being Edmund Lowe, Vola Vale and Lawrence Grant, interprets the picture in a spirited fashion. The plot concerns a gentleman crook who is as polished as he is resourceful. By staging a "fake" rescue, his newfound friend invites him to the house in which an amateur play is in rehearsal.

Molly Brent, a wealthy society girl, is the owner of a valuable necklace. And it is this prize jewel which Burke is desirous of stealing. He has a duplicate made and the stage is all set for the robbery. Even the police are hoodwinked to be present. But when they have the thief in their clutches, Molly comes to the rescue by stating that the robbery is only a rehearsal. She eventually discovers that her necklace is stolen, but forgives Burke when he declares his love and his determination to go straight. John Ince directed.

PROGRAM READER

A fascinating story of a gentleman crook who outwits the police and ingratiates his personality with friends and enemies alike is offered in "Someone in the House," the Metro picture which comes to the ———— next ———— with a cast including Edmund Lowe, Vola Vale, Edward Jobson and Lawrence Grant. The hero in question is known as "The Dancer" and his object is to steal immensely valuable jewels. Good fortune brings him into contact with society people. To tell you any more would be giving the story away. But suffice that it entertains every minute and builds interestingly and with good suspense. It is one of the best crook stories ever told on the screen. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

A crook play is always certain of getting over through the ever-increasing interest and suspense which usually accompany it. Bring out that "Someone in the House" is a worthy subject of its kind—that it offers a very likable hero who smiles pleasantly in the face of danger and who outwits his associates and the police at every turn. Tell that it is an adaptation of the stage play by Larry Evans, the well known fiction writer and George S. Kaufman, dramatic critic of a New York daily. Mention the leading players. Use some of the novel situations for program readers and throwaways. Bill it as a fascinating crook photoplay which is bright, breezy, and filled with sure-fire action. Make use of the title in a campaign.

CATCH LINES

There was someone in the house. No one knew his identity, but they were all certain he was after the famous necklace. See the fascinating crook picture, "Someone in the House."

"THE FATAL HOUR"
(Metro)

Crude Melodrama Makes Mediocre Picture

A TYPE of picture which might have been popular a few years ago before the screen public was educated up to the high standard of the present day is revealed in "The Fatal Hour," an adaptation of the Drury Lane melodrama of the same name. All the old stock tricks found in the cheap, trashy, paper-covered novel are incorporated here, with full emphasis placed upon their separate and collective values, with the result that reality takes the count and hectic and overdrawn buncombe is the result. Why, the very title is reminiscent of the ten. twent' and thirt' days: English aristocracy runs afoul of villainy, the central idea being based upon the determination of an heir to the nobility to establish his inheritance and good name.

The sequences which develop the climaxes are terribly far fetched. Because the hero has humiliated a "bounder" in public, the latter maps out a diabolical plan of revenge, which takes shape when the first mentioned is given a house warming. His servants are grouped about on the spacious lawn, welcoming their new master, who has incidentally introduced his intended bride. Then like a bombshell the villain comes forward and announces the fact that the lord and master is a bally, blooming imposter—a man without a name. He has the real evidence in his pocket, having gone to a monastery in Switzerland to snatch the death certificate from the records—the certificate of the demise of the young man's father. It is all very "in-tri-kut" and the director strives to make it resemble an old-time thriller with but little success. A faint note of suspense is measured out when a co-worker in crime endeavors to steal the crown jewels of England from the tower of London bridge.

Then the disciples of right and wrong all bob up together in Switzerland, the arch-plotter to spend his ill-gotten gains, the hero to establish his claims and scatter the hokum in his life. He finds the record missing, but locates the villain on a nearby road. And a good fight is put over before virtue finds its reward. Coincidence is a healthy factor in the picture and the various sequences are so far fetched and crude that the picture fails to develop a single note of appealing quality. The story is hopelessly of the past and will only interest those people who revel in hectic conflict as furnished by Drury Lane. But there isn't a horse race or a huge fire to give it a saving grace. Another thing the people who interpret the feature are, for the most part, miscast. There is nothing of English deportment or characerization present, although Thomas W. Ross as the "bounder" comes the closest. His is the only consistent work in the offering. "The Fatal Hour" carries some good backgrounds, but a picture has to have something besides atmosphere to get over these days. It is melodramatic clap-trap and nothing else.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Fatal Hour," an adaptation of the Drury Lane melodrama of the same name by Cecil Raleigh, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. This is a story of English society, of social climbers, of a "bounder" who, being ostracized by those with whom he would associate, is determined to exact revenge. And this revenge shapes itself into discrediting the name of an heir to the nobility.

Callender, the "bounder" in question, has succeeded in stealing the record of the death of Nigel Villier's father, thus establishing that the young man doesn't have any claim to a title or to the estate. The action resolves itself into the determination of Nigel Villiers to prove his inheritance, which he does after a series of highly dramatic scenes. Callender reaps a rich harvest of successful plotting but the climax shows right triumphing over wrong. The story is crowded with surprises which are brought forward in scenes which are rich in atmosphere. Metro has provided a good cast which includes Wilfred Lytell and Thomas W. Ross.

PROGRAM READER

He was a young English aristocrat who had inherited a title. And the moment he brought his fiancee to the manor and introduced her to the various retainers, his humiliation was complete. Why? Well an enemy had schemed to discredit him and call him an impostor and a man without a name. So the aristocrat was forced to erase the stigma against him. This is the brief outline of "The Fatal Hour," the Metro picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with a cast that includes Wilfred Lytell and Thomas W. Ross. The feature is an adaptation of the Drury Lane melodrama of the same name of Cecil Raleigh. It offers an interesting hour. Don't miss it.

"EYES OF THE HEART"
(Realart)

Mary Miles Minter Scores in Story of Pathos and Sentiment

WHILE there is not much reality about "Eyes of the Heart," an adaptation of Dana Burnet's story, "Blindness," and it develops in quie a "picturey" fashion, still there is enough sound ingredients to make it acceptable anywhere as worth while screen fare. Particularly strong is it in such elements as pathos and heart appeal—elements by the way which are not sugar-coated to excess. Stories of blind heroes have been fairly successful because of the sympathetic appeal. Now one is presented that offers a blind heroine—which of course makes it doubly effective in creating sympathy. But the story is quite unsatisfactory because the sequences are glossed over and conclusions are jumped at too quickly.

The girl recovers her sight as it is always done in fiction and the development of the character is not always logical. The author or director, or both, have failed to take into consideration the fact that blind people become unduly sensitive—that their ears and fingers would take impressions and keep them—that they are in fact blessed with "second sight" as compensation for their blindness. Yet a party of crooks are able to color her world and make her believe that she is living in a sort of dream land. A noisy, sordid alley is pictured to her as the loveliest street in the world. Not being deaf she would surely gather the correct impression. When her sight is restored the shock of seeing things misrepresented causes a shock which affects her mind. But a title is offered which states that good rest and care will bring about a restoration.

Her gifted fingers are used by an unscrupulous crook to open a safe under the idea that it will give her lover his freedom. When the story is finished an anti-climax is introduced which shows the entire party finding health and regeneration in the country. Miss Minter gives a wonderfully effective portrayal of the blind girl, though her moments when she loses her mind lack keen understanding. Her ability to appear blind by staring into space is gripping in its poignant appeal. There is an abundant note of humor provided by Burton Law as a Jewish figure. It is one of the finest comedy character sketches ever flashed on the screen. The other players are acceptable. The technical side of the picture is well taken care of in matter of lighting and backgrounds. The story would appear more genuine if not so much was taken for granted.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mary Miles Minter is the star of "Eyes of the Heart," the Realart picture which comes to the ———— next ————. This is an adaptation of the story, "Blindness," by Dana Burnet, and it affords Miss Minter ample opportunity to display her appealing charm and talent. The story is particularly strong in the elements of pathos and heart interest since its characterization is based upon unselfish devotion. Laura, the part interpreted by the star, is a blind girl who lives with a company of crooks in a sordid environment. Her friends paint the atmosphere in glowing colors and she becomes disillusioned when an operation restores her sight—disillusioned over the white lies which have been told her and the fact that her friends have misrepresented themselves.

Her lover has been arrested and she entertains the nefarious scheme of a crook to open a safe through her gifted fingers, not knowing that she has been engaged in an unworthy enterprise. In the end virtue finds its reward and the crooks are on the road to reformation. The picture carries a strong human note and reveals flashes of rare humor—flashes which are brought forward through Burton Law's keen sense of characterization. The others in the cast also render capable performances.

PROGRAM READER

She had been blind since infancy and she lived in a sordid neighborhood with a party of crooks. They had misrepresented things to her and painted themselves and the drab atmosphere in glowing colors. Then one day her sight was restored and the shock of the realities affected her mind. But she learned to appreciate her friends who had acted for the best. This is the outline of "Eyes of the Heart," the Mary Miles Minter picture which comes to the ———— next ————. It is an adaptation of the story, "Blindness," by Dana Burnet, and is rich in heart interest, pathos, humor, and sentiment. Miss Minter gives a touching performance and her support is entirely praiseworthy.

SUGGESTIONS

You can emphasize the theme and characterization for this picture. Bring out that it is poignant with pathos and heart interest. Stress the fact that Miss Minter gives one of the most touching portrayals of her career. Play up the title. Bring out that it details the adventures of a blind girl who is an associate of a party of crooks. Play up the other members of the cast. Make use of the title in a teaser campaign. The Minter pictures are certainly getting over, so you haven't got to go to any labor in dwelling upon their worth. Simply bring out that Mary Miles Minter comes to the ———— in a picture of youth and sentiment. But by all means stress its appealing pathos.

"A BEGGAR IN PURPLE"
(Edgar Lewis—Pathe)

Good Production Given Average Story

IN "A Beggar in Purple" Edgar Lewis has the second story from the pen of Andrew Soutar, his previous contribution being "Other Men's Shoes."

Mr. Lewis has given the feature a splendid production, but his story material is not new and there has been little ingenuity in developing incident that would compensate for lack of originality in the plot. The continuity is also considerably at fault. In sequences the picture has a very considerable appeal. Other scenes, however, are valueless as entertainment and serve no purpose except to provide footage.

The story, however, has heart interest and dramatic moments and a pleasing romance.

It is a touching moment, indeed, as the feature opens to witness the scenes in which a little boy in deep despair goes to a wealthy broker to beg for work in order that he might obtain the money necessary to save his dying mother.

He is cast out by the broker, is stoned by his young son and in his deep dejection goes home to see his mother die and to vow vengeance over her grave—a strong introduction.

Eighteen years afterwards the hero is shown as a leader in the business world fighting his way through every obstacle until his ambition is fulfilled—the breaking of his enemy in the stock market.

The latter scenes are very dramatic and carry a big punch, but the story drags and loses interest from then until the finish, the hero becoming blind.

Edgar Lewis has selected a splendid cast for the principal roles, that of Leonard C. Shunway standing out as a very clever portrayal of a rather difficult part.

But we must not forget to mention that the touches Mr. Lewis has given to the picture, bringing out the value of many scenes whether pathetic or dramatic, are well worth witnessing.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Beggar in Purple," the Edgar Lewis-Pathe photoplay announced as the feature attraction at the ———— theatre for ————, is an adaptation of the famous novel of the same name by Andrew Soutar, who also wrote "Other Men's Shoes," a previous Edgar Lewis success.

It is a story of business men, methods and morals and depicts the sorrow and happiness in the life of a man who was mad for money and revenge. This man had dedicated his life to making another man pay who had done him a wrong. In his desire to obtain his revenge he had fought his way through every obstacle and had won.

But with the fulfillment of his ambition came the revelation that the girl he loved was marrying him for his money and had given her heart to another— to his enemy.

Success, wealth and power were his, but without love he was only a beggar in purple.

Then misfortune came to him and he found a true love that worked a miracle and brought the first real happiness and content he had ever known.

The picture is well produced, is grippping and virile in theme and has been given the splendid support of Leonard C. Shumway, Ruth King, Betty Brice, Charles Arling, Stanhope Wheatcroft and others.

PROGRAM READER

"I swore then that some day, somewhere, somehow, I'd make you pay, and I've done it in the only way it would touch your rotten soul. I've made you a beggar." Thus spoke John Hargrave who had worked and slaved for eighteen years and now had broken his enemy.

Hargrave is the hero in "A Beggar in Purple," the Edgar Lewis-Pathe photoplay which will be shown at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

It has a gripping and virile theme and is an adaptation of the novel by Andrew Soutar, author of the previous Edgar Lewis success, "Other Men's Shoes."

The story deals with men, money and morals and proves that honest, homely virtue is after all the secret of real success and happiness.

The hero in his determination to have his revenge on the men who had been responsible for his mother's death because they had refused him the little help he wanted to work for to save his mother's life had overcome all obstacles, and tasted the bitter joys of vengeance.

But then he found that he had lost love, and, without love, even a king is only a beggar in purple.

The picture is well produced and has a splendid cast.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture might be termed a good average production. Although its story is rather trite it has appealing value and should interest.

Play up the name of Edgar Lewis and mention the fact that he is one of our prominent producers and that he has given this picture a splendid production.

The locale is laid in the small town and the big city and brings in the labor situation again with its threatened strikes and unsettled conditions.

There are also some very strong scenes in and about a broker's office which could be played up to good advantage.

"HONOR BOUND"
(Universal)

Frank Mayo Has Good Material in This One

"HONOR BOUND" is one of the best productions Frank Mayo has ever produced for Universal.

The story which was written by Jacques Jaccard, who also acted as director, has romance, heart interest and dramatic moments and these ingredients are proportioned in such a way that interest is aroused from start to finish.

Attention to detail, both in the arrangement of sets and the selection of exteriors, is another important factor in the production of this feature for which Jaccard should be given credit.

This is especially true when the scenes shift to the tropical regions where naturalness abounds.

In the latter scenes Frank Mayo does some of the best acting of his career, injecting plenty of action into a duel with swords which he has with a native.

The duel is well worth witnessing and shows that the participants know how to handle these weapons and build up the action to a strong dramatic climax.

The star is supported by a strong cast, Edward Coxen giving a splendid portrayal of the "heavy," and Dagmar Godowsky as a wild native girl.

The story pictures the primitive passions as they flourish in the tropics and points out the fact that the white man who goes there with a weak will is bound to succumb to its temptations.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A colorful story of society and life in the tropics with a fine flavor of romance is offered in "Honor Bound," the Universal feature which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— starring Frank Mayo. Prominent in his support are such favorite players as Edward Coxen and Dagmar Godowsky. The action pilots the characters through series of startling adventures which are presented with full emphasis placed upon their suspensive values. It is a picture of primitive passion as flourishes in the tropics. Unrequited love and pride are the dominant factors which guide the temperaments of the characters.

The tropical sun and climate is too much for one who has not the strength to overcome his temptations. He says to his rescuers that "it isn't the work that makes living so hard here, it's the lack of pretty women—" Then Crash! Through the hatch of the yacht drops a startled beauty like a naked forest nymph. It is this primitive native who supplies the romantic conflict. "Honor Bound" is a picture which moves with plenty of vigor and vitality and color and is rich in attractive backgrounds and atmosphere. The acting is quite on a par with the settings. Jacques Jaccard wrote and directed the feature.

PROGRAM READER

How would you like to be cruising through the tropics and discover a native girl dropping through the hatchway of your yacht, just after you had heard your friend declare that what he missed were pretty women. You would naturally wonder how she came aboard—who she was, and whether you might fall in love with her. This scene is one of the many which will startle the spectator because of the abundant thrills and the picturesque action. The feature is "Honor Bound" and it comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Frank Mayo and a cast that includes Edward Coxen and Dagmar Godowsky. The picture might be called a colorful romantic drama of life and adventure in the tropics. It offers a very interesting hour.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been playing the Frank Mayo pictures for Universal and found them well liked by your audiences, then go after his latest, "Honor Bound," and present it at your theatre. He has gained quite a following and the spectator has come to expect a full evening's entertainment whenever he makes his appearance. Bring out that "Honor Bound" is a worthy successor to its forerunners. Tell that it offers a bizarre tale of love, romance and passion in the tropics. Emphasize the picturesque scenery. Distribute stills so that your crowd will be attracted to it. Make use of the title. And catch lines should be exploited around the title. Play up Edward Coxen and Dagmar Godowsky. Your steady patrons will remember the name of the former who is one of the pioneer stars of the screen.

CATCH LINES

"It isn't the hard work that makes living so hard here, it's the lack of pretty women." This was the expression of the young ne'er-do-well who had left civilization behind. What happened? See "Honor Bound."

"An artificial story holds it back."—M. P. News.

PEACEFUL VALLEY (KANE-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY..OCT. 23
"Humorous incident, rustic settings and Charles Ray—enough."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Registered a big hit. A real Ray triumph. Audiences applaud enthusiastically."

PEDDLER OF LIES, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO (MAR. 1).....JAN. 31
"Good production of mechanical and unreal plot."—M. P. News.

PERFECT WOMAN, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE.....AUG. 7
"Constance Talmadge has had better ones than this naive and single-track story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average picture. Played to average business for two days. Pleased the admirers of Constance Talmadge." "Fine picture. Drew average crowds." "This is a good picture and well liked. Drew more than average crowds." "Good business. Usual Talmadge type. Rather clever." "Picture went very big. Drew well every day and was well done in the opinion of many patrons of the theatre." "Held up good for week run. Audiences liked it. Constance always a surefire attraction at this house." "Consider this the star's best. She is popular here and I played to capacity throughout week. A decided improvement on her late pictures." "It is hard to understand the story and the cold beauty of the star does not help it much. Fair business." "Great picture. Star well liked. Played two days to big business."

PREY, THE (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE.....OCT. 9
"Alice Joyce has highly involved story here."—M. P. News

"Slight story, but entertaining incident, in circus picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibit Comment—"Great picture. Turned them away at night."

PRICE OF REDEMPTION, THE (METRO) BERT LYTELL.....OCT. 2
"Lytell has hectic melodrama and acting opportunity here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big houses first two days. Rest of week fair." "Fine picture which brought good box-office receipts." "A splendid picture. Thrilling. Fine acting. By far the best work Bert Lytell has done." "Had a big opening and average crowds during the rest of week. Fair as a picture." (East.)

RED LANE, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....JULY 17
"A pleasing picture which should interest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good picture to big business for one day."

RIGHT TO LOVE, THE (FITZMAURICE PRODUCTION-PARAMOUNT) MAE MURRAY-DAVID POWELL.....SEPT. 4
"Worthy successor to "On With the Dance."—M. P. News
"Played it two days to big and average business." "Very fine picture. Did big business. Playing second week." "Did not do as well in its first week as 'On With the Dance.' Will probably only run two weeks." "Second week's business complete flop. Attractions failed to please." "Ordinary story, but drew good houses. Picture well produced."

ROSE OF NOME (FOX) GLADYS BROCKWELL.....AUG. 7
"Alaskan picture holds the interest, but is not big."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleasing picture. Box office returns fair."

ROUND UP, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT).....SEPT. 18
"Colorful western with Fatty Arbuckle as feature star."—M. N. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very disappointing and tame. Just like hundreds of other Westerns. Those who liked Westerns didn't mind it very much—but they certainly didn't like it. Box-office receipts good, because they wanted to see Fatty in a five-reeler." Fairly good picture, but business not exceptionally good, due largely to the fact that the star has yet to make his reputation as the principal in a feature picture, His fame rests only upon his work in comedy." "This is an average picture but seemed to please the audience."

SECRET GIFT, THE (UNIVERSAL) KOHLMAR-CHRISTIANS....SEPT. 18
"A pretty story with appealing value."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Unusual picture, which brought more than usual business."

"Picture offers rich entertainment in every department."—M. P. News.

SHIPWRECKED AMONG CANNIBALS (UNIVERSAL) SOUTH SEA ISLANDERS.....JULY 10
"A good production which should interest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture was a riot and a fine box-office attraction." "Only average business. Cannibals do not appeal to women." "Monotonous stuff. Plainly evident most of it staged. Ran week to fair business." "The best box office attraction yet, but it seemed to be a rather poor audience picture." "This is very entertaining and seemed to draw well."

SILENT BARRIER, THE (TRACY-GIBRALTAR-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....AUG. 7
"Obvious story has a good climax and scenic backgrounds."—M. P. News.

SICK ABED (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WALLACE REID.....JULY 3
"This lively comedy is a sure laugh-provoker."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An excellent picture which pleased my patrons and gave splendid satisfaction. Played it one week to extra big business every day." "Feature offers Reid one of his best roles this season, and he takes advantage of the many opportunities for funmaking. Bebe Daniels shows real star qualities in the principal supporting role. The picture is well staged and acted and the patrons liked it." "Good—crowded houses all opening day with hot weather." "A regular standard feature. Three days to good business." "This picture pleased in an average way. It did big business for three days, however."

SINS OF ROSANNE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ETHEL CLAYTON.....OCT. 23

"Dream ending does not save it from being hopelessly tragic."—M. P. News.

SKYWAYMAN, THE (FOX) LIEUT. LOCKLEAR.....SEPT. 11
"Slight story is excuse for average 'plane stunts."—M. P. News.

Saturday Tom Mix in "The Untamed" replaced it. Killing of aviator at

"Normand in kind of role which made her famous."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Just a fair picture to average business for three days." "A good picture to excellent business for one week." "This one was only a fair picture and a fair box-office attraction." "Great picture. Went big." "Good picture. The crowds apparently agree, for they certainly made the box office thermometer mount."

Good box office attraction." "The picture did not bring the usual numbers to the theatre. It is regarded by many as too commonplace." "This is a good feature and we had fine business while it was showing."

VILLAGE SLEUTH, THE (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) CHARLES RAY.....SEPT. 25
"Ray scores again as country yokel."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best pictures Ray has played in. This is a regular picture and is playing to big business right along." "Played it one week to big business one day and average six." Consensus—"Good picture, good puller."

WHAT'S YOUR HURRY (PARAMOUNT) WALLACE REID.....AUG. 28
"Wally Reid and motor truck shine in this one."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good production to extra big and big business for two days." "The best picture Reid has turned out this year. Just packed them in. Looks like some fine advertising was slipped over in this one for a certain brand of truck. Local dealers capitalized on it by putting one of the trucks on the street with mammoth signs on it informing the public that we would show them what the brutes could do." "Up to the usual Wallace Reid standard and drew big crowds."

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD'S TRIUMPH
AN ALLURING LOVE STORY OF THE GREAT NORTHWEST

Maurice Tourneur

I have shipped to our branches today a picture that has the sweep of action of "The Birth of a Nation"; a picture such as I have longed for all summer and fall to bear the imprint of Associated Producers; a picture so fine, so big, so powerfully dramatic that it made a group of hardened picture people who watched it gasp for breath.

This picture is Maurice Tourneur's "The Last of the Mohicans," a mighty production. So sure am I of its power and appeal that I make the assertion that if any exhibitor holding a contract now for this production gave up his contract we could sell him over again for fifty percent higher rental than he is now paying for it.

The FORBIDDEN THING

By Mary Mears

Personally directed by Mr. Dwan

Allan Dwan's first production for Associated Producers is an intriguing love story—the story of a girl whose faith in the man she loved was so strong that it survived his marriage to another woman and her union with another man.

In "The Forbidden Thing" Mr. Dwan clinches the hold upon exhibitor confidence that he gained in previous successes. It is the most remarkable accomplishment to date of a producer who is able to coin box office dollars by the depth of his human vision.

Von Stroheim again!
2½ times as much—

HERE, in a small part of Universal City, California, you see a large part of Monte Carlo, Monaco, now being re-created by the magic of Von Stroheim. In the exact center of the picture stands the Café de Paris—opposite, the famous Casino with its towers—and, almost hidden by the latter, the equally well-known Hotel de Paris. In the lower left-hand corner you see, one after another, some of the minor sets, beginning with the Grand Staircase—and a score of buildings and shops made necessary by this huge production. Never has there been another photoplay with such amazing detail, nor has the difference between European and American morals been half so dramatically portrayed. Such a picture will cost you more than usual, but it will also net you more. And your theatre will be the better for it.

"Capacity houses every day and our fifth Day as big as our Opening"

From Butte, Montana—a long way from Paris—comes this testimonial as to the pulling power of "THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY." Paul de Mordaunt, Manager of the Ansonia, writes:

"I am taking this opportunity of advising you as to the successful run we enjoyed with your attraction, 'THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY.'

"We opened with this feature on Saturday, September 25th for a four-day engagement—and played to capacity houses every day against very strong competition.

"In fact, our fourth day's business was so great that we deemed it advisable to hold it for another day—and found that our fifth day's business was practically as big as our opening.

"It is only upon rare occasions that we think it necessary to write an exchange regarding a production, but we found that 'THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY' was such an extraordinary attraction both from a box-office standpoint and in pleasing qualities, that we feel it is no more than right that you should know about the record-smashing run it enjoyed in our theatre."

MAN O'WAR'S VICTORY

IT has broken records everywhere at its premier at the Strand in New York and Brooklyn, Grauman's in Los Angeles, Adams in Detroit, Walnut in Cincinnati, Strand in Dayton, America in Denver—the country over.

For it is the greatest motion picture ever made—far more than the record of the most notable horse race in history—a thrilling, pulsing, dramatic spectacle that will bring cheers from every man, woman and child.

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC.

The New York Times.

THE SCREEN

When Edward Muybridge, more than forty years ago, arranged a battery of twenty-four cameras so that their plates would be exposed as a horse ran in front of them, and thereby obtained the first photographic record of the various positions of a running animal, he did not know that in this year 1920 the great Sir Barton and the greater Man o' War would race on the Windsor track in Canada and that fourteen motion picture cameras, developed largely as a result of his experiment, would record the exciting contest for spectators in the Strand Theatre on Broadway and in other theatres all over the world. It does not seem going too far to say that an epoch of motion picture history is marked by Muybridge's twenty-four plates and the 2,000 feet of film at the Strand this week.

But popular interest in "The Race of the Age," as the picture is called, will not be in its historical significance but in the picture itself, and in comparison with it most movie melodramas with their labored efforts to thrill will seem like so much blank and wasted film. Those who see "The Race of the Age" will have many of the sensations of those who went to the Windsor track, and they will see the race itself better than many who were there, for few, if any, seats offered the clear and continuous view of the horses that has been obtained by the cameras, whose separate reels have been assembled in one length of film.

The high, exciting moment of the picture comes when the two horses are shown making the complete circuit of the course. The cameras within the circle followed them around, so that one may see them as they pull apart and draw together in their dash for the finish line. And the pictures are so distinct that the movements of their legs, their rhythmically yet rapidly changing positions, and the figures of the jockeys on their backs are at all times clearly visible. It is this scene that makes "The Race of the Age" a masterpiece of motion picture work. It was this scene that filled the Strand with shouts yesterday afternoon and gave every one the impulse to leap to his feet.

The rest of the picture is not so exciting, though some of it has thrills, and most of it is interesting. Details of the preparation of the horses for the race are shown, there are good close-up views of the two thoroughbreds, and practically all of those associated with the race as owners, jockeys, trainers, judges and track workers are pictured. Some of the scenes are merely footage, used, no doubt, to pad the film so that it will be sufficiently long to be run as a "feature," but no one minds this much in a picture of such horses in such a race.

Additional interest is given to the film by pictures made with the slow-motion camera, which reduces speed to about one-eighth of normal, and so brings out the smoothness and grace of the racers and countless details of their movements missed by the unaided eye. The only regret is that there are not more of these slow-motion pictures in "The Race of the Age." There are only brief and inadequate bits of them, and they do not show the stride and steps of Man o' War as one would like to see them. Those who have used the slow-motion camera for this and other subjects do not seem to have realized its possibilities. They have not taken advantage of lighting and background to give their pictures the clearness and relief they should have, and they have photographed only a few of the almost limitless number of available subjects.

All this, however, is more or less beside the point now because the circumstances of the race between Sir Barton and Man o' War probably restricted the use of the slow-motion camera, and, though one may regret that the picture does not include more slow-motion pictures, even if they could not have been made under the most advantageous conditions, there yet remains the race itself—and this is enough for any one.

The pictures were made under the direction of Major J. W. O'Mohoney for the Educational Films Corporation.

SUN-LIGHT ARC

The directors who are testifying to this statement are those who are most enthusiastic over their profession.

Just as directing is more than casting, so the harnessing of such a tremendous force as light is greater by far than the grinding of film.

In those screen successes that are netting thousands upon thousands of dollars in profits, "seeing it in the mind's eye as it will look on the screen" has been the determining factor.

And the biggest element has been and always will be—CORRECT LIGHTING.

SUN-LIGHT ARC

offers you a certain, inexhaustible supply of steady, highly actinic rays, under complete and instant control.

If you need Sun-Light and must use artificial light, in the studio or outside, use the lamps which alone give 100,000 candle power of pure photographic light, at a price approximately eighty per cent below the cost of other sources of light necessary to obtain the same results.

The New SUN-LIGHT ARC MOTOR GENERATOR units provide sufficient current to operate three Sun-Light arc lamps for an indefinite period or five Sun-Light arc lamps for a limited time.

With an equipment of SUN-LIGHT ARC lamps and SUN-LIGHT ARC Motor Generating unit you can have SUN-LIGHT WHEREVER, WHENEVER YOU WANT IT.

Put your Lighting and Power supply problems up to us. We will gladly help you solve them.

Dear Sir:-

With the forthcoming release of my latest production- "DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES" so near at hand, I feel I cannot let the opportunity pass without writing my appreciation of the invaluable assistance rendered me by your "SUN-LIGHT ARCS."

The Vitagraph Company consider this picture the greatest production they have owned since their entrance, many years ago, into the Motion Picture industry.

This is a very broad statement; made even more so by the fact that the greater part of the interior settings were photographed away from the studio. By this, I mean that we rented an ancient estate on Long Island with a large, empty house, furnishing the same throughout with appropriate antiques and furnishings, and photographing therein at least four-fifths of our interior scenes.

I may add this would not have been in any shape or manner possible without the valuable assistance of your SUN-LIGHT ARCS. I also wish to forcibly emphasize the fact that it was possible for me to obtain both inside and outside scenes, also daylight and nightlight effects, and with your concentrated mirror I procured many novel effects in shaded portions of the grounds outside.

I am willing to state with authority that with the aid of two of your SUN-LIGHT ARCS and other accessory lights, it is possible to take a picture without having recourse to any studio whatsoever.

The importance of this statement will be realized when one considers its relation toward keeping down one of the most serious items of overhead expense- that is, THE STUDIO-with its manifold expenses.

It seems to me that if other producers would take advantage of this fact, many pictures could be made at a great deal less cost, with a tremendous saving in both time and labor.

Again, I wish to thank you for your splendid co-operation which has helped make the wonderful success, "DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES," and, in conclusion, feel bound to remark that there are yet many additional lighting effects which can possibly be obtained through the medium of your remarkable lights.

With sincere appreciation, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

Tom Terriss

A SCREEN MIRACLE

NEAL HART'S SECOND BIG PICTURE SKYFIRE

A story of the Far North, in the region of the Northern Light. Neal Hart, in this picture, is the only person to successfully reproduce this wonderful effect on the screen

LEO WHITE'S NEW COMEDIES SURE TO KNOCK 'EM CUCKOO

Leo White, Pinnacle Comedy star, unquestionably has dealt the American public a joy haymaker.

Working on his second distinctively different comedy, Calumet productions, starring Mr. White, announce openly and with unqualified decision that Pinnacle Comedies are slated to stir the whole world.

Leo White is a type of funster that the film fans have not as yet had the supreme pleasure of seeing. His comedies contain absolutely new, electrifying comedy, a happy blend of high-class semi-slapstick, or, as Mr. White himself expresses it: "Slapstick with a reason."

Leo Hard Worker

Mr. White is an indefatigable worker. He radiates new ideas and electric spark gags. His stuff should go over with a rumble that will be heard from Argentina to Nova Scotia.

For the third comedy, a revolutionistic idea has been agreed upon that is certain to smash all precedents in comedies. The plan of action for the third comedy is so rare and sure-fire that it has been decided not to make any mention of it until the proper time, but the exchange men and exhibitors may rest assured that every Leo White comedy released will be a new idea, with a new star bound to set the world talking, and keep it murmuring for a long, long time.

Many hilariously funny situations are obtained from the Damfool Twin scheme, the twin falling for Leo's spontaneous line of action and creating a continuity of laughter.

Leo White said:

"The first comedy I made exceeded my wildest expectations. I hoped and worked, and I was always sure that I would give the people a knockout, but now I cannot, without apparent superegotism, tell you how successful we have been in making the first comedy.

Second Comedy Bearcat

"And when I say that the second comedy will surpass, at least in action and funny situations, the first, you may think I am over enthusiastic. But I am not. We have comedies, psychologically funny comedies, that FIT, just where the American people want them to fit, and STICK."

Ollie Moore, general manager of Calumet Productions, making the Leo White comedies, said:

"I am agreeably surprised. I anticipated real stuff from Leo White, but we have whirlwind stuff. Every comedy we send East will be a greater smash, all the way across the boards. I am completely sold that we have THE comedies."

"The Jazz Cafe"

Mr. White was in the midst of making his second comedy when this was written. A working title, "Jazz Cafe," has been selected. After finishing the second comedy, which should be about the first of November, Mr. White will rest for several days, taking Mr. Eagon and Mr. Martin with him into the mountains to frame the third comedy.

A possibility that the fourth comedy will be a riotous burlesque on some widely known play or opera is under consideration.

[STUDIO SALVE]

C. M. Giffin, the fast trotting studio manager for Pinnacle, wins the silk-lined bath tub with this one: Giff was caught with his fliv without gas and only 20 pennies to his name, 20 miles from L. A. He braces a garage man, gets 10 gals. without exploiting a cent, and gets in o. k. Heading for this item should be: "Giff comes home on his own gas."

WHADDYEMEANGAS?

Casey, the high voltage technical boss, reports that three electricians and two property men slept all night last week on the great cabaret set used in the second Pinnacle Comedy. Casey says the men were victims of environment; that they couldn't get away from the action of prohib. days.

TWOUPANDTHREEDOWN

NEAL HART FACES DEATH TO OBTAIN THIRD BIG PICTURE

The heart of Death Valley—a land of eternal waste that no man ever crossed and lived—will be the center of action in the third super production released by Pinnacle Productions, Inc., through Independent Films Association, featuring Neal Hart, outdoor star extraordinary.

A stupendous story of the colossal desert—a story never before told on the screen—a story in which Neal Hart will lead a sterling cast into the barrenness, where they will take their chances with fate, to make the greatest desert picture ever conceived of.

Neal Braves Fate

Neal Hart returned October 25 from the heart of Death Valley, full of enthusiasm over his third production. He had penetrated the very bowels of No Man's Land against the strongest opposition by his management, who feared for his safe return. None could persuade Mr. Hart to pass up Death Valley, where he found his great reward in unprecedented picture possibilities. He took the great chance of invading a country no white man ever crossed. He had made arrangements with the oldest and most cunning and crafty Indian guide in the West, and this Indian piloted Mr. Hart in and out of the jaws of death.

"I never consider myself in any danger or inconvenience when it is necessary to get something new for the exchange men and exhibitors," Neal said upon his return.

Gets "Something New"

"I realize the possibilities for something new in going into this land of mystery and death," Neal continued, "and will head the first picture company that has ever filmed the mystic wonders in the heart of Death Valley."

Neal Hart added that he, personally, guaranteed wonderful photography and scenes and action never before exemplified by the motion picture camera in his third great picture. Milton Moore, who photographed the miracle of showing the Aurora Borealis (or Northern Lights) in Mr. Hart's second super production, "Skyfire," will go with the expeditionary film forces into Death Valley to do the camera work in Mr. Hart's next wonder picture.

The troupe of actors and actresses to be used in the third Hart picture have all been carefully selected by Mr. Hart himself. Neal said that he used the utmost care in choosing his cast, for the reason that they must all know the chances they are taking by penetrating Death Valley, and further that they must be physically able to stand up against Death Valley, which means living by a small water hole, in a camp that has no conveniences, and every chance that a false step will be the end.

OUR "CUPID" PICKETT SIGNS UP FOR LIFE

Ingram Bragg Pickett, better known to the film hounds of Hollywood as "Cupid," who has been playing some important character bits in Pinnacle Comedies as "the big bird," was married last week to "the girl of his dreams," Miss Ray Violette Gwin, Los Angeles society girl. "Cupid" will go right on making comedies for Pinnacle and says he expects to get more laughs than ever now.

RICHARD ROBERTSON DIRECTOR OF EXPLOITATION

VOL. 2 No. 1. EXPLOITATION SECTION

A WORM--AND ITS UNBELIEVABLE TURNING

The Most Despised Factor in the Film Industry Has Become Its Very Salvation, Thanks to Exhibitor Support

IMPORTANT—The independent demand NOW is amazing. Think what it WILL be! The Association has studied, tabulated, analyzed—and is now a wide open door of invitation to all who can produce films! Write for facts and figures.

IF ANYONE had told you a few years ago that the reforms so badly needed in the film industry were destined to come about through the growth and development of the STATE RIGHT FIELD, you would have laughed with a loud and raucous snort.

State righters were then hanging on by their toe-nails, glad of the crumbs that fell to them in the way of occasional bookings.

The majority of them operated with desk room only, and many traveled about the country like peddlers, carrying film and paper along like packs on their backs.

The only reason theatre men patronized the independent dealer was to get a lower rental price than the program exchange would make.

Some of the independent dealers fell by the wayside, while others, adding to their stock of state right pictures, remained in business and opened offices. Outside of the usual supply of paper and accessories, no exploitation service was even thought of, much less practiced. They bought pictures just as cheaply as possible.

The whole result, as everybody knows, was to cheapen the independent market and discourage production. No producer was foolhardy enough to put good money into a picture or a series of pictures built especially for the state right field, because he well knew he would find it next to impossible to get out of that field a profit that would warrant him in making more pictures. It was even doubtful if he would be able to get his money back.

So the independent market languished.

No systematic exploitation—no releasing series on which to build cumulative advertising force—no regular source of production supply—only cheap, inferior pictures, most of which were the rejected waste product of the program people—meager bookings.

However, the exchange men continued their uphill fight. They stuck it out—or, at least, the best ones did.

Gradually they became established in their territories. And the exhibitors began to realize that there were a great many business advantages to be had in dealing with the state right exchange man who had become a fixture in his territory, knew conditions, was always able to estimate FAIR RENTAL PRICES for every locality, and was able to make very promptly all adjustments growing out of faulty service or errors of any sort, being the proprietor of his own business and lord high executioner of the check book.

Theatre men are today wide awake to these business advantages which the independent exchanges offer.

Their increasing demands for more and more attractions from the state right dealers have encouraged the latter to buy better and bigger productions.

Today the independent exchanges are paying more than ever before for pictures of merit and assured box office value.

Production for the independent market has naturally taken a most decided spurt. Money is pouring into the coffers of producers on the west coast, and is going into the manufacture of films that will enjoy prompt and profitable release throughout the United States and Canada and in the foreign field.

Thus has come about the BIG CHANGE that has brought to the exhibitors the most efficient and profitable film service they have ever been able to get, together with freedom from the evils and abuses of the program companies.

It has brought to the independent exchange man increasing financial reward for his efforts, as a result of which you will find in each territory a lineup of square-shooting, energetic, thoroughly responsible fellows, bosses of their own complete and well equipped exchanges, who possess a first-name acquaintance with their exhibitor friends, and enjoy the confidence and respect of the business world.

THESE INDEPENDENTS ARE DOING THE BIG FILM BUSINESS OF TODAY.

The independent market, with its quick cash turnover and efficient buying and selling methods, gives to the producer an immediate outlet and a reward in keeping with quality. To the exhibitor it gives a direct, effective service and film rentals that are shorn of any share of the enormous distribution overhead which the program exchanges have always had to collect from the theatres.

The exhibitor gets a better picture at a lower price.

The developments now in progress in the independent field are of vital interest because they point the way to the evolution and salvation of the film industry.

WHO'S WHO AMONG THE INDEPENDENTS

If you should be journeying through any part of Oklahoma, Arkansas or Texas and should happen to ask some theatre man to tell you about Lou Pellerin, he could do it in three words—"HE KEEPS FAITH."

L. T. PELLERIN

"Pell" didn't gain that highest of all ratings in a week, or a month, or a year. He got it by telling 'em, year after year, the plain, unvarnished truth about the pictures he sold 'em—when they were good and when they were rotten. He got it by getting the films to 'em on time and in good shape. He got it by quoting right prices. He got it by putting himself in the other fellow's shoes—and acting accordingly.

Exhibitors go out of their way to do business with L. T. Pellerin.

He is the head of the R. D. Lewis Film Co., with headquarters at Dallas, Texas, and branches at Oklahoma City, Okla., and Little Rock, Ark.

EXCHANGES IN TWO TERRITORIES SIGN PINNACLE COMEDIES

Franchises for distribution of Pinnacle Comedies, starring Leo White, have been closed this week with Reiben Film Corporation, of New York City, and Standard Film Corporation, of Kansas City, Mo.

These Comedies will be released, beginning December 1st and every two weeks thereafter. The first release will be "RAZZIN' THE JAZZ."

EDDY ECKELS

He planned and organized the Independent Films Association, which today has its distributing branches in every section of the country, and offers immediate release to the producer of high class films.

He has been a dynamic factor in the Big Change which has come about in the independent field.

He has inspired the production of bigger and better pictures for the state right exchanges by showing that such pictures could be handled with profit to all concerned .

He believes that through the independent movement, film production and distribution can be placed forever on the basis of sanity and sound business principle.

Speaking of Whitman Bennett's presentation of

LIONEL
BARRYMORE

What the Newspapers Say:

SHOWS GREAT GENIUS

Lionel Barrymore scored another triumph at the New York Strand in 'The Devil's Garden.' It is a powerful adaptation of W. B. Maxwell's novel. Mr. Barrymore's genius in actually 'living' the part he plays on the screen is more evident than ever in this picture. His remarkable eyes play a big part in insuring the hold he has on his audience. The supporting cast is excellent."—New York Telegram.

CREATES NEW CHARACTER

"A new character—as great as any of his stage roles—is created by Lionel Barrymore in 'The Devil's Garden.' In his emphasis of the personality lies the strength of the picture. There is also the melodrama—a torrent of violence. The character is like no other that he has ever done. The story itself is dramatic—a sort of 'La Tosca' theme in an 'Esther Waters' setting. But its real reason for being filmed is Lionel Barrymore."—New York Globe.

PICTURE WELL DONE

TENSE DRAMATIC ACTION

STRONG AND STRIKING

"It is strong meat from the striking novel by W. B. Maxwell, just the kind to enable Barrymore to show his unusual powers in making it suitable for public digestion."—New York Sun.

SPLENDIDLY HANDLED

"The screen version is better than the novel and better than the stage play, because of the splendid way in which it has been handled. Great credit belongs to the scenario writer, the director and actors for leaving the characters as they were—of the earth earthy, with nothing suggestive of a celluloid finish. Lionel Barrymore's portrayal of the chief character is superb. The supporting cast is excellent. It is a splendid picture."—New York Tribune.

STRONG CHARACTER ACTING

"Lionel Barrymore is seen in a role that opens the way to his usual strong character acting."—New York World.

REMARKABLE—POWERFUL

"The play moves powerfully to a logical end, aided by Barrymore's remarkable acting."—New York Herald.

CONVINCING AND TERRIFYING

"Lionel Barrymore makes his characterization convincing and terrifying. The supporting cast is good."—New York Telegraph.

ROLE OF SUPERMAN

"Mr. Barrymore is, as usual, a faithful portrayer of the role of superman. Doris Rankin does some fine acting and Mae McAvoy does her bit well."—New York News.

Graphic and Vivid"

Motion Picture News

in an adaptation of
W. B. Maxwell's novel

"The Devil's Garden"

What the Trade Experts Say:

A GRIPPING OFFERING

"Maxwell's story is an exceedingly vivid document. The author has something to say. What is said in the book is well emphasized in the picture. And the result is a gripping offering.

"The action is told in terms of graphic scenes and builds a deal of cumulative suspense because of its correct tempo and the ability of the players to play in character. Mr. Barrymore makes the role of Dale a vivid study. Bennett has substituted startling action for words."—Motion Picture News.

DOES SPLENDID WORK

"Lionel Barrymore does splendid work. The story has been given a careful and more than deservingly good production. You can promise your patrons an unusual bit of acting and an unusually artistic production."—Wids.

A MIRROR OF LIFE

"A frank and vivid presentation of a daring bit of realistic screen literature, of a high order of merit. A variant from the conventional. It mirrors life—told boldly and realistically, with clearly drawn human characters. The story has been most skillfully developed, creating considerable suspense. Lionel Barrymore makes William Dale a striking character."—Exhibitors Herald.

A VIVID PICTURE

"A vivid showing of the conflict of determined human will with the laws of society and those which guide the universe itself. Mr. Bennett has held to the mood of 'The Devil's Garden' with fidelity and treated the entire subject with rare good taste.

"The performance of Lionel Barrymore is characteristic of one who is a master of his art. He lives up to all the possibilities and responsibilities of his role. It is safe to say that his performance in 'The Devil's Garden' can be ranked among his best in skill, power and influence.

"As shown at the Strand theatre, 'The Devil's Garden' makes a general impression of excellence in all departments of craftsmanship."—Moving Picture World.

EXTRAORDINARILY REALISTIC

"'The Devil's Garden' follows faithfully the plot of W. B. Maxwell's startling work of fiction in vivid detail. It is an extraordinarily realistic study of human passions unleashed and running riot. The picture is beautifully produced, admirably acted, spectacular in the extreme.

"The points of appeal are the emotional stress, physical lure of feminine charms, the conflicting forces of love, hatred and revenge, with well sustained suspense dominating the story.

"Lionel Barrymore lives up to his reputation as an artist of the first rank. His impersonation of William Dale is impressive."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

A Big Special Feature
5 Parts 5

It's a Mack Sennett production.

It has all the fun and all the thrills of the Sennett comedies.

It has the famous Sennett beauties.

But it's more than a slapstick.
It's real satire.

It shows human life as it is, with its fads and foibles.

It does it in a way that makes you see yourself as others see you.

It does it in a way that makes them all laugh.

Supply and Demand

An over supply tends to lower prices,—an under supply tends to increase them. To keep his prices up the exhibitor will do well to keep his seats filled.

The RITCHEY poster is definitely designed and executed to do just that. Whether the prices shall be raised when the demand for admissions is greater than the room for patrons, is entirely up to the exhibitor,—but selling more tickets than there are seats is up to us,—and actual experience has demonstrated our ability to do it.

Price raising in times of general retrenchment is a mighty ticklish matter,—but if the possessor of a half filled auditorium cannot afford to raise his prices, he can even less afford to lower them. He is between the devil and the deep blue sea,—but there remains one, and only one way of escape.

Through the increased use of RITCHEY posters!

VOL. XXII NOVEMBER 22, 1920 No. XXII

Let's Have More Light

OUR recent editorial on "The Sales Managers' Opportunity"—in which we asked why the small theatre paid a film rental of upwards of 35% of its gross receipts as against an average for all theatres of 11% or thereabouts—draws forth a reply from Sales Manager A. Lichtman.

It is a candid and informative statement worth reading.

Mr. Lichtman, admitting the wide inequalities that exist, says they are largely due to exhibitor competition or non-competition.

To quote:

"Exhibitors who control their communities, when dealing with a distributor who has no basis of film rental charge, will generally underpay.

"On the other hand, where keen competition exists, the distributor dealing without basic values will take advantage of the situation and sell his product to the highest bidder."

Very true.

We know of two cities in the Middle West, near each other, where first-run prices have differed as much as $1,000.00 against $150.00.

Mr. Lichtman tells how his company is endeavoring to establish a basic value on each picture by "trying it out on the dog" (to borrow an old theatrical phrase); that is, giving the picture a pre-release drawing test in several towns.

A progressive idea, provided small as well as large towns are selected, provided they are representative of our widely different sections and provided the pictures are not circused with excessive advertising.

Is not, however, this factor of exhibitor competition versus exhibitor non-competition the biggest immediate cause of inequitable film rentals; and isn't the distributor with good basic values also at the mercy of this same situation?

We know this, that where a territory is closed by an exhibitor and where that exhibitor is out of sympathy with and has no real knowledge of the cost and need of better pictures, he is pretty certain to force prices down too far. And when he does so the burden is shifted and placed excessively upon the shoulders of the helpless exhibitor elsewhere.

It seems to us that exhibitors who pay the upwards of 35% film rental had best begin to investigate some brother exhibitors instead of the distributors. We make this recommendation to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association.

We do not agree with Mr. Lichtman that people go to vaudeville on account of the picture feature: We believe it is the other way around. And we don't believe the two audiences will ever mix.

Nor do we altogether agree that the big theatre, making lots of money, deserves a low picture rental because of its heavy real estate and other overhead.

But we thank him for his intelligent article; and we ask for more from others.

We might add that our sole interest in getting more light on this important subject lies with the inequitable rental burden borne by the small, detached theatre—a problem that heavily concerns the interest of the entire industry.

"Better Music?"—We'll Say So

WE recorded recently our belief that the picture theatre would soon add to its bill such operatic stars as Galli-Curci.

We did not know that Thomas D. Soriero had already featured Schumann-Heinck, Fritz Kreisler and the Boston Symphony at his Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass.; and that he expects to add Galli-Curci and John McCormack to his concert list.

Mr. Soriero does not add the concert singing to his picture bill, but gives a musical evening only. He charges $3.00 top and fills his house of 1800 seats. However, he utilizes fully the opportunity to advertise his picture bills to this different kind of audience, giving them brief flashes of coming films and descriptive matter on slides. He packs his house on picture nights at 35 and 50 cents.

The innovation is a success in every way, says Mr. Soriero; it is profitable in itself and in its advertising opportunity.

It is difficult to reach this class of people through newspaper and mail advertising. They come now to his picture shows.

Mr. Soriero subscribes heartily to our campaign on better music and pictures and prophecies a marked and swift advancement along these lines.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Snapshots

Around the Clock with Wm. A. Johnston

Sol Lesser. Always doing new things and big things. Has now left his thirty-five theatres and several exchanges to accompany George Beban on a tour of the country with the new Beban picture, "A Man in a Million." Says Beban is making just as great a sacrifice of business interests. It's a fine idea, all-around. Has double object. Beban will appear at the close of the picture in an act developed out of the picture's finale. Will make address also on his pet and genuine hobby of cleaner and better pictures. Good stuff for newspapers. Also to give children's matinees with selections from his famous act, "Sign of the Rose." Fine fellow—George Beban, and fine artist. Lesser and Beban now in Chicago after seeing exhibitors and newspapers in San Francisco, Oakland, Seattle, Minneapolis and St. Paul. Report successful reception of idea. Even Jensen and Von Herberg enthused over it. In New York next week.

W. W. Hodkinson. Member of the small, close and highly fraternal order of those who hate to make speeches. Had to make one, however, at his own birthday surprise luncheon—birthday of Hodkinson Corporation, three years old this month and going strong. Our forecast is: will constantly get stronger. W. W. H. told some fish stories. Other fictionists present: Irving Bachellor, Louis Joseph Vance, Wm. A. Johnston (another one). Fine speech by Bachellor. Several tributes to Mr. Hodkinson for his consistent stand for better pictures and a more economic industry. Altogether about as happy and well-arranged a luncheon as we have ever attended.

Carl Laemmle. Back from a four months' sojourn in London, Berlin, Prague, Paris and other European capitals. Comes back a fan on American pictures. Ascribes American superiority in picture making to our high-pitched competition. Says Europe must hurry fast to catch up. Leaves right away for Los Angeles and thence to Monterey to watch Von Stroheim spend another hundred thousand on "Foolish Wives." Looks like this picture would break records in expensive production.

Hugo Ballin. Says it's time for directors to be "mental" instead of "physical" only. Agree heartily with Mr. Ballin. Audiences getting more and more critical. Want some food for thought. Physical stuff about worn out. Time to check the old bag of tricks and introduce new stuff.

Harry Crandall. Sent us new idea to work out for benefit of exhibitors in general. Good one, too. Here's a man who's eternally on the job. Building up—and fast, too—one of the best theatre organizations in country. Ever meet his executive staff? Watch this man for growth—wider and higher—meaning more theatres and always better ones.

In Town. Milton Hoffman, back from a year in London in which he worked five. Going to Los Angeles for a darn good rest; C. E. Shurtleff, in New York between productions; George Blair of Eastman, genial and urbane, listens much and says little; A. H. Blank of Omaha—his favorite occupation is kidding the trade press; Col. Fred Levy of Louisville, heavy investor in theatres, pictures and parties.

Out of Town. J. D. Williams, Harry Schwalbe and other members of Executive Committee of First National meeting in Chicago, November 8th to 11th; W. E. Shallenberger to St. Louis to attend meeting of Federated Film Exchanges, St. Louis, November 14th to 18th.

Walter F. Wanger. Our idea of a rising young man. Left Dartmouth a few years ago. Valuable experience in New York theatrical circles. Now General Manager of Production for Famous Players-Lasky—meaning New York, Hollywood, London and Indian studios. Big job. Quiet, keen, observant, active young chap.

The New Missouri Theatre. Another star in the firmament of de luxe theatres. Opened November 8th, with Governor-elect Hyde of Missouri, Senator Spencer and other notables present. Seats 4,000. St. Louis boasts it is finest in country.

Pathe News. Has a birthday—and deserves one. For ten years—all of them thrilling ones—has recorded world history on the screen. Many scoops. First into Germany after the armistice—also first into Fiume and Russia. Straight record of notable accomplishments. Tremendous enterprise and activity back of a big news weekly. So used to it we are all inclined to overlook this fact—and other facts, such as the importance of the news weekly to the theatre program and the very large following it has among the theatre-going public. Congratulations and best wishes!

Exhibitor Grimes. Of Corydon, Indiana. Takes sturdy exception to our figures on picture theatre receipts of $780,000,000 and distributors' rental receipts of $86,000,000. Says we have not excepted the legitimate theatres, carnivals, circuses, etc., which ought to be about half, making the average film rental paid by the exhibitor 22 per cent instead of 11 per cent. Not so much, Brother Grimes. Washington estimated the total receipts from picture theatres two years ago to be $650,000,000. Last year was so prosperous a theatre year and adding the fact, as Washington admits, that the full tax return is never collected, we thought $780,000,000 about right. It checks our own careful figures. However, if we shave that $100,000,000 our argument still has a big basis, which argument is not that the distributor is getting too little but that the little theatre is paying too much. Even if we cut the figures in two, as you suggest, why, Mr. Grimes, are you paying out in film rental 60 to 75 per cent of your gross receipts when the average is only 22 per cent?

Miller Not to Interfere

GOVERNOR-ELECT NATHAN L. MILLER, will not interfere with the Sunday motion picture situation in New York state. This is assured beyond any question of doubt. Before leaving for Atlantic City, N. J., where he is spending a few days in rest, Governor-elect Miller stated that he knew of no reason why he should advocate any change in the present law which permits the various municipalities to settle the question of Sunday movies for themselves through their own common council or governing body.

There has been some talk that efforts would be made to induce Governor-elect Miller, when he assumes office in January, to repeal both the Sunday baseball and movies legislation which was enacted by the legislature last winter and which was approved by Governor Alfred E. Smith, Democrat. From his recent statement, Judge Miller evidently believes in leaving well enough alone, for every report that has reached Albany from cities in which Sunday motion picture shows are running, has been favorable to their continuance. Judge Miller himself comes from Syracuse, where Sunday shows have been given for years under conditions so ideal as to become almost a standard for the state as a whole.

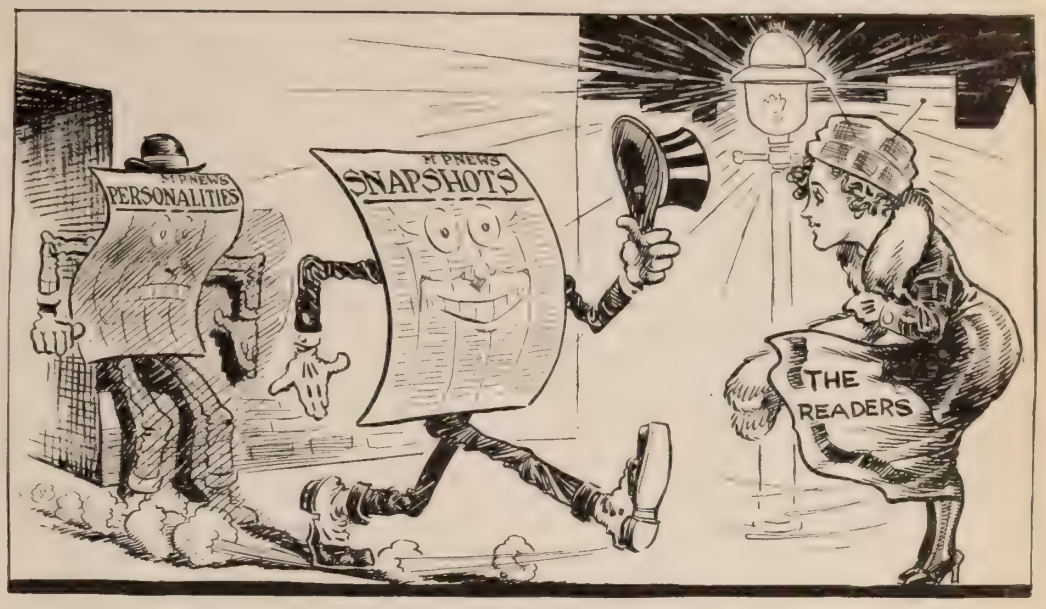
Happy intends to use his free page to advertise a new state rights special, "Oh, Hell, Where Do You Get Your Coal?" or, "With Coal at Sixteen a Ton Isn't Heat Cheaper at Ten a Quart?" Let Happy proceed:



FAR be it from little "Hap" to show any signs of temperament or peevishness, but just after I promised to write this week's piffle, the editor gave me a projection room showing of the cartoon he intends running on this page.

To put it mildly, I'm peeved. 'Course it's all right for the Personality guy to play up to his boss that way, but what a knock it hands me after I've been contributing the best my steno can write for two weeks. And doesn't everybody I meet tell me I'm saving THE NEW's bacon? Sure they do. Everybody I ask.

The blue pencil guy just upset an oil can, and says, "Rats! this is the greatest 'yes' game in the world. Everybody will tell you you're good—to your face."

Maybe he's right. Come to think of it, I've told a lot of Astor and Claridge hounds that they're the beefiest brains in the industry. I've even told press agents they were good.

And anybody knows I'm the only good guy left—out of work.

THE editor wants me to start this page off by saying a lot of good words about Elmer Pearson. This is Pearson Month. 'Course, it's also Hodkinson Month, too, but that don't make any difference. What is an industry going to do with only twelve months in a year?

Besides, there was only one month left in this year. Next month is sacred to the Christmas editions. Fred Beecroft and his pals in crime polish up the blackjacks and the irremovable smiles and go get the bacon. It's no month for an ordinary worker like a film sales manager to celebrate. Competition is overshadowing.

(Guess that evens me up a little bit for the cartoon?)

But, seriously speaking, the editor guy says he has it on such expert authority as P. A. Parsons, Joe Reddy and lots of Pathe fellows that this Pearson is regular clear through. And that the sales force is breaking its neck to smash records this month.

What more could any man ask?

THIS month stuff almost gave me an idea. I was going to have a Sales-Manager's Week on this page. Gosh, if I couldn't get a job after playing up a dozen of them here I may as well give up this assignment. It ain't good for nothing else.

But right away I ran up against a broken sprocket. I was going to start with Al Lichtman and then I found that Johnston's twelve-point page concerned Al and I knew I was licked. What chance has this ten-point got in that competition?

Then Jack Woody came to mind and I recalled that he has graduated to a "General Manager" title. Such a regular fellow personally I never noticed no difference. That's a boost, ain't it? But I guess Woody will have to get a page of his own some week.

Then I was going to tackle Fred Quimby—and he's turned producer. That let's him out of Sales Manager's Week. Fred will now have to give interviews on production plans, quality before economy, the future of the serial, what the exhibitor wants, and the first serial to get dates in first run houses. All original.

Aside from Fred, though, I got my own eyes on production. I know a feller what knows a guy who once met Von Stroheim. He's going to give me a letter of introduction and a boost for the property man's job. Hiring the extras, too.

Gangway!

I GUESS the Sales Manager's Week is off. I was going to tackle M. H. Hoffman, of Pioneer, 'cause I like the way that guy always says "hello" to me, but when I looked it up I found he was some sort of a General Manager too.

Maybe I'll tackle another angle. I can make it Exploitation Expert week and bring in Joe Lee, Bill Rudolph, and some of the boys. But if I blow them guys up too strong Happy Golucky will never get a job. That's off.

Maybe Personal Representative Week will do. Charlie Muehleman, Paul Mooney, Jimmy Grainger, E. Ascher, Bert Adler, Eddie Grainger, there's plenty of names there to fill up a page with.

Let's go. Somebody tell me what a Personal Representative does for a living—outside of being a popular guy, fighting with the home office auditor, kidding the exhibitor, wiring to Los Angeles, cussing Los Angeles, bawling out the exchange managers, feeding alibis to the exchange managers, writing letters praising Rothacker service, etc., etc.—and I'll write the page. I don't know nothing else they do.

Who's jealous?

FOR a few minutes I thought maybe I could try a Film Editor's Week. Then I learned that Elmer McGovern had turned magnate and is bowling them all over with the way he's handling "The Woman Untamed." He's out.

Joe Farnham might do, but I don't think he gets much chance for editing these days, what with his duties as President, Treasurer, Secretary, Grand Pooh-Bah and Chief Earthquake of the Los Angeles Boosters' Association. Met Joe this week for the first time since his return. He's rabid.

All the other film editors I know have regular jobs with weekly pay checks, and I'm too jealous to write about them. 'Course, you know, a good guy can always clean up free-lancing, but if you happen to hear of something fairly good, and permanent, for a press agent—you might let me know.

Famous Players Opens Big St. Louis Theatre

Governor-elect Arthur Hyde of Missouri will offer the dedicatory address at the opening of the Missouri theatre, the Famous-Players latest addition to their string of motion picture theatres in St. Louis. The Missouri, which is reputed to be the largest single structure in the world devoted entirely to the presentation of motion pictures, was erected at a cost of $1,250,000 and is the most pretentious theatre, barring not even the legitimate stage, in the city. It will seat more than 4,000 persons. This number does not include the box seats, of which there are two rows in the first balcony and three tiers on either side of the stage.

On the whole the theatre is believed to be the most elaborate addition to the theatrical world this city has ever seen. There are two balconies in the edifice, the only one of its kind in St. Louis. The orchestra will consist of forty members, whose interpretations will be worked out by Emanuel Baer, who was especially imported by the Famous-Players from New York. Antonio Sarli, who formerly conducted the orchestras at the Del Monte and Pershing—both Famous-Player houses—will conduct the Missouri symphony as Baer designs it.

The opening feature will be "Behold My Wife," with Elliott Dexter and Milton Sills in the leading parts.

Syracuse Censor Plan to Be Used in New England

Walter W. Nicholson, of Syracuse, N. Y., commissioner of public safety and a well known figure in motion picture circles in this state, through his having been a member of a special committee on the State Conference of Mayors investigating the needs of censorship in this state, has expressed himself as gratified in action just taken by New England city officials. The same plan of regulating motion pictures, which has been in vogue in Syracuse, will be followed in New England. In Syracuse, the cooperation of the exhibitors has greatly aided the department of public safety. All pictures which might be criticized are first called to the attention of Commissioner Nicholson and private screenings are given in order to obtain his approval before the pictures are thrown on the Syracuse screen.

Beulah Livingstone Leaves Publicity Bureau

The Wentworth-Livingstone Bureau, Inc., with offices in the Putnam Building, at 1493 Broadway, will be known after November 10th as H. H. Wentworth, Inc. Beulah Livingstone, publicity director of the Norma and the Constance Talmadge Film Companies, has sold her 33 1-3 per cent of the stock to Larry Griffin, the play broker and personal representative of stars associated with the Alice Kauser Bureau.

"Chi" Boys Organize

PUBLICITY and exploitation men, connected with the moving picture industry of Chicago, met at the De Jonghes Hotel last Friday and perfected an organization. The club was named, at this time, the Motion Picture Press Club, and, according to plans outlined at the luncheon, the organization will be of benefit to the entire industry.

Richard Robertson, of the Independent Film Association, was appointed chairman, and George E. De Kruif, of the Capital Film Company and Metro, vice-chairman.

The original idea for a get-together club comes from Messrs Irving Mack, Harry Rice and De Kruif.

Mr. Robertson made the following statement regarding the club:

"The Motion Picture Press Club is something more than a name.

"Among its members are represented, without exception, every trade publication of importance in the national field, and every film producing or distributing organization that has an office in Chicago.

"In addition, the Club's membership comprises the exploitation and publicity men of a great number of theatres and accessory houses.

"Every branch and angle of the film business is thus powerfully represented in the press club by trained advertising, exploitation and publicity men.

"From these facts can be formed a fairly accurate idea of the tremendous power which the club can exert through the combined efforts of its members.

"It is felt that no undertaking relies for its success on widespread, continuous and expert exploitation, is too large for the 'Motion Picture Press Club.' The effort during the coming busy season will be to broaden the scope of the club's activities and augment its usefulness within the film industry."

One of the things talked over was a "movie week" for Chicago to include a big ball and an exhibition at the Coliseum.

Cupid Does Fatal Work in R. A. Walsh Studio

Dal Clawson, chief cameraman for R. A. Walsh, surprised his friends early this week by taking unto himself a wife. The bride was formerly private secretary to Mr. Walsh and it was in this capacity that Clawson met her at the Biograph Studio while he was photographing the forthcoming Walsh release.

Louisiana Town Against Sunday Openings

In a special election at Jennings, Louisiana, on November 4, to decide whether the town would have picture shows on Sundays, the vote was 365 against open Sundays and 345 in favor. A strong fight was waged by both sides.

First National of Michigan Elects Directors

Members of Associated First National Pictures of Michigan, Inc., coming from all parts of the state, met in Detroit Thursday, November 4th, to organize and elect officers. Practically every subfranchise member of the association was in attendance and what few were absent vested their voting power in proxies.

Following a luncheon and business session at the Hotel Statler, the exhibitors were the guests of John H. Kunsky, at his new Canadian summer home in Walkerville. Those in attendance included exhibitors from as far north as Marquette, Escanaba and Newberry.

The business meeting was conducted by George W. Trendle, secretary and treasurer of the First National Film Exchange, and consisted of the election of seven directors, who later will elect the officers of the state organization; the reading of the by-laws; and an informal discussion of conditions by the members present. The following directors were chosen from twelve placed in nomination: John H. Kunsky, George W. Trendle, Harry Scott, Detroit; H. S. Gallup, Marquette; W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek; Blair McElroy, Chicago, and Herbert L. Weil, Port Huron.

The date of the annual meeting of the organization was set for some time in February.

Mr. Kunsky's entertainment of his fellow members in the First National organization was one of the most notable social functions in the history of the industry in this section. After the business session, all of the members were taken to Canada by taxis and ferry and at Mr. Kunsky's beautiful summer home, overlooking Lake St. Clair, the guests were treated to entertainment and a banquet that lasted far into the evening.

All interests of Sol Lesser and the Gore Brothers, including thirty-two theatres, the First National franchise, the Educational franchise and the All-Star Independent Exchange, have been merged into a corporation which is capitalized at two million dollars, according to a telegram just received from Los Angeles, Cal. The new organization has been designated as the West Coast Theatres.

The following are named in the wire as the incorporators: Sol Lesser, A. L. Gore, M. Gore, Adolph Ramish, Thomas Morrisey, Goodwin Knight and Frank S. Hutton.

Are Rentals Out of Focus?

Al Lightman Discusses Points Brought Out by William A. Johnston's Editorial on Distribution

My Dear Mr. Johnston:

I read with great interest your editorial entitled "The Sales Manager's Opportunity," published in your issue of November 6th.

About one year ago, before there were any government reports on theatre intakes and film rentals, I made an estimate that the gross receipts of motion picture theatres amounted to approximately eight hundred million dollars annually and that film rentals earned by all distributors in the United States amounted to approximately seventy million dollars—or approximately 8 per cent.

At that time most people discredited this estimate, thinking it improbable that the combined distributors of the nation were receiving so little for film rental out of the monies paid by the public for motion picture entertainment.

The government reports for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1920, would indicate that my estimate of admission receipts was high, but my estimate of film rentals was about correct.

The latest report shows that the industry is moving in the right direction in that the distributors' income has increased to about eighty-six million dollars, and in percentage, about 3 per cent—or about 11 per cent of the gross intake at the theatres.

However, there is still tremendous room for improvement in the adjustment of film rentals and in the distribution of motion pictures, if we are ever going to attain the position whereby all exhibitors will be paying a just share of their income to the distributors as film rentals.

You ask in your article, "What is wrong with Distribution?" and state that you know that a great majority of theatres comprising the small houses spend around 35 per cent for film rentals.

I should say that the discrepancies or injustices of film rental charges cannot be traced to any one specific thing, but its inadequacies are the result of a combination of things existing in connection with film distribution.

The principal fault of inequitable distribution or inequitable rental prices is due to distribution. Few distributors have established a basis for film rental charge. Many distributors rent their pictures on a haphazard auction-basis, selling them to the exhibitor who will pay the most money, regardless of the actual worth of the picture based upon its drawing power. By this system a number of exhibitors will over-pay, but the majority will benefit by under-paying for their pictures.

The principal reason why certain exhibitors pay a percentage seemingly so disproportionate to others, is because of the great number of places that are controlled by one exhibitor, or by exhibitors who have combined for the purpose of renting pictures.

Exhibitors who control their communities, when dealing with a distributor who has no basis of film rental charge, will generally underpay.

On the other hand, where keen competition exists, the distributor dealing without basic values, will take advantage of the situation and sell his product to the highest bidder. In most cases, however, in situations like this the price is not consistent with the true value of the product.

In the distribution of Famous Players-Lasky product, we have established the drawing value as the basis for film rental charge. We endeavor to base the drawing value of a picture prior to its release, which we accomplish in two ways:

1. By viewing the picture before the National Quota is placed thereon.

2. By pre-releasing it in several places throughout the country before the National Quota is finally established.

Once the National Quota is established, we apportion a price to every theatre in the country based upon our knowledge of what each theatre did with subjects of similar value in the past.

While we do not claim perfection in this system, it is, in our opinion and based upon results, the most equitable to the exhibitor as well as to the producer.

In this way, every theatre, large or small, has an equal opportunity to rent our pictures at a price commensurate with their ability to pay, based upon their box-office returns.

Very few exhibitors controlling all the theatres in their respective communities have been able to rent pictures from us at prices disproportionate to their income, as our method of basing values would naturally fail if we played favorites. Because of this you cannot find one exhibitor paying as high as 35 per cent and a neighbor operating under similar conditions, paying as little as 10 per cent (except perhaps in rare instances, where we have not been able to get all the facts).

It is only natural under present day conditions, for the exhibitor to try to rent films as cheaply as he can, and for the distributor, on the other hand, to get as much for his product as he can possibly obtain. However, a great many exhibitors do realize that producers must be encouraged to create better and greater motion pictures, if the exhibitor is to succeed in holding the interest of his patronage.

From my experience, I know that the vast majority of exhibitors are fair-minded and do realize that the producing and distribution of motion pictures is more or less a co-operative proposition. They know that no producer can make a picture for any one exhibitor, and that it takes the patronage of thousands of exhibitors to support an attraction.

For example, an exhibitor in a town of 10,000 population now knows that for a producer to be able to continue to make quality pictures, it is essential for him to pay as much as his town can afford, proportionate to what the people in his town will pay. He should not try to buy films cheaper than other towns operating under the same conditions and with the same income.

The principal factor in fair prices is intelligent distribution. If the distributor himself does not know what each theatre can afford to pay, then he is doomed to failure.

There is absolute truth in your statement that the theatres in the small towns do pay a higher percentage than the theatres in the large places, but the net profit in proportion to the capital invested in small towns is far greater than that in the larger cities.

The overhead expenses in theatres in the large cities exceeds the overhead expenses of the theatres in the smaller places about three to one in proportion to the income. For one thing, the theatres in the large cities are located on the most expensive sites. In some cases the ground value is as much as twenty thousand dollars per front foot against the smaller town theatres, which are located on sites that will average about two hundred dollars per front foot.

In addition, the theatres in the large cities give elaborate performances, costing thousands of dollars weekly by way of large orchestras, singers, other entertainers, tableaux and special scenery. Newspaper rates are much higher. In fact, the exhibition business in the large towns, contrasted with the same business in the smaller places, can be termed almost a different sort of business altogether.

Another great factor in bringing down the gross percentage of film rentals are the comparatively small sums paid by vaudeville theatres for feature picture proportionate to their income. No vaudeville theatre can afford to pay the price commensurate with the true value of a feature

33 Rochester Exhibitors Pass Operators' Exam.

Thirty-three exhibitors in the city of Rochester successfully passed the written examination and secured license as operators recently. This was necessary in view of the refusal of the Operators Union's representatives to meet the exhibitors to arrange for a fair wage and because of the threat of the Operators Union to strike.

An examination was held, and five members of the board, consisting of I. M. Salyerds, president of the Rochester local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York; Fire Marshal Fennell, who is also commissioner of public safety; R. Andrew Hamilton, Charles Mason and Louis Townsend, representatives of the Operators Union, decided on the applications. On Tuesday, October 26, a test was given to the thirty-three applicants, all being exhibitors of the city of Rochester, for licenses to operate motion picture machines. The entire thirty-three applicants successfully passed the examination.

The committee of the exhibitors, of which W. A. Calihan of the Regent, Piccadilly and Gordon theatres was chairman, waited upon the operators and offered an increase of $10 for Class A, a flat proposition of $37.50 for Class B, and a $2 a week increase on Class C. The exhibitors report they cannot continue in business by meeting all demands of this Union without increasing the price of admission to the public, and they do not feel that the time is opportune to raise admission prices.

Baltimore Managers and Operators Compromise

A strike of moving picture operators which for a while seriously threatened to close up motion picture theatres in Baltimore was narrowly averted when a compromise was effected between the movie exhibitors and the officials of the operators' local No. 181. Instead of the increase of 20 cents an hour demanded by the operators, a 15 cent rate was decided upon.

According to G. Kingston Howard, president of the local, this gives the operators a wage of 85 cents an hour on an eight-hour a day basis. They will also be paid for overtime.

Arkansas Latest State to Organize Exhibitors

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas was formed at a recent meeting in Little Rock, and the following officers and executive committee were elected: C. A. Lick, of Fort Smith, president; E. C. Robertson, of Fayetteville, vice-president, and O. C. Hauber, of Pine Bluff, secretary and treasurer.

The executive committee consists of: D. E. Fitton, of Harrison; W. L. Mack, of Jonesboro; W. L. Sanders, Batesville; E. C. Robertson, of Fayetteville; E. H. Butler, Russellville; Sydney M. Nutt, Hot Springs; V. J. Haydel, Helena; Hoyt Kirkpatrick, Fort Smith.

E. T. Peter, treasurer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, attended, representing the National Organization. The new organization endorsed the national organization and affiliate themselves with it.

Another meeting has been called for November 22.

Picture Star Not Understudy for Fay Bainter

The office of William Harris, Jr., producer of "East is West," has had its attention called to the announcement of the picture "Beyond The Great Wall," that the leading part of this picture was played by Miss Lark Bronlee, understudy for Fay Bainter in "East is West." The Harris office wishes to make it distinctly understood that the only understudy for Miss Bainter was Miss Helen Sinnott, who is now playing the leading part in a company of "East is West."

Big Movie Ball Planned by M.P.T.O.A.

The Chamber of Commerce of the M. P. T. O. A. announced that January 5 has been set as the date for a grand ball and entertainment, which will be held in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor, and for which an array of exceptional entertainment features are now being arranged. The Screen Club ball conducted by that club when it was in its prime was always considered the smart affair of the season, so far as the film industry was concerned, but since that time no organization, it is said, has gone in for an elaborate affair, at which the ladies could hold sway, and the coming event, therefore, promises to outshine even those of former seasons.

A number of committees have been named by the executives of the M. P. T. O. A. The general committee is composed of Charles Goldreyer, chairman, Al secretary, and Max Barr, treasurer.

Among those prominent on other committees are the following:

Vaudeville committee: E. S. Moss, chairman; Marcus Loew, and Frank Keeney.

Reception Committee: Louis Blumenthal, chairman; Max Spiegel, H. Bishop, S. Bock, and A. Hamilton.

Novelty Committee: Samuel Sonin, chairman; W. Brandon, A. Fabian, E. Behrend, and L. Fink.

Printing Committee: Fred Wilson, chairman; W. Peyser, S. Coleman, A. Wolf, and H. Herring.

Music Committee: J. Stern, chairman; F. Faulkner, L. Bolognine, M. Glynne and H. Reilly.

Supper Committee: B. Grob, chairman; A. Eisenstadt, M. Kreidel, A. Rapf, and S. Sheer.

Visiting Exhibitors Committee: H. Ebenstein, chairman; Charles Hering, H. K. Hecht, Fred Wilson, and L. Risenthal.

Ticket Committee: H. Gainsboro, chairman; D. J. Hennesey, L. Cohen, S. A. Moross, and Samuel Schwartz.

Dance Committee: H. Brandt, chairman; J. Seider, M. Silverman, H. Shapiro, and H. Ronheimer.

Invitation Committee: J. Manheimer, chairman; R. Saunders, H. Walenbrink, L. Schneider, and Leo Brecker.

William Brandt, naturally is ex-officio member of all committees and Harry Reichenbach is chairman and director of publicity and exploitation. He has appointed the following members of the A. M. P. A. associates: Paul Lazarus, Paul Gulick, Joseph H. Mayer, C. L. Yearsley, P. A. Parsons, George Landy, Jerome Beatty, and the following trade journal editors: Arthur James, Robert Welsh, Martin J. Quigley, Joseph Lowe, and Leslie Mason.

The ball will be followed by an elaborate entertainment, and following this supper will be served. The management of the Hotel Astor will reserve every seat in its three big restaurants exclusively for those attending the ball. Tickets to the ball will entitle holders to the dinner.

In additon to the entertainment features already enumerated, there will be a regular old-fashioned Midway Plaisance, fashioned after that which was so famous during the World's Fair at Chicago. The Midway will be built in the room in the rear of the ballroom, and will contain all the elements of a high-class midway at the big resorts.

Prominent city, state and national figures will be guests of honor, and all the noted film players will be asked to participate.

B. B. Moss, chairman of the vaudeville entertainment committee, has given the organization assurance that he would give the finest show ever seen, while each and every member of the various committees offers to put forth their ultimate effort to make their particular bit stand out as the high light of the event.

Arthur S. Friend Retires from All Branches

In retiring from his official position as treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporations of New York and New Jersey, Arthur S. Friend releases himself simultaneously from service in various subsidiary corporations controlled by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation throughout the United States. In these he also holds the position of treasurer and assistant treasurer, with the exception of the John D. Williams Producing Company, of which he is president.

In addition he retires from numerous official and executive positions in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc.

As announced previously, he retires after seven years activity in that concern which he was instrumental in founding from the beginning of its career, always holding the title of treasurer which he relinquished the first of the year.

As treasurer he represents the Seneca Holding Corporation, which operates and controls the New York theatre, the New York Roof and the Criterion theatre, N. Y.; the Star Amusement Corporation, which controls property in Indianapolis on which a theatre is to be erected; and the Exceptional Realty Corporation, which owns Shea's Criterion theatre in Buffalo. He represents also, as treasurer, the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, which controls the St. Louis chain of theatres including the new Missouri, a 4,000-seat house; and the 1493 Broadway Corporation, which controls the property on which is erected the Putnam Building and Westover Court.

Improper Pictures Arouse Ire of Schenectady

David D. Connell, acting Mayor of Schenectady, N. Y., has ordered a probe of pictures being shown in that city. This action is the result of a number of complaints that have been filed with the city officials by persons who claim that improper pictures are being shown from time to time in the Electric City. The investigation will be conducted by the committee on laws and ordinances in the common council.

Authority for the investigation is vested in the Sunday motion picture ordinance. It is claimed that the management of many of the motion picture theatres in Schenectady has failed utterly to provide the city authorities with a list in advance of the Sunday offerings. As a result of this laxness, certain improper pictures have been slipped in from time to time, so it is claimed, and these have offended patrons to the extent that complaints have been lodged.

The coming investigation will include pictures booked for both Sundays and weekdays. It is said that the practice of booking offending pictures is not general in the city, but is confined to a few managers.

Thelma Percy, one of the cast of the Mermaid comedy, "April Fool," who has lately become Mrs. William A. Brady, Jr.

Cupid Wrecks Good Ship of Publicity Bureau

UP in the offices of Educational Films Corporation of America, the department supplying the trade papers with news and gossip about pictures and players is threatening to ignore the production department and announce a serious drama, entitled "Perils of the Publicity Purveyor." The reason for it was this:

Recently it was announced that Miss Thelma Percy, sister of Eileen, had been engaged as leading woman to appear opposite Jimmie Adams in "Luck," a forthcoming release. The news had been barely received when a wire was sent to the Coast for pictures of Miss Percy and along came some most attractive photos of her in bathing suits. The newspapers snapped them up, and a red hot wire went to the West Coast only to be answered with:

"Miss Percy will not appear in any Mermaid Comedies after 'Luck'."

Followed much mystery, and then after a few days:

"Miss Thelma Percy was married October 27 to W. A. Brady, Jr., son of the noted New York producer of the legitimate stage and motion pictures."

Needless to say, Cupid is cast as the villain in the publicity department's picture.

S. H. London, of Associated Photo Plays, in New York

S. H. London, general manager of Associated Photo Plays, Inc., is on his way to New York where he will be permanently in charge of distribution of films by this recently organized company. While en route Mr. London will visit a number of the independent exchanges who are to handle the independently made productions distributed by this organization.

Before departing for the East General Manager London stated that inquiries had been received from state right exchanges in every section of the country and that he expected franchises would be taken all of the exchange centers by December 1st.

The plan of Associated Photo Plays, Inc., provides that the producers shall receive 25 per cent profit on their production costs, that the distributing organization shall sell the productions to the exchanges at an increase of 15 per cent over the cost to the distributing company. And that the exchanges shall rent the films at a price that will give them a narrow margin of profit. The organization plans to distribute thirty productions a year.

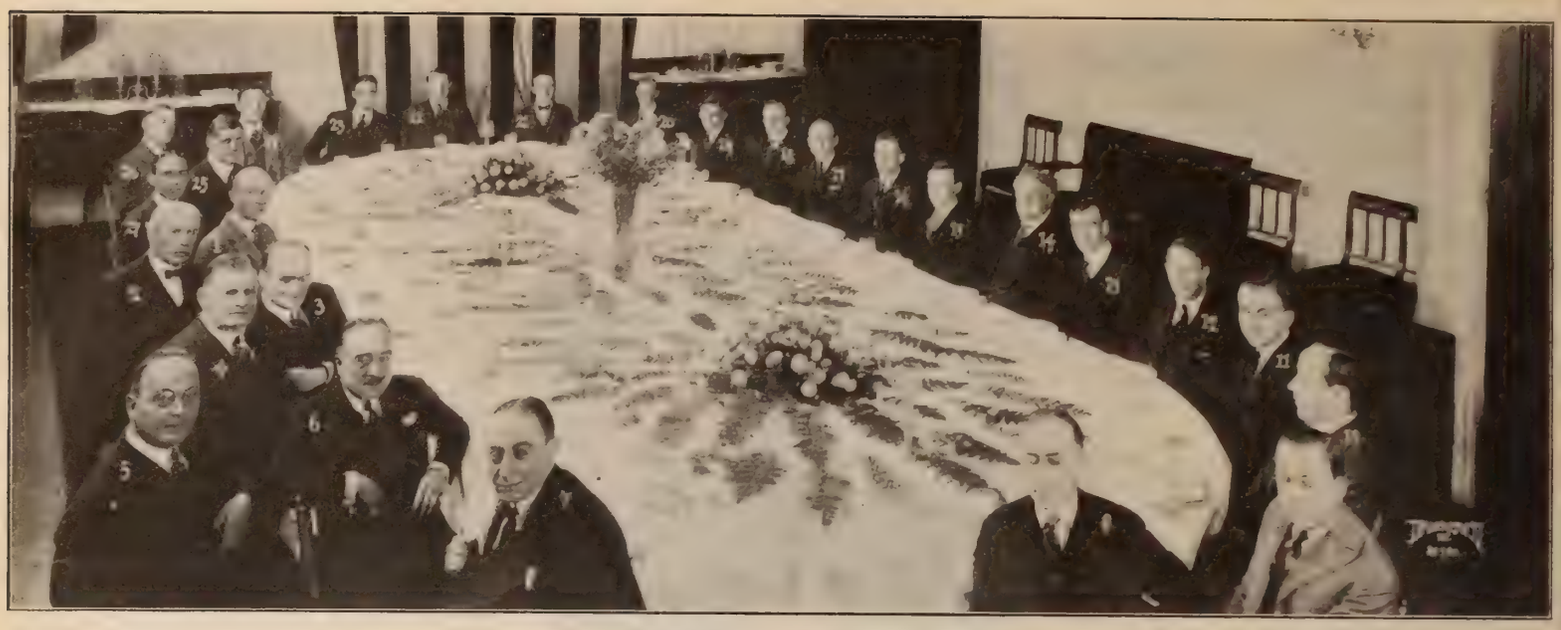
Would Use Screen to Rid U. S. Art of Traditions

Dr. John C. Freund, editor of Musical America and president of the Musical Alliance of the U. S., speaking at a mass meeting in New York recently stated that the movies would be the medium of propaganda for the establishment of "artistic, and especially musical independence in America."

Dr. Freund believes that the time has come when we are able to break away from the traditions of the past, which ruled that all our musical students must have the European brand upon them before they could be declared a success. The establishment of a Ministry of Fine Arts and a National Conservatory of Music, Art and Drama can only be brought about, he stated, by preaching the gospel of American musical independence through the screen. It is his determination, with the aid of some of the leading spirits of the movie world, to bring the stories, both tragic and comic, of the American art student abroad, before the attention of the public by means of motion pictures.

Encyclopaedia Article to Be Written by Croy

It has been decided that Homer Croy is to represent the motion picture industry in the next edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica. He will write the chapter on motion pictures. In the last edition little was said about motion pictures; now it will occupy a prominent part. Homer Croy is a writer of novels and author of a book on motion pictures.



"Among those present" at the W. W. Hodkinson Anniversary banquet held recently at Delmonico's

The widow and the orphan have been robbed before and the poor-box broken open, but up until last week the waning stores of the ancient Essanay studio at Niles, Cal., had remained sacred to the tainted touch of the petty larcenist. Reposing contentedly in the security of its seclusion, the Niles studio had escaped the attention of a busy and forgetful world for many a moon, but the recent news that knaves had broken in and dismantled the contents once more brings this center of historic interest up front.

The wire describing the dastardly deed says "the burglars got away with all the equipment." Maybe the burglars wore their vests for the occasion though sometimes a hip pocket is serviceable. Still, in these arid days, even the old Niles studio might offer inducements to a progressive burglar. Who knows?

Al Lichtman on Distribution

picture, because of combined cost of vaudeville and pictures. Vaudeville houses should pay a higher price for pictures because the bulk of their patrons are attracted to the theatre by the pictures and not by the vaudeville.

An encouraging angle of this all important question of just film rental charges, is the fact that the first run theatres in the larger cities are getting nearer to the point of equity in their rental prices. Not so long ago, every large motion picture theatre operator was laboring under the impression that a distributor of pictures could afford to rent him films gratis for the prestige it would bring the pictures playing the big time exhibitors' houses. While rarely did he obtain his films free, yet most exhibitors obtained them at ridiculously low prices. Today (speaking at least of our plan of distribution to create equity in film rentals), the vast majority of big time houses are paying nearer their just share of film rentals than ever before.

Under the system of establishing basic values proportionate to the box office returns of every theatre in the country, no theatre, large or small, is prohibited from showing our pictures. Every exhibitor can estimate his returns in advance. The only exhibitor that can suffer is the exhibitor who is unwilling to take the film salesman into his confidence.

No honest film salesman will overcharge an exhibitor, provided he knows the exhibitor's income and he knows the value of the product he represents. By the same token, no honest exhibitor would withhold information from a film salesman necessary to arrive upon an equitable basis for film rental charge. They are dependent upon each other for their success. Therefore, I urge the utmost frankness and confidence between exhibitors and film salesmen, in their business dealings, so that the trend toward greater equity in film rentals shall continue uninterrupted.

It is only by an equitable distribution to all classes of theatres that theatres of all sizes and classes can be supplied with the biggest and best pictures.

Very truly yours,

AL LICHTMAN,
General Manager,
Dept. of Distribution.

Koplar Still Seeks Payment, St. Louis Reports

St. Louis dailies are again devoting their columns to the story of how Harry Koplar has been going twice a day for the last five months to the office of his attorney in the hope each day that he will receive a portion of the more than $500,000 which is claimed to be his share of the $1,250,000 which the Famous Players Missouri Corporation is reported to have agreed to pay him for the seventeen St. Louis motion picture theatres which Koplar delivered to its possession on March 1. According to Koplar, not one cent has been given him.

Koplar, at the time he transferred possession of the theatres, thought, according to reports from St. Louis, he was about to cash in handsomely upon ten years activity in the motion picture industry, during which time he increased his holding from a 5-cent tent to a string of seventeen first-class houses, including the Kings, Pershing, and Shenandoah. He was said to be not only under the impression that he was to be rewarded financially but also that he was to become resident manager of the New York Corporation in St. Louis.

Koplar saw surcease of his troubles last August 4 when an agreement was reported to have been reached and signed by both parties ratifying in effect the original transfer agreement, under which Koplar was to have received $500,000, and was to begin receiving it on the tenth of the following month.

One of the most interesting events of the Hodkinson celebration took place on Thursday, November 4th, at one o'clock in a private dining-room in Delmonico's, when there was tendered to W. W. Hodkinson a surprise luncheon. This luncheon was organized by the officials of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and was gotten up as a definite testimonial to the man who is referred to by each and every one of them as "The Chief."

Invitations were issued to and accepted by the following people:

Jeremiah Milbank, F. A. Judson, Harry Richards, Irving Bacheller, Eltinge F. Warner, William Johnston, of the New York World; William A. Johnston, editor of the Motion Picture News; Arthur James, editor of the Moving Picture World; Leslie Mason, editor Exhibitors Trade Review; Harry H. Poppe, of the Exhibitors Herald; Louis Joseph Vance, Hugo Ballin, Joseph Dannenberg, Kenneth Hodkinson and W. Stephen Bush.

Unqualified Endorsement Is Given Famous Players' New Plan

Radical Change in Producing Policy Brings Flood of Congratulations

PROBABLY few announcements in the motion picture industry in recent years have created such general interest and brought forth such favorable comment as last week's statement from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announcing the merging of its stars and other players into one big stock company and its purpose to center its future efforts in the production of pictures in which the authors, directors, scenario writers and cast will share equally, so far as possible, in the responsibility and credit.

The keynote of the response from all quarters, Famous Players-Lasky officials state, is that the adoption of the new policy is one of the greatest forward steps ever taken by a picture producing company. Directors and producers, not only of pictures but of stage plays, have come personally or have telephoned to the Fifth avenue office to offer their congratulations, and numerous letters and telegrams of approval have been received from stars, not only within the organization but some now connected with other companies, who express their approval along with authors, magazine editors and exhibitors.

One of the first to be heard from was Wallace Reid, who, according to the published statement of Jesse L. Lasky, is to have the leading role in Cecil B. DeMille's all-star production of "The Affairs of Anatol," which is to be the first to be made under the new plan. Mr. Reid wired from Los Angeles that he was delighted that he was to be one of the first chosen to take part in the new production plans. Continuing, the telegram stated: "It is the greatest step forward that any producing company ever has taken, for it will give the stars the very opportunities they always have sought, namely, big parts in big productions, thereby multiplying their opportunities to serve better the public. Count on me to do everything in my power to co-operate."

Early Monday morning the following note was received from Dorothy Dalton: "I want to be among the first to congratulate you upon the plan outlined to me in your office yesterday. I shall welcome the opportunity to appear in better pictures. As an artist, my chief concern is to please my public, and if I can appear in a good part in company with any of my fellow stars—Elsie Ferguson, Ethel Clayton, Billie Burke, Mae Murray, Wallace Reid or Thomas Meighan—I shall welcome the opportunity. I think all thoughtful artists should be more concerned with the parts they play and the stories they help to portray than with the fact that others may share stellar honors with them. You may count on my staunchest co-operation and I am waiting eagerly for news as to the part I am to play first under the new plan."

From Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of the corporation, the following telegram was received: "Announcement of new production plans mark beginning of new and greater era of motion picture productions. This plan will inevitably result in pictures incomparably superior to past production. New system assures director of finest actors and actresses while similarly insuring stars of highest quality of directorial ability. I am greatly honored to know that I am to be the first to produce under this new system. I believe that cast of my forthcoming production which includes Wallace Reid, Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels, Wanda Hawley, Agnes Ayres, Dorothy Cumming, Theodore Roberts and Theodore Kosloff, is undoubtedly greatest ever assembled. Cordially yours."

As well representing the attitude of authors toward the new plan, the following from Sir Gilbert Parker is quoted: "Permit me to say that I think your new production plans embody the quintessence of modernism in motion picture making and that never in the history of the screen has anything so revolutionary or so calculated to advance the art been undertaken. I cannot overestimate the importance of this to authors who may now be positively assured of productions of their stories which will be not only technically perfect but that will be enacted by the foremost stars of the film world. Need I say that I am heartily in accord and that it will be a keen satisfaction to me to feel that my stories written for Paramount will have such unusual productions as your plans contemplate?"

From Jeanie Macpherson, who, it is announced, will collaborate on the scenario of "Anatol," came the following telegram: "May I express my appreciation for the opportunity accorded me in connection with Mr. DeMille's initial production under new plan? Steller direction and players will combine to give perfect interpretation of theme and characters as conceived by original writer."

A responsive chord also has been struck with the editors of the leading fan magazines, James R. Quirk, publisher of Photoplay, writing as follows: "Strangely enough, your new production policy was announced at a time when we had just finished a review of the work of the year's progress in pictures. In that review I said:

"'Picture progress is being made by those individuals and corporations who have determined to make good pictures, one at a time; each, like a play or a novel, being worked out according to its individual premise, and whatever its corporate or series relationships, making its own way in the world, and standing or falling as it gives, or fails to give, an artistic transcript of human life. The quantity idea has been definitely junked where good pictures are concerned. . . .

"'Opportunity and progress lie in the hands of the producing masters who recognize the worth of individual effort by author, director, players and corporation combined.'"

The utmost enthusiasm and confidence for the future from the exhibitor's standpoint is expressed by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, who said: "The announcement shows great foresight and keen business instinct. A great amount of courage, more than is given to ordinary man, is required to discard a system which has proved a success. How great the success of the one-star system has been is best shown by a glance at the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation,

"Kismet" Gets Unusual Notice

IT is a rare day when the manager of one of the "big Four" of Broadway picture palaces places his personal endorsement on an attraction. And a still rarer day when the picture at one of these houses—with their established following and routine methods—starts advance exploitation on a feature many days before the week of showing.

So the endorsement given "Kismet" by Managing Director Joseph Plunkett and the advance advertising accorded the big Robertson-Cole special is creating unusual notice along Broadway. Following is a quotation from Thursday mornings, advertisement showing the personal approval Plunkett is giving his next week's attraction:

The Strand theatre takes extreme pleasure in announcing for the forthcoming week that it has procured for its patrons Robertson-Cole's picturization of Otis Skinner in "Kismet," the most stupendous production in the history of motion pictures—a product of such wondrous beauty, such exquisite and magnificent settings ,such remarkable and awe-inspiring characterizations, that those productions which have hitherto been considered elaborate really pale into insignificance when compared with it.

The Strand theatre takes this opportunity of guaranteeing an entertainment of rare quality, accompanying this remarkable play, with an elaborate prologue and a special musical program.

Furthermore, this $3 attraction, the pinnacle of motion picture achievement, will be offered at regular Strand prices.

JOSEPH PLUNKETT,
Managing Director.

Adding 'Em Up

ALBANY, Nov. 8.—The importance of New York state in the motion picture world is well illustrated from the fact that during the past ten months no less than 270 firms have incorporated in this state to enter the motion picture business. These firms represent a total capitalization of $38,045,100. There were nine companies incorporating for a million dollars each, one at two million dollars and still another for $10,500,000. These figures are official and authentic, secured from the records in the secretary of state's office.

In January last but 14 firms were incorporated for the motion picture business in New York state, the low figure for the year thus far. In May the maximum was reached when 38 companies incorporated, representing a capitalization amounting to $13,897,500.

While the greater number of companies entering the business stated their capital as being anywhere from $50,000 to $200,000, there were any quantity of smaller concerns ranging all the way from the little fellow just launching out into the business to the huge concern representing millions of invested capital.

In order to secure appropriate names for these companies, names which serve both to advertise the business and likewise not infringe upon titles already selected, many of the companies, judging from the names under which they were incorporated, were hard put to find the name which would be acceptable. In some cases combinations were made in the surnames of the individuals making up the company, while in other cases names were chosen which carried the suggested business.

The following figures showing the number of firms entering the motion picture business in this state month by month, with the total capitalization for each month, are particularly interesting to the motion picture trade. With very few exceptions the companies have their principal offices in New York City.

which it has brought to its present high position. To throw that system into the scrap heap and start a new venture along untrodden paths one must have great faith in his own ideal—and faith is half the victory.

"I wish all the so-called legitimate producers would have the courage to try the same thing. How much more pleasure one would get out of theatrical performances with a well-balanced cast, with every player chosen for his ability to do his particular well and spurred on to do his best without fear of the star's displeasure. It is almost too much to imagine a play in which the actor with an insignificant role may get applause from the audience because that little has been well done, without being immediately dismissed at the star's behest."

Hollywood Film Temple Planned by Financiers

Hollywood financiers have backed a project to build a four-story and basement Class "A" building with a ground floor space of 24,000 feet, which is to be known as The Film Temple and is to be built with the inteion of bringing together many of the firms doing business with Hollywood studios in the hope of promoting efficiency for the producers by the elimination of the loss of time of actors and purchasing agents in buying.

Space on the first floor has been laid out for a number of small shops. A cafe and offices for trade publications and talent agencies as well as community offices for salesmen of Los Angeles firms to be on the second floor. The third floor will be devoted to cutting rooms and projection theatres. The fourth floor will have a number of studios, mechanical work shop, and in the basement will be vaults for the storage of films, negatives and prints.

The project is being financed by A. Z. Taft and associates, and Edward A. Biby, former purchasing agent of Los Angeles studios, will be manager. Construction work is to begin shortly and the building with all its numerous advantages will be ready for occupancy by February 1st.

Rialto Theatre of Butte, Mont., in New Hands

The Rialto theatre, the largest "movie" house in Butte, Mont., which has been in the hands of a receiver for the past few weeks, has been purchased by James H. Rowe and Louis Dreibelbis, according to a stipulation filed in the district court in Butte. C. S. Jensen and J. G. Von Herberg, owners of a string of theatres along the coast and who were half owners of the Silver Bow Amusement Company which erected the Rialto a few years ago, disposed of their holdings to the Butte men only after a bitter legal fight which resulted in the theatre being thrown into the hands of a receiver.

Following a strike instituted last June by the musicians' union and the moving picture operators, the house is said to have lost money fast, and it was alleged that Jensen, who was the manager, not only refused to try to settle the trouble but would neither dispose of his own holdings nor buy those of his Butte partners. Rowe is the leading real estate man of Butte while Dreibelbis owns a string of drug stores. They have not announced their future policy in managing the house.

Albany's Mark Strand Theatre Has Auspicious Opening

State Officials Attend Initial Performance in $500,000 House

THE Mark Strand theatre, Albany's newest and most expensive motion picture house, built at a cost of $550,000, was formally opened on the night of November 8th to an assemblage of over 1,000 invited guests, including practically every prominent state and city official. Governor Alfred E. Smith, who was to have occupied one of the boxes with his family, was unable to be present, owing to previous arrangements which called him out of town. The audience was without question the largest gathering of New York state officials in the history of the motion picture in New York state.

After sixteen months, the theatre was virtually completed today. Of delays there have been many, through lack of materials and a hundred and one other things which are so prevalent these days in building operations. In order to complete the house, however, a day and night shift was kept at work for many weeks past. The opening of the theatre tonight really marks an epoch in Albany's motion picture world.

The new Strand, the tenth in the chain of Strand theatres, is located on North Pearl street, in the business center of the city and within a block of the Clinton Square theatre and Proctor's Grand. The house is equipped with every modern appliance.

In the audience tonight were noted Secretary of State and Mrs. Francis M. Hugo, Attorney General and Mrs. Charles D. Newton, State Engineer and Mrs. Frank N. Williams, Commissioner of Highways and Mrs. Frederick Stuart Greene, First Deputy Secretary of State and Mrs. A. B. Parker, Dr. John H. Finley and Dr. Augustus Downing, of the State Department of Education. Albany itself was represented by practically every one of its officials from Mayor and Mrs. James Watt down. Charles M. Winchester, as president of the chamber of commerce, represented that body. The motion picture industry was also represented by many from other cities.

The program tonight was opened by an hour's organ recital, with Floyd H. Walter, formerly musical director of Harmanus-Bleecker hall, presiding over the keys. At the conclusion of the recital the same program of prologue, pictures and songs was given as will be featured when the house is opened to the general public tomorrow.

William F. Brooker, of New York, well known from the successful way in which he handled the Academy of Music, and who is also a familiar figure in publicity circles, will handle the local theatre. He will be assisted by Walter Roberts, late of Buffalo.

REGISTER FOR THE FIRST MUSICAL-MOTION PICTURE CONFERENCE—JAN. 24-25-26.

Under the scale of prices, which is a trifle in advance of any of the other motion picture theatres in this city, 20 and 30 cents will prevail in the afternoon and 30 and 50 cents in the evening. What is of more importance to the city, however, is the announcement by the management that there will be no advance in these prices later on. The program, which will change twice a week, will be very similar to that at the New York Strand. The house will run continuous from noon until 11 p. m., excepting Sundays, as shows on that day are not permitted in this city.

Outside of New York city itself there are probably few more beautiful motion picture theatres in the state than the Albany Strand. It has a seating capacity of about 2,300, the main floor accommodating 1,500. The theatre was built by what is known as the Albany Strand Theatre Corporation, the officers of which are Moe Mark, Max Spiegel and Walter Hayes. The house was designed by Tom Lamb of New York. In a great many ways it is similar to the Strand in New York.

The lobby, in white marble and gold, measures about 22 by 50 feet, and is particularly attractive. The same method of conservative advertising which is followed in all of the Strand theatres will be employed in the Albany house.

The interior construction of the house is largely along the lines of classic architecture, carried out in greatest detail in connection with the stage itself. Here there are marble columns connected with a marble rail, the background being a representation of the Bay of Naples, with Vesuvius in the far distance.

As one passes through the lobby he enters the auditorium through leaded glass doors. The color scheme is a combination of maroon, white and gold, the maroon being carried out in velvets and brocades, the white in the marble and the gold in the tracings and the embellishments that serve to further set off the other two.

The side walls are paneled in brocaded velvet of maroon, the same color prevailing in the draperies of the boxes, the carpet, the loges, while the seats themselves are of a panne velvet of the same hue.

Nine exits are on the main floor, while the balcony is equally as well provided for along safety lines.

From the main floor marble stairways lead to the six boxes, three at either side of the stage. A beautiful marble stairway likewise leads to the balcony in which a circular mezzanine of marble is one of the most striking features. The loges, which stretch along the front of the balcony, are reached by short stairways, likewise of marble, running from the mezzanine.

In the construction of the boxes particular attention was paid to the end that the occupants might see the picture without the eyes becoming tired, the boxes being just far enough away to give the desired results. The pipes of the big organ are at either side of the stage and are most cleverly concealed behind velvet curtains of maroon.

The stage is one of the largest in any motion picture theatre in the country. The same color scheme is carried out in the curtains, bordered with gold, the rise and fall determining the beginning and the conclusion of the performances. There are also six dressing rooms for the use of those who may be featured in various prologues from time to time.

Particular attention has been paid to the musical end of the program. The house will boast of a sixteen piece orchestra. P. Colby Shaw will direct.

Bert Lytell in "The Price of Redemption" and "The Rise of the Age" were selected for the theatre's premiere.

Report Levy Will Build New Kentucky Theatre

The current visit to New York of Col. Fred Levy of Louisville is rumored to have to do with plans for the construction of another theatre in the Kentucky city in conjunction with the Keith interests. Negotiations through J. J. Murdoch, of the Keith circuit, are said to be already far advanced. The new theatre will house Associated First National attractions, it is said.

Col. Levy's interests in the South include presidency of the First National Exchange of Kentucky and Tennessee and a large interest in the Strand Amusement Company operating from Louisville. The purchase by the latter company of theatres en bloc in Owensboro, Ky., including the new Bloitch theatre, was recently reported, at which time Col. Levy is stated to have expressed an intention on the part of himself and his associates to acquire in the near future a chain of some hundred theatres. Reports now current have it that he is negotiating an amalgamation of his various film exchange interest holdings into one large controlling organization.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Milton Simon, president of Selected Films, Incorporated, the new Chicago exchange with offices in the Consumers' Building, which is handling "The Son of Tarzan" for the state of Illinois, has booked the big jungle serial into the entire Ascher Bros. and Lubliner and Trinz circuits, following the viewing of the picture by officers of both companies. Where the houses of these two circuits are in competition, the serial will be played on even date and date.

This is regarded by Mr. Simon as a tribute to the pulling power of "The Son of Tarzan," as it is not the general policy of either of these powerful circuits to book serials. It is also understood that "The Son of Tarzan" will be shown in the Chicago loop which is almost unheard of for a serial.

The wide-spread interest shown by Illinois exhibitors in the one day convention of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, scheduled to be held at the Hotel Jefferson, Peoria, on November 18th, assures a large attendance, according to President Hopp, who announces that plans for the gathering are now complete and an interesting meeting is assured.

Although matters of great importance to the exhibitors of the state will be taken up, three sessions will be held, morning, afternoon and evening, so that the work of the convention will be completed in one day.

Certain individuals and associations of Illinois are planning to introduce a censorship bill at the next session of the legislature and the Sunday closing and child bills also are likely to be introduced, and this legislative situation is one which will be thoroughly discussed at the Peoria meeting, and means to combat these bills, if unfavorable to exhibitors, devised. Another question to be taken up will be the fixing of initiation fees and dues of alliance members and reports also will be received on the actual work accomplished by the association with the benefits which have accrued to its members.

A large delegation will leave Chicago for Peoria Wednesday at one o'clock, the day preceding the convention, and word has been received from many exhibitors in the central and western part of the state that they will also be in Peoria the night before the meeting is scheduled to open.

Exhibitors throughout the country are showing great interest in the service offered by the recently organized First National Booking Association of Chicago, and, according to President Harry Siegel, so many inquiries have been received that it has been necessary to put out eight road men.

Among the big circuits which will contract with First National to book acts and specialties to augment their picture programs, are Kunsky of Detroit, Merrill of Milwaukee, and Finklestein and Ruben of Milwaukee, acording to Mr. Siegel, who also states that some of the largest Chicago theatres will put in musical and other acts offered by his company.

First National Booking Association now is in a position to offer nine weeks of actual bookings to any theatre signing up, and has a splendid lot of talent on their lists.

Tom Mitchell, one of the pioneer exchange men in the Central West, has been appointed sales manager of Gollos Enterprises, Chicago, having resigned from the Doll-Van Film Corporation to accept the position. Mr. Mitchell entered the motion picture field as manager of Wm. H. Seanson & Company in 1908. Later he was president of the Morton Film Exchange, and at one time operated the Oakland Theatre. Mr. Mitchell is enlarging the Gollos sales staff, the latest additions to the force being Charles Lundgrenn, formerly with Doll-Van and J. H. Smiley, a former automobile salesman. Mr. Lundgrenn will cover southern Illinois, and Mr. Smiley will cover the northern part of the State.

The acquisition of several important features and a new serial to be released in this territory by the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, has compelled President Friedman to increase his sales staff. The most recent additions are J. S. Posner, who will cover the south side, and H. Smith, formerly with Educational, who will cover the Illinois territory. Lewis B. Goulden, Celebrated Players' Indiana representative, is visiting the Chicago office for the first time in two months. He received a hearty welcome as he had hung up several records for salesmanship during the fall season.

Aaron Gollos, president of the Gollos Enterprises, Chicago, was called to New York on November 3rd, to attend a meeting of the various exchange managers handling Equity Pictures.

Lewis Laemmle, of Universal's Chicago Exchange, is back at his desk again after several months spent touring Europe with his brother, Carl Laemmle. While overseas he traveled extensively in the British Isles, and on the continent, visiting France, Germany and Austria, and has many interesting stories to tell of the conditions abroad.

Harry Weiss, this week, is moving the offices of Superior Screen Service and other companies which he heads, to the new quarters at 25 E. Seventh Street. He will occupy the entire building, which was erected especially for him, and which is an up-to-date and commodious film exchange in every respect. The rapid growth of Superior Screen Service had necessitated the enlargement of quarters for transacting the big volume of business now being done by the Weiss' organization.

B. D. Russell left Chicago for Los Angeles this week where he will take charge of production for Russell, Griever & Russell, and the Capital Film Company's Coast studios. Mr. Russell was married on the same day that he left for the West, and a large party of friends gave him a big send-off at the train.

Richard Robertson, general advertising and publicity representative for Independent Films Association, is making a flying trip to Dallas this week in the interests of that organization, and expects to return to Chicago within a few days. Before leaving he viewed the first print of Neal Hart's second feature picture, "Skyfire," which he declares to be a splendid production.

Sales Manager Belford, of Independent, returned from New York this week.

Henri Ellman, president of the newly organized Famous Feature Film Company, was in Chicago this week and announced that his concern has been incorporated for $200,000, and is opening its general offices at 66 W. New York St., Indianapolis, Indiana, where he will make his headquarters. George Levi, for the last five years connected with Unity, is secretary of the new organization; and Marvin Weisman, a prominent Indiana business man, is treasurer.

Famous Feature Film Co. will distribute a series of twelve five-reel Western adventure features starring William Fairbanks, the first to be released on December 15th. Mr. Ellman stated that it is the intention of his company to open offices in Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit and Cleveland, in addition to the Indianapolis offices at an early date.

A. L. Moore of the Showmore Film Company and Wm. H. Engelman have returned from New York, where they have perfected arrangements for releasing "The Little Home Nurse" through the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, in Greater New York City and the states of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota.

C. T. Smith, the old time showman of Elgin, Illinois, is getting ready to open his new theatre at Elgin. The name has not yet been decided on, but it will be ready for business January 1st.

Jos. Aukselvizc is opening the new theatre at Indiana Harbor, Indiana. It will be known as the Victoria.

Ross H. Palmer has succeeded McDevitt Brothers as owner of the Lyric theatre, Knoxville, Illinois.

The Opera House at Belvidere, Illinois, is being reconstructed for use as a firstclass picture theatre. This town of 15,000 population has heretofore had but one theatre. The new house will be ready for business February 1st.

C. Heinin, owner of the Crescent theatre on Milwaukee avenue, has just returned from Twin Lakes, Wisconsin, after a three week's trip. Mr. Heinin claims to have shot twenty-four ducks in one day.

R. A. Healy of the Monogram theatre, 35th and Halsted streets, is back on the job again. Mr. Healy had been suffering with his teeth for some time.

R. H. Hadifeld, Superior Screen Service Indiana salesman, is taking a week's vacation in northern Minnesota, going after big game and incidentally catching a few bass.

E. F. Tarbell, district manager of the Vitagraph Exchange, has returned from a three week's trip through the territory. He reports things looking very good.

F. H. Scheible opened his new theatre at Streator, Illinois, Saturday, October 30th.

Charles W. Schwerin of New York City is in town interesting the independent exchanges in buying his productions.

Phil Goldstone was in Chicago this week interesting exchanges in his new five-reel westerns.

Wallace Reid's latest picture, "Always Audacious," has proved such a powerful drawing card at the Randolph theatre that Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer have held it over for a second week in their big loop house.

FIRST NATIONAL

A Perfect Woman—
As usual, I stood 'em out with a Talmadge picture. Think this is a distinct improvement over "The Love Expert." Scored heavily here. (East.)

Married Life—
Nonsense, but so cleverly constructed that it pleased so many people that manager reported the biggest Sunday in several months. Held up well all week. (Middle West.)

The Branded Woman—
Thoroughly interesting story done well by a good cast and good photography. Very good business. (East.)

The Jack Knife Man—
A good picture but failed to hold up. Only fair box office figures recorded. (East.)

The Devil's Garden—
Appeals to the highly sophisticated audience. Opened to very big business. (East.)

Twin Beds—
Spicy advertising helped to keep the ticket sellers busy. (Middle West.)

Nomads of the North—
Good business on this picture, which seemed to please. (West.)

GOLDWYN

Earthbound—
So peculiar as to affect people very differently. Some were lavish in its praise. Others didn't like it at all. All agreed, however, that it's a wonderful production, wonderfully done. It's got the people talking and arguing all right, which has made for big houses. No records broken, though. (Middle West.)

Didn't seem to entertain and business was only as usual.

My audiences seemed to find this very interesting and business was good during run. (West.)

The Palliser Case—
A fair attraction. Pauline Frederick has lost in popularity here, and the picture played to only fairly good business. Should go over big wherever she is known and liked. (East.)

His Own Law—
Good picture which audiences seemed to like. Brought more than usual business. (West.)

Officer 666—
Good picture and sure-fire box office attraction. Crowds packed the house every performance. (West.)

Madame X—
Splendid picture and excellent box office attraction. Packed them in and had to put on three shows on closing night of engagement. (East.)

Cupid the Cowpuncher—
Average business all week. They liked it very much. (East.)

METRO

Good. This drew well for the entire week and the people liked it. (East.)

Picture brought good business and audiences seemed to like it. (West.)

Are All Men Alike—
Fair business with a picture that was hard to tell what it was all about. (East.)

Blackmail—
Above average business with a very poor picture. Viola Dana the only redeeming feature in whole picture which was bad as to story, cast and photography. (East.)

The Chorus Girl's Romance—
Business good. Audiences pleased. Crowded at each performance. (East.)

FOX

Tiger's Cub—
This is the second Pearl White feature. It failed to draw so a Harold Lloyd comedy was added to the program. (Middle West.)

Her Honor the Mayor—
Bright little picture, well-cast and pleased my people. Miss Percy looks like good star-material to me. Hope her next pictures live up to this. (East.)

Drag Harlan—
More than usual business. Patrons seemed entertained. (West.)

While New York Sleeps—
Good business to good houses. (West.)

REALART

Food for Scandal—
This sure did go over big and the picture deserved it, for it is interesting and entertaining. (West.)

Blackbirds—
A mediocre picture. Justine Johnstone is good to look upon but not much of an actress. In addition, her vehicle is poor. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

Marooned Hearts—
Impossible. The public is waiting eagerly for Conway Tearle's first starring vehicle. This is it—two more like it, and he'll be among the also-rans. Poor box office receipts—but not surprised after I saw it. (East.)

Panthea—
This is one of the best re-issues I've ever seen. It stands the test of time splendidly, and my patrons liked it. Good box-office attraction. (East.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

The Slave of Vanity—
Good business. The picture satisfied a critical audience. (East.)

Big Happiness—
The poorest box-office picture I've played in years. Farnum well liked—but the people who liked him want him in Westerns and plenty of action. The foreign locale of this confused them. Lost money steadily all week. (East.)

PATHE

The Riddle: Woman—
Very poor picture but box office reports business as good. (West.)

UNIVERSAL

Sundown Slim—
Very good picture which brought good business. (West.)

In Folly's Trail—
Not half bad. More than usual patronage. (East.)

JANS PICTURES

Madonnas and Men—
Capacity first week and held over for second. Four horses in chariot race provided prelude. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

Trumpet Island—
Good business. Picture liked especially the comedy parts in the beginning. The ending slightly changed which gives it more credence. (Middle West.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

The Leopard Woman—
Just an average picture that was put over for week run by good advertising and exploitation. (East.)

Horater Decorates for "The Branding Iron"

H. C. Horater of the Pantheon theatre, Toledo, came to the fore again last week with his novel prologue in connection with "The Branding Iron," which was his feature attraction. "The Branding Iron," a story of the north, suggests the great outdoors, so Mr. Horater put up a cottage on the stage of his house, and surrounded it with a lot of winter atmosphere. Snow was falling fast, through a flood of blue light which shot out from the rear of the theatre. A pale amber light shone through the cottage window and door. The door was slightly ajar, giving the amber light an opportunity to come out strong. In the doorway, clad in the warm costume of the north stood a man who looked like a fur trader. But he wasn't. He was a baritone, and at the right cue, he sang a solo.

Prologues are very new out Toledo way, and Mr. Horaor's snow scene was very effective to create a large amount of advertising, resulting in turnaway business for the week.

Strand Ladies Quartette Gives "Barcarolle"

THE Strand theatre, New York, is presenting the Strand Ladies Quartette in the "Barcarolle" song from "The Tales of Hoffman," and providing costumes as called for in the opera and a stage setting also in keeping with the one used in the original production.

The quartette is placed in front of a drop showing the Grand Canal of Venice, with the city at night in the distance and a gondola or so between. A balustrade hiding the lower part of the drop suggests that the singers are located on a balcony. The set is lighted for moonlight and lights twinkle in the windows of the waterfront buildings mentioned above.

The "Barcarolle," originally a Venetian boating song and when transferred to opera a duet and afterwards an instrumental intermezzo, makes a very pleasing quartette number for feminine voices, with its languorous rhythm and charming melody, and the stage setting with the artistic lighting adds to the entertainment provided by the song.

Special Screening for Juvenile Picture

A juvenile picture with but a mild love-interest has small chance of scoring, according to Frank Hammond, of the Lynch Enterprises, Atlanta, when it plays to an audience chiefly made up of girls of the "flapper" age, and young college chaps who are fearfully grown-up in everything except age. So when the Forsyth theatre, one of the Lynch houses in Atlanta, booked "The Soul of Youth" for three days, Mr. Hammond knew that he would have to make a special appeal to reach the sort of audiences who would really appreciate the picture.

A special screening for children only was finally decided upon, and Mr. Hammond succeeded in interesting the Atlanta Georgian, one of the three local newspapers. Under the agreement that the picture was to be shown "under the auspices of the Atlanta Georgian," front page publicity was given to the special screening for Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday copies of this paper. The Georgian prints four regular editions daily, and the notice of the private showing of the picture to children only at the Auditorium Armory, on Wednesday afternoon, was given quite a prominent place in each of these editions, always on the front page, with a picture used the last two days.

This was the first time any theatre had ever been permitted to distribute heralds through the public schools, but when Mr. Hammond had talked to the Superintendent of Schools and some of the principals, had shown them the picture, and succeeded in interesting them, he was permitted to distribute ten thousand heralds, and each of the principals of public schools made special announcement of the screening, with the result that six thousand children saw the picture at the Auditorium, and the Forsyth broke all attendance records for the three days of the regular showing. Six thousand little advertisers thus brought splendid results, says Mr. Hammond.

Ohio Small Town Manager Puts "While New York Sleeps" in Big Time Fashion

"GOING the other fellow one better" is the motto of Leimotto Smith, of the Smith Amusement Company, operating the New Columbia and Ideal theatres in Alliance, Ohio, and the Strand theatre of Sebring, Ohio.

Offering proof of this Mr. Smith, when he prepared to play "While New York Sleeps," took himself to a quiet corner and proceeded to dope out something different in a lobby display. The result of Mr. Smith's cogitation and labors can be seen in the accompanying cut. Mr. Smith lifted the center of a 24-sheet poster and built a cut-out of "Delores" in her peacock gown. This has been done by a lot of exhibitors who have played "While New York Sleeps," but Mr. Smith "went the other fellows one better—or maybe a few better," by adding to the cut-out an electrical display which made the figure stand out prominently in his lobby. This was something new in the way of lobby display stuff, and the New Columbia patrons were quick to respond.

A prologue employing eight professional actresses and a lot of special scenery designed for the occasion was another exploitation as well as presentation stunt which Mr. Smith put over. "The Great White Way" was the title of the prologue. An enlarged orchestra was a feature of the occasion also, to say nothing of a special "Jazz" band, while lighting effects were gained from the use of four dissolving stereopticons. The first of the four scenes into which the prologue was divided, opened with a musical revue, with Japanese atmosphere, including Geisha girls, and a Japanese drop. As the curtain was slowly raised, with lights low, a huge fan brilliantly colored against a black

Franklin Celebrating Armistice Week

Armistice Week was celebrated in excellent manner by Harold B. Franklin at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, this week, and so widely divergent were the numbers on the program that the audience was in a state of intense enthusiasm at one time and on the verge of tears at another.

The enthusiasm was evoked by the symphony orchestra's rendition of John Phillip Sousa's stirring march "The Stars and Stripes Forever," during the playing of which one of those Franklinesque stage settings was unveiled disclosing Liberty seated on the front deck of a United States battleship, guarded on each side by a jackie and big guns. Old Glory blew in the breeze behind and across the whole ran a resplendent rainbow, denoting the arrival of peace.

Following the overture and stage setting, Carlos Ferretti sang a patriotic song and then a special Prizma hand-colored film, "Where Poppies Bloom," showing scenes in France, such as Chateau Thierry and Belleau Wood, together with the grave of Quentin Roosevelt, was thrown on the screen and there were few dry eyes in the Hippodrome audience during its presentation. These were the patriotic parts of the delightful program. The regular features were "The Riddle: Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar. The funfilm was "The Scarecrow," and the Hippodrome Review closed the bill.

Branham Entertains "Night Shirt" Paraders

During "Hallowe'en Week" Manager Charles Branham, of the Liberty made two big hits. One was when the University of Washington students had their annual "Night Shirt Parade" in the streets of Seattle the night before a famous football game, and Branham acted like a good scout and opened the doors to all who appeared in night shirts. Over a thousand appeared. The second Hallowe'en hit of Manager Branham's was when he dressed all his good looking ushers in orange colored costumes, all decorated with black cats and witches and a cap to match. The interior of the Liberty was completely decorated along similar lines, and the effect was most striking.

Southern Exhibitor Favors Lobby Displays

W. D. Van Derburgh, of the Broadway theatre, Statesville, N. C., who is making movie history in his city something to talk about by his exploitation methods, is a firm believer in outside stunts, especially lobby displays.

When he played "The Virgin of Stamboul" the lobby was decorated like a side-show—canopy, side-drapes and all—even a fluttering "fringe" of one-sheets across the top, and with a cut-out of Sari, in the costume in which she dances at the cafe—bare-footed, ragged, her tousled locks caught up beneath a turban, and quite delightful—mounted opposite the box-office. His door-man and ushers were dressed in native costume to match the picture and by a judicious use of the big newspaper story that swept the continent just before the release of the picture, he had Statesville on its tip-toes to see the picture.

background was displayed. At the base of the fan, there was a large lovers' knot, and through the four points of the knot, as shown in the illustration, four hands appeared. These four girls were the leading members of the company, and from their half-hidden position, they sang the song "Frivolity." Following this, the scene shifted quickly to full stage with all light up, in which a spicy musical ensemble number was rendered by seven elaborately costumed Japanese maidens. The third scene reverted back to the big fan with the black background. Again the lights were lowered. But instead of the four songbirds, this time there appeared a dainty little toe dancer, dressed like a fairy. From this scene the novelty gradually dissolved into "Shadowland," in which artistic poses were presented. The big punch of this posing act was a disrobing feature. And just as the spectators weer straining their vision—not to mention their imaginations—to catch the finale of the act, down came the curtain, amid thundering applause.

The last scene—the most elaborate and a fitting climax to a performance on which neither effort nor expense was spared—was made up of a series of poses done with illusion effects which presented portrayals of the seasons, "Spring," "Summer," "Autumn" and 'Winter," each appearing in quick succession with a panoramic background gained from the use of lantern slides flashed against a beaded white drop. Each of these scenes was accompanied by words and music selected to synchronize with the effect. The prologue came to an end with the entire company singing the "Rainbow" song, at which time the lights were made to come out of the sky in vari-colors, with the Goddess of Liberty in the centre of the spangled setting.

This prologue was arranged entirely by Forest C. Templin, exploitation manager.

Stout Woman Special Show Makes Hit

It's the wise exhibitor who can recognize the places to rush in where more foolish men might keep out.

Wise men usually refrain from referring to the size of "stout" women. Circumstances alter cases, however, and in Albany, where Miss Elizabeth Marbury proved her generosity by offering five cents for every inch of her waist line to the Democratic Committee, the idea became popular, and "stylishly stout" women actually boasted about it. The newspapers did a lot of writing about the new fad and that was where the Leland theatre "rushed in."

"The Perfect Woman" was due for a three-days' showing at the Leland just at the time that the "five cents an inch" propaganda was at its height in Albany.

The Leland advertised the opening matinee of the run as a special showing of the film for "stylishly stout" women. The mailing list was used to good advantage with an invitation to come and see "how nearly" scrawny the perfect woman was.

The idea took hold. In the southern section of the city some of the "stout" women who had publicly contributed in the "waist line" campaign organized a theatre party for the opening matinee. They went to the theatre in a body and their good nature combined with the amusement of the rest of the crowd made the first matinee one of the most enthusiastic which had ever been staged in the theatre.

The "stout" women were there to enjoy themselves and they proved that they were doing that by laughing unrestrainedly when the production furnished them with reasonable cause. The result was a continuous series of loud laughs and amused chuckles as the story unfolded.

Kineto Review Presents Remarkable Parade Scenes

ON Mr. Rothapfel's "Special Armistice Program" at the Capitol this week is a reel sponsored by Kineto under the title of "Episodical Review of the Armistice," which, explained by showing, proves to be a mighty fine camera record of the great Armistice Allied Army parade in Paris two years ago. On the patriotic program which has been prepared it proves good for more cheers and tears than anything of its kind we have ever witnessed.

This reel is of course not from a new negative, but any exhibitor who is planning some national holiday program may well keep it in mind, even if it has played his city previously. It is getting over at the Capitol like a house afire.

"Picture Shoppers Column" Individualizes 'Frisco Display

Messrs. Roth and Partington, managing directors of the California, Imperial and Portola theatres of San Francisco, have become convinced that the patrons of picture houses go "shopping" for their entertainment just the same as they do for their shoes, neckties or clothing, and to make it fully apparent to San Francisco people that their theatres have programs that merit "purchase," an innovation titled "Picture Shoppers' Column" has been added to the display advertising space.

The idea is to give a bit of detailed description about each number on the bill as sort of a word "window display," so that people may inspect what is offered and decide if they wish to purchase. The plan also permits the publicity department to keep away from the stereotyped methods of announcement and gives the Roth and Partington advertising an individualityall its own.

Fowler Staging Special Matinees

Manager Bruce Fowler, of the Elmwood theatre, in Buffalo, has a method of getting new patrons and at the same time maintaining a live mailing list that is proving a valuable box office asset. On all school holidays, which are not national holidays, Mr. Fowler puts on a special matinee. He first arranges a tie-up with some women's club, school or Sunday school class, and gets a committee from this school, club or class to help him in selecting suitable pictures for the occasion. Then he arranges for co-operative tickets, giving the organization a percentage of the recepits. These tickets are sold all over the city and bring many new patrons to the theatre on the occasion of each new special matinee.

By means of this method patrons are brought to the theatre from districts that advertising would not ordinarily reach. Then for the matinee Mr. Fowler gives a sample of his regular night show, putting on a splendid bill and using his full orchestra. Before the show is over the patrons are given a little talk, by means of a trailer, and those who are new are requested to leave their names and addresses at the box office. The new names go on the house mailing list, and keep it live and growing all the time. Mr. Fowler has an active mailing list of 5,000, which he uses religiously, and is probably one of the reasons for the big success the Elmwood has made.

Record in Newspaper Tieups

Moore, Adler and Washington Dailies Put Over Big Stunt for "The Forbidden Thing"

TOM MOORE, of Washington, D. C., continues to believe in exploitation. His penchant for the right sort of publicity has been made known in this department before. But Moore has "gone after it" harder than ever, judging from the clippings that are in our hands from Washington on the occasion of the opening at the Garden theatre of "The Forbidden Thing."

Moore made a record in newspaper tie-ups. There are four dailies in the Capital with Sunday editions. All feature pictures open in Washington on Sunday.

Moore went after his Sunday papers like a shot. He didn't ask for just feature stories. He wanted genuine tie-ups.

You say that three tie-ups out of four papers in the behalf of a single show are not to be secured? Then hearken to Moore's effort:

He realized that ideas counted. He felt sure that rival newspapers would not mind tying up to the same picture if the underlying idea differed.

Idea No. One: "Forbidden Thing" as a title covered all kinds of manners and habits. What is the "forbidden thing" with you? Every newspaper reader would have a response.

So Moore and Bert Adler, representing Allan Dwan, hied over to the Washington Times. The Times grabbed the stunt in a hurry. And it cost the Garden theatre twenty-five tickets, which the editor of the Times requested for the readers submitting the wittiest replies.

Tom Moore intends further to reprint the witty answers in a special circular, which will go out when the newspaper selects and carries the best received. He states that this will not only be good publicity for the current attraction, but for the theatre.

The next tie-up was made with the Washington Star, which asked readers to review the picture, the best opinions to be shown on the Garden screen. Moore had booked the Ince studio picture along with "The Forbidden Thing," and presented the studio scenes under the sponsorship of the Washington Post, which gave them a quarter-page Sunday notice.

If you don't know what concentrated exploitation will do for your theatre, try to be in Washington some day when Tom Moore opens a "big one."

A reproduction of his Times stunt appears in this issue.

Hyman's Prologue for "Harriet andthe Piper'

Manager Edward L. Hyman, of the Brooklyn Strand theatre, believes that a novel introduction for the feature excites a deeper interest in the picture itself and is a firm believer in the prologue. Last week he staged such a number for "Harriet and the Piper."

Just before the booth men began the feature the velvet curtains revealed a beautiful garden, an exact reproduction of the bal masque scene in the film proper. In this scene were men and women in brilliant masquerade costume joined in mardi gras spirit. They were infusing all the passionate spirit of Bohemia into their dance movements. While they were in mad dance there was a sudden flash of fire and the devil appeared to claim his pay.

Pierce Invents Great Fire Scene as Prologue

John H. Kunsky theatres, Detroit, are making strides in becoming famous for the prologues that are being used under the direction of Howard O. Pierce, production manager for that firm. Practically all prologues are staged as spectacles with the settings devised under the personal supervision of Mr. Pierce, and in some instances special musical numbers are prepared.

For "Nomads of the North," playing at the Madison theatre, the prologue number used was especially effective. Warde Johnston, musical director of the Madison theatre, prepared a special musical score. The setting showed a clearing in a forest. A tenor singer, attired in a back woods costume, rendered a solo on "The North Country," which has interspersed in it several lumbermen's chants. As the last chorus reached its conclusion a dull, red glow appeared on the drops in back, and soon a theatrical forest fire was raging within sight of the audience. The heaving rolling smoke, the crash of trees, the hiss of pine with ignition and the other noises incidental to a forest fire were all imitated while the orchestra followed an ever louder crescendo developing into a crash of cymbals and roar of drums which diminished gradually as the picture screen dropped and shut out the forest fire.

This particular prologue, Mr. Pierce says, was one of the lowest in price that has ever been used in a Kunsky house, despite the fact that the effect was one of the most spectacular. The fire effect was gained through a clever arrangement and manipulation of globe clusters and spots, while the movement of the smoke was provided by the motion picture projector.

Capitol Celebrates Armistice Week with Special Program

THE Capitol theatre is dedicating its program this week to the second anniversary of the signing of the Armistice, and has divided its program into two parts, the first being under the foreword of "Dedicated to those who are gone but whose memory is immortal" and made up of such numbers as will keep the majestic walls of the largest theatre in the world resounding with the hand clapping of audiences who are bound to have their sense of patriotism quickened by what they see and hear.

The overture is "Over There," an orchestral composition by Joseph Carl Breil, conceived and composed especially for the Armistice Week program at the Capitol and being given its first public rendition thereon. It depicts the call to war, mobilization and embarkation of the American troops, brought out by the use of the national airs of the Allies, followed by a slow movement depicting the boys just before the battle thinking of dear things at home. The spirit of camaraderie of the Allies is introduced by the popular air, "Madelon," which was played, sung and whistled on every occasion. The final movement becomes a grand paean as ultimate victory is assured.

Following this number come picture excerpts of the great Parisian parade of the Allied soldiers, a reel devoted to the cathedral of Rheims, in colors, and a camera visit to the battle fields of France and the American Military Cemetery, and a vocal number under the title of "Requiem."

Imitation Summons Serve Well as Exploitation Stunt

That the imitation police court traffic summons placed in standing automobiles or handed to owners of motor cars is an efficacious picture exploitation stunt was proved in Scranton, Pa., when "The Silver Horde" was screened at the Strand theatre.

Goldwyn sent an explotation man from the home office to Scranton to aid Samuel Friedman, manager of the Strand, in putting over the exploitation campaign. Arrangements were made for printing imitation traffic summons on the regulation size and color of paper employed in Scranton. The wording of the heading and the checked reason for the appearance of the motor car owner were the only parts of the document that differed from the police summons. The imitation summons was headed: "Notice to Appear at Picture Headquarters. The driver of this automobile is hereby notified to appear at Picture Headquarters, Strand Theatre, October 21-22-23, between the hours of 11 a. m. to 11 p. m., on the charge checked below. Location 421 Spruce Street. Samuel Friedman, Manager."

The "summons" was left in standing cars and handed to owners. The stunt brought out the biggest automobile attendance of the season.

Hundreds of copies of the early edition of a local paper were bought up and a large red-lined advertisement of "The Silver Horde" printed all over the front page and given away in hotels, stations, etc. The Strand lobby was tastefully decorated with palms and ferns, an oil painting of the leading characters in the picture and "stills" of the production. Across the top of the lobby entrance was stretched a sign painted on heavy cloth bearing an advertiseemnt of "The Silver Horde" on an Alaskan scene as a background.

Steffey Reproduces Scene Still as Lobby Display

When it comes to putting over a picture in a fashion that creates all kinds of talk, F. Steffey, manager of Jensen & Von Herberg's Coliseum, Seattle, is right there with the best of them. Lobby displays and prologues are used extensively at the Coliseum and seldom a week goes by without something novel and attractive being presented by Mr. Steffey. For his lobby display on "The Penalty," Mr. Steffey reproduced a scene from the picture as shown in one of the stills. His artist painted figures of the physician's daughter, her lover, her model and the figure she was moulding. These were mounted on heavy board and placed in the upper part of the lobby arch over the heads of persons entering the lobby. The life-like arrangement of the figures was a magnet to everyone in the crowds that stopped to look at it.

For his prologue, Mr. Steffey again went to a still depicting a dramatic scene from "The Penalty." He engaged three men who had good singing voices; one of them made up to look like "Blizzard;" the other two men represented his henchmen. The dope fiend sang "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows." The well known poem, "The Quitter," was then recited by the baritone.

Stages Ballet Number for "Restless Sex"

The Majestic theatre, Detroit, last week, in addition to staging an elaborate ballet with twelve people during the run of "The Restless Sex," dressed up the shorter subjects on the program in honor of the Knights of Columbus, as scenes from the various issues of the Universal weeklies showing the pilgrimage of the Knights to France and the Vatican were made a special unit, opening with "Casey" (K-C), which is now the official song of the Knights of Columbus.

Franklin Presenting Several Novelties This Week

Harold B. Franklin is the author of several novelties in the Shea Buffalo houses last week. At Shea's Hippodrome he combined the overture and vocal solo into one, thus saving six minutes, which in the course of the afternoon and evening gained him a half hour on the show, enabling him to "turn over" the crowd much faster than formerly. The overture was the selection from "The Pink Lady," for which Mr. Franklin provided a musical comedy background, and when the orchestra reached the "Beautiful Lady" number, Miss Margaret Owen appeared in front of the setting and sang the number. The stunt went over well. Another novelty at the Hippodrome was the manner in which the Hippodrome Review was introduced. Here Mr. Franklin had a trailer made up to represent a strip of film running up the screen, one piece of film containing a miniature title and the next show the scene. The last piece contained the title "Buffalo-Shea's Hippodrome Shows Novel News Reel." Out of a circle at the bottom of the trailer letters spelling "Shea's Hippodrome Pictorial" poured and lined themselves up at the bottom. The pictorial followed immediately.

At Shea's Criterion Mr. Franklin put on a scenic song, which is a sort of revival of the old illustrated song of bygone days, except that in this case the illustrations were in moving pictures. As the soloist sang a popular ballad, the pictures showed views of scenic gems, such as woodland, waterfall and cloud effects. This stunt was also well received.

Hyman Successful with Condensed Opera Programs

Brooklyn is having a season of condensed grand opera with her motion pictures this fall, and real operatic stars are singing it, too, for Managing Director Edward L. Hyman, of the Brooklyn Mark Strand, has made it possible. This week "Rigoletto" has been the overture and Verdi's masterpiece has been interpreted not only by the Strand Symphony orchestra, Alois Reiser conducting, but by a group of operatic stars and with actual opera settings and costumes.

"Rigoletto" put on in this elaborate fashion opened the show with a bang and leading swiftly up to the feature, Katherine MacDonald in "Curtain. The whole affair only took about ten minutes. Fernando Guarneri sang "Curse of Monterone." Then the curtain closed and parted to reveal the Strand ballet in "Minuet," which was danced with life. Anna Zdenck then gave "Caro Nome," the version closing with the quartette of opera singers in the main "Rigoletto" strain.

For those who lean more to the lighter vein of music Manager Hyman a short time after "Rigoletto" presented the Strand Mixed Quartette in a pictorial-song origination, "Roses of Picardy." A scenic background in which billows of roses waved and rolled added effectively to the creation. Soon after the feature film had concluded the Venetian String Quartette was heard in "Andante Cantabile." These and other solo numbers, both vocal and instrumental, composed a well rounded musical program, one which was neither too heavy or too light.

Here Is a Worth While Single Reel

AS unit three of the first part of the Capitol program this week, a split reel colored by the Prizma process is being shown under the titles of "Rheims" and "Where Poppies Bloom," both being self-explanatory.

The portion devoted to the priceless architectural and historic gem, now a sacred ruin, is a feature picture in itself.

"Where Poppies Bloom," showing the once bloody battle fields of France as they are today, with beautiful poppies reproduced in natural colors growing on the banks of what were muddy trenches for four long years and presenting a panorama of the American Military Cemetery in France with its white crosses as far as the camera vision extends, is, as the Capitol program announces in a caption, "A reminiscent vista of the peaceful resting place of the heroic dead."

This reel has an exploitation value of no mean strength. As for scenic beauty, it is seldom equaled.

In presenting the reel the orchestra is stilled on a title "In Memoriam," and a mixed choir of voices sings softly off stage an appropriate selection. Again when the monument resting over the grave of Quentin Roosevelt is shown, "John Brown's Body" is sung. The effect is excellent.

"Tarzan" Exploitation at Akron Pays Big Dividends

The Colonial theatre of Akron, one of the chain of Feiber & Shea houses, went to a lot of trouble which paid for itself many times over in its recent exploitation of "The Return of Tarzan." The entire lobby of the theatre was made over to suit the occasion. All four walls of the lobby were lined with beaver board, on which were painted descriptive scenes from the photoplay. Cut-outs from twenty-four sheets were used for the figures. But the scenery was all painted in by hand.

Gets Great Results at Small Expense

Giving a picture the biggest exploitation that the town of Leominster, Mass., ever had, at the trifling cost of $16, is an achievement due to the co-operation of Goldwyn through its Boston exploitation representative, Langdon R. Barhydt, with Manager O'Keefe, of the Music Hall, an upstairs theatre which Mr. O'Keefe has made very attractive. The picture was "The Silver Horde."

The town was papered with the artistic one and three-sheets which Goldwyn artists prepared. Next a lobby display was arranged consisting of six of the one-sheets with crossed snowshoes, borrowed from a local hardware store, hung between the poster frames. Two three-sheets were hung on either side of the outer lobby, while against the open door in the centre was an artistic display of "Silver Horde" stills. Two oil paintings were displayed in the inner lobby.

In a prominent fish store a window display was obtained that attracted all kinds of attention. It consisted of the electric net lobby display with large salmon packed around it. At appropriate distances signs with snappy captions were placed. One of them read, "Do you know how these salmon were caught? See Rex Beach's greatest Goldwyn picture at the Music Hall theatre Friday and Saturday.

In the hardware store in front of the opposition theatre another window display was obtained. Around a large oil painting of Myrtle Stedman in "The Silver Horde" was grouped a display of fishing tackle, hunting clothes, snow shoes, revolvers, etc.

The local edition of the Lominster daily was bought up as soon as it appeared on the street, from the newsboys, who were later utilized to distribute them after the papers had been red-lined with appropriate "Silver Horde" advertising.

And still they come, examples of splendid exploitation on "Down on the Farm." This cut illustrates what William N. Smith, manager of the Rialto theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma, did in the way of a lobby display for "Down on the Farm"

Phonograph Used as Exploitation Medium

C. L. Winston F. P. exploitation expert was detailed to help George C. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake City, put over "The Restless Sex."

One of the stunts which Winston devised bears all the earmarks of being new. Winston composed a brief speech on the power and interest of the picture.

Then he had cylinder records made at a local department store. Two young men were carefully coached in their parts and then supplied with phonographs holding the oration.

One of the young men would sit down at a table in a fashionable restaurant and as if by accident the record would start and the speech would roll forth. Usually customers thought that it was all accidental and they would get much amusement out of the seeming confusion of the young man, but always listened to the speech and when they had grasped its intent applauded the novel stunt.

This scheme was worked at cigar counters, on street cars and other public places. In only two instances did proprietors of establishments resent the introduction of the young men and their speechmaking phonographs.

Winston has sent in a letter to his home office telling of the good results. He is highly enthusiastic over the plan. He has suggested that the leading star of a picture make a good record giving some striking feature of the production, singing a little song or telling some little story connected with the making of the picture and that these records be sent about the country for exploitation purposes.

At the height of the closing political campaign in Ogden Winston appeared in a big touring car and gathered crowds on prominent street corners. Of course his audience thought it was going to hear a political argument but instead Winston told them what a wonderful picture "Something to Thing About" was. At once a series of questions was fired at him regarding the coming picture and how it was made and his speeches brought big results.

Vocal Offering at Capitol is "Requiem"

THE only vocal number on the Capitol bill for the current week is the presentation of Verdi's "Requiem Mass Ingemisco" ("Sadly groaning") by Bertram Peacock, Sudworth Frasier and the Capitol Ensemble of thirty voices.

A stage setting is provided by John Wenger and the singers are attired in orthodox choir cassocks and surplices.

Army Trucks Help Cleveland Theatre

Five big army trucks, covered with tarpaulin, recently stopped traffic on Euclid avenue, Cleveland, during the busy rush noon hour. Traffic cops didn't stop them, even though they were exceeding the speed limits, because Jack Kuhn, in charge of Loew's Ohio theatres had fixed up a deal, whereby these trucks flanked with big signs labelled, "What's Your Hurry?" be given the right of way.

Ruffner Builds Artistic Lobby Display

One of the most artistic theatre lobbies ever seen in the northwest greeted patrons of the Strand theatre, Seattle, during the run of "Something to Think About." Ralph Ruffner, manager of the house and an expert in the art of lobby decoration, and Wayland H. Taylor, exploitation representative at the local exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, cooperated in putting the idea across.

The theatre was decorated entirely in white. A thin panel was stationed in the centre of the lobby. This hand-painted sign in three colors advertised the picture. It was surrounded by colored foil, crushed in artistic waves joining the painted sign and the frame. As a novelty it harmonized with the spotless woodwork of the lobby and was a magnet for hundreds of curious eyes.

Newman, Kansas City Holds Semi-Annual Fashion Review

Milton H. Feld, General Manager of the Newman theatres, Kansas City, and his assistants used "You Never Can Tell" as a companion number on a bill in which the latest fashions were exhibited under the title of "Fashion Week" recently. The Newman specialty reproduced the lobby of a fashionable New York hotel with special lighting effects for its fashion revue and the orchestra furnished a special musical program for the event.

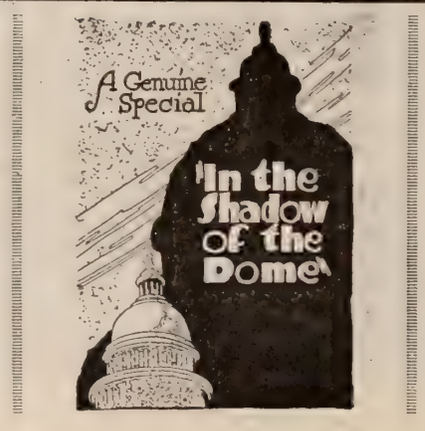
The show is the third semi-annual fashion revue offered by Newman and Harzfeld, and according to the Journal, "is by far the most pleasing presentation that the Newman-Harzfeld team have attempted."

Rivoli Artists Render Selections from "Faust"

ARTISTS from Hugo Reisenfeld's New School of Opera and Ensemble, Mary Fabian Jean Wilkins, Georges Du Franne and Emanuel List, are giving scenes from the third act of "Faust" this week at the Rivoli theatre, New York, with an unusually effective stage setting and correct costumes provided for the number.

The scenic investiture for the number is of course the garden scene. At left the leafy branches of trees seem to spread over the stage. At right is the cottage, provided with a practical window and with a lighted interior. The background shows the roofs of the city. It is the use of the floods, however, which is to be especially commended in this number. The artistic blendings of electrics has been so carefully done that not a trace of the theatrical can be detected. The spectator looks on a scene that to all intents is the real thing. This in spite of the fact that the Rivoli stage is small.

Artificial flowers, as if springing from a garden bed, are used in the center of the stage. In the rendition of the selections from the opera the singers are but dimly lighted all through except for the singing of the famous "Incantation" by Mr. List as Mephistopheles, when the singer is given a light green spot.



Brooklyn Strand Election Returns Find Favor

Despite a heavy downpour of rain, and the fact that eighty other local theatres and cabarets were featuring a special Election Night Service, the Brooklyn Strand capitalized on election crowds to an extent probably greater than any theatre within shouting distance of New York.

Several weeks prior to November 2, Manager Hyman was running an advance trailer which was screened at every performance and the regular Strand weekly program, the daily newspaper ads, and daily newsstories announced that election returns would be shown at the theatre; and all the copy was keyed to the angle of announcing the returns "amid beautiful surroundings, and during a superb program." By no means a novel thought, but one that the Strand could and did substantiate.

Carrying this phase of the campaign even further, Manager Hyman printed several thousand throwaways; bribed a flock of schoolboys from the neighborhood, who were enjoying the holiday, with a couple of passes to carefully distribute the throwaways in the area surrounding each polling place.

Election Night, when reports established that Harding was as good as in the White House, an especially prepared trailer, which included several newsweekly shots of Senator Harding, was screened at the eleventh hour. It brought down the house, and when the long green had been neatly pinned in stacks representing the total of their denominations, Manager Hyman concluded that the whole campaign, which did not cost over seventy-five dollars, was well worth the money, considering the fact that the house and lobby were packed from six o'clock in the evening until the curtain dropp

Style show staged by Stanley Chambers, manager of the Palace theatre, Wachita, Kansas, in connection with the run of "You Never Can Tell"

Chambers Presents Style Show

Exchange managers and exhibitors rom many near-by towns flocked to the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kan., the week f October 22-27, when Manager Stanley Chambers offered to his patrons the louble attraction of a Style Revue and You Never Can tell."

Co-operating with Mr. Chambers were Olive Flath, former musical comedy star, who staged the revue, P. Hans Flath, organist at the theatre, and Charles Danorth, of Danforth-Scott, who furnished he beautiful array of latest style models n feminine garments.

In order to more comfortably accommoate the ensemble scenes of the revue the heatre stage was enlarged by an illumiated glass runway which extended over he audience and on which principals and nodels promenaded. One of the girls was ttired in a gown that was an almost exact eplica of one worn by Bebe Daniels in he picture.

Special programs were provided. Acording to the Wichita Eagle, those who ttended were not disappointed.

The revue was in seven scenes, repreenting "morning boudoir," "hunting irl," "bathing girls," "morning suits," afternoon party dresses," "afternoon alling gown," and the "grand finale." Musical numbers were freely interspersed vith the showing of the style models, and proved especially pleasing to the audience.

The theatre has a seating capacity of nearly 1,800 and large numbers were urned away at nearly every performance.

News Weekly Strip Has Some Thrills

ONE of the strips in Pathe's News this week shows Brooklyn Bridge getting a new coat of paint. This in itself may not present exploitation possibilities, but the fact that the camera man shot his film from various precarious positions on the highset points of the top cables and gets some views of the painters that are good for real thrills does make the strip worth some attention.

There is also a good laugh in a scene which shows one of the painters dropping his bucket of paint ftom the highest peak on the bridge. Look this current events number over for yourself and see if it doesn't deserve featuring.

San Francisco Exploiting Title of New De-Mille Picture

The title of "Something to Think About" is being widely exploited in San Francisco and Oakland through arrangements made by John D. Howard, publicity director for the San Francisco exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Newspaper advertisements of the Emporium, largest department store in San Francisco, for the past week were headed: "Something to Think About." This phrase is then followed by the article advertised, for instance, "Shoes."

The name of the picture playing a two-weeks' run at the Imperial and to open October 31, at the Kinema, in Oakland, is firmly before the public as the result of the Emporium advertising tie-up and its use as a caption over the United States Navy recruiting service "A" boards on all downtown streets.

Howard himself has something to think about, as his residence was robbed this week.

Fake Telegrams for "Mrs. Temple's Telegram"

Harry Pomeroy, manager of the Strand theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, secured appropriate and interesting publicity for the presentation of "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," at his theatre during the first half of the week of October 25, by sending out three hundred fake telegrams to regular customers on the morning of the first day of the engagement. A local telegraph office readily consented to permit Mr. Pomeroy to use its regular telegraph forms and envelopes and messenger boys were hired to deliver the messags in the usual manner. The people to whom the messages were delivered were required to sign for the "wires," and every detail of the stunt was carried out according to Hoyle. The messages were typewritten as follows:

"If you don't take your wife to the Strand to-night to see Mrs. Temple's Telegram she will never forgive you." The messages were signed by "Mrs. Temple," herself.

This was the first run of the feature in Ottawa. The telegram stunt proved very effective and considerable "talk" was aroused.

Manager Pomeroy had a striking lobby display during the last half of the week of October 25 for "Circumstantial Evidence." This display was built around the reproduction of a prison cell in which stood a cut-out of a convict. The front of the cell consisted of green gauze on which iron bars had been painted to give the desired effect.

"Leopard Woman" Gets Good Exploitation at Buffalo

The Palace theatre, one of Buffalo's downtown first run theatres, has taken on a new life, and under the management of Howard J. Smith is blazing the trail with many excellent exploitation ideas. Mr. Smith is a believer in advertising and following several years' absence from the columns of the local amusement sections of the dailies, the Palace is now back with both feet and not only is the theatre adverising liberally but the ads smack of originality and pep. Mr. Smith has added a staff of artists to the Palace personnel with the result that traffic is being stopped by the snappy lobby display being put on each week. One of the best of these business pullers, however, was the lobby decoration put on by Mr. Smith for the week run of "The Leopard Woman."

In exploiting this subject Mr. Smith turned his lobby into a replica of the front of an Egyptian temple. Special borders bubbling over with Egyptian atmosphere and color schemes were placed around the lobby frames and the box office enclosed with a setting typical of the Land of the Pharoahs. The color scheme throughout was of striking attractiveness. Directly in front of the box office, Mr. Smith placed a large cage, such as one would see at the zoo. In the cage reposed two wild looking leopards. The only difference between this cell and the animals at the zoo was that this enclosure was made of wooden bars and the fierce looking leopards were stuffed with sawdust. They were borrowed from a local animal mounter's establishment. The effect, however, was just as good as if they had been alive. It was real enough for thousands of kids who stopped to view the display and eventually pull their parents to the box office. Around the top of the marquee Mr. Smith had a series of Egyptian signs advertising "The Leopard Woman."

Since taking over the Palace, Mr. Smith has changed the theatre to a week run establishment. It formerly changed bills three and four times a week. Mr. Smith has booked a long list of big productions and is turning a theatre that was formerly in the doubtful column into a house buzzing with life and large box office receipts. Mr. Smith deserves especial credit because he has taken over the Palace with little former experience in the exhibition game. He is "showing the way," however, for some of the veterans. Just now he is planning an elaborate exploitation campaign and lobby display for "Once to Every Woman," which he has booked for a week run in November.

Concerning Sid Grauman's Latest Prologue

Sid Grauman, of the million dollar theatre bearing his name in Los Angeles, lived up to his reputation for artistic prologues for his production when "Deep Waters" was shown, according to the account furnished by Monte Rice, exploitation representative at the Los Angeles Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The setting of the stage for the prologue represented the deck of an ocean liner, illuminated with colored lights and with a dozen passengers idling about.

That it was one of the most attractive sets ever seen on a stage with unique and beautiful lighting effects, was the opinion of hundreds who viewed it at every performance. It was entitled, "Pastimes on an Ocean Liner," an indication of the offering. The action continued as follows:

The skipper appears on deck and tells his guests the ship is theirs and to to entertain themselves in any way they see fit. "Sing and be happy," says the captain, and then the program begins.

The double quartette sings a melody, and is followed by a toe dancer, who scored one of the big hits of the evening. This finished, a baritone solo is rendered. An oriental dancing number by two girls is the next number. The quartette then demonstrates its versatility by a whistling selection.

As a finale, the quartette sings "Will O' the Wisp," one of the popular light selections.

The lighting effects throughout are particularly pleasing. Clouds are seen passing high in the heavens and there is just sufficient illumination on the deck for the audience to see the performers. Repeated outbursts of applause, and a demand for encores indicate the favor with which large audiences received this presentation at every performance.

This lobby display for "The Fortune Teller" was originated by the Alcazar theatre of Great Falls, Mont.

Stillman Plays Pickford Picture of Ancient Vintage

Stillman theatre, Cleveland, put on a novelty last week that proved the most popular number on the bill. It was an old-time movie of Mary Pickford and Owen Moore, in a two-reel comedy, made in 1909. The picture emphasizes the rude structure of the 1909 model of moving pictures as against the present day finished article. Slides used during the picture were put in up-side down. Frequent halts occurred, while adjustments were supposed to be made to the machinery. Then, to bring back the olden days, there was a singer. From the shadows of the stage she sang "My Little Kangaroo," while the picture was in progress, just as they used to do at the time this old-fashioned movie was made.

How to Judge Music Cue Sheets

By Charles D. Isaacson

THE best music cue sheet is the one you make yourself.

The next best music cue sheet is the one which fits into your own conditions and is made the way you would do it, if you had the understanding.

The thing to remember always in examining the cue sheet which is sent for your guidance is this:

"Does it fit the picture and does it help it?"

Unfortunately too many music sheets are designed to get rid of a mass of music which is slow-moving and which is dragged into the score for the purpose of making the exhibitor buy orchestra parts he'd never purchase otherwise. A cue sheet which is the product of a music publisher is generally to be looked upon with suspicion, for it is logical that no matter how honest the compiler, he is going to favor his own company's product over any other. If your cue sheets seem to be concentrated on the songs and selection of a certain group of publishers, to the exclusion of all other companies, watch your step.

I do not mean to say that it is not possible for any big concern to give satisfactory results for all pictures without going outside of its own library, but it is improbable. In other words, no music producer has all the genius in the world and has no more right to monopolize a theatre program than did the old time film-maker who attempted to sew the exhibitor up into contracts to rent no other pictures but their own brand.

The right kind of cue sheet must be made from the exhibitor angle and the picture angle.

I am interested in the welfare of the theatre owner in these discussions, and I must be brutally frank and honest.

In examining a cue sheet, the first and uppermost question for you to keep in mind is its relation to the picture. A man doesn't need to be a musician to answer this question. Anybody can tell if a piece of music fits in with the situation of the picture. The more experience you have in judging music settings the better you will be able to tell whether the selection is the most useful which might have been chosen. If there is a love scene, any romantic melody will do to be sure, but just as there are variations of love acting, so there are variations of love melodies. Some love is all mush and requires mushy ballades; some love is highly heroic and calls for depth of emotion; some love is more passion and sexual music is more fitting. . . . The better you know the music that has been written the better you'll be equipped to judge the closeness with which the melody fits to the shading of an idea. . . . But one sure thing you can tell if the music is absolutely out of keeping with the meaning of the picture! I have seen cue sheets which suggested compositions which not only were adaptable, but were nullifying! Imagine, in a recent cue sheet for a picture which I will not mention, the compiler had recommended a jazz dance number for a scene in the home of a bishop! Was he trying to satirize the actor? Was he attempting to make a burlesque of the action? For that was exactly what he was certain to accomplish.

The matter of being equipped to judge the relation of music to action, and action to music is one which I have already treated quite exhaustively; but I believe that the time is ripe for me to go into the subject again. This department has been running under my direction for half a year, all but two weeks; many have become habitual readers of our music discussion who were not with us during the first few weeks. And besides, even those who have followed the articles from the start, will be glad to refresh their memories and gain some of the new thoughts on the older subject.*

But now, I wish to adhere to the matter of music cue sheets. Before using one, figure to yourself, is this written to sell me music, or is it written to help me exhibit my picture more effectively? When you have made up your mind that your picture will be aided by the music which is suggested, then don't stop to worry about the matter of getting the necessary equipment.

I said at the start of this article that the best cue sheet would be the one you made yourself. Why? You would know your field, your patrons, your local conditions, your instrument and players and your music library. Consequently you would not only think about the picture but the kind of musician and instruments you had to play the musical accompaniment. Also you would select from the music you had on hand.

For the moment let us think of another allusion which will help to make this matter clear.

A good many theatre managers have a collection of letters of different kinds for their signs. When they need to make up a series of words and titles for the billboards or their lobbies or to be thrown on the screen, they just go to their collection and use the right kind of letters.

When a theatre has built up a good library of music, properly classified according to titles of the compositions and composers—but more particularly according to the usefulness of the compositions, then it is easy to find the appropriate hits for every purpose. A good picture-musical leader would be able to bring you on demand from his library any number of bits to illustrate every episode in a picture from the ocean storm to the calm rustic retreat; from the drunken woodsman to the quaint little girl in her nursery.

The best kind of a cue sheet consequently would be that which was made at home. The musical leader there would be acquainted with his ammunition, he

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Need of Comedies Seen by Joan Sales Manager

The demand for two-reel comedies of the better kind, reported to surpass the demand of any other brand of motion-picture by leading producers in the trade papers, is said to be borne out strongly by the reports sent into Joan headquarters by its new sales-manager, Louis Baum.

Baum left New York a month ago for a three-month tour of the principal exchange centers of the country. During his month's tour to date, he has covered Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Boston, Atlanta, Louisville, New Orleans, and Indianapolis. His succeeding journey will take him through Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinatti, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Kansas City, Salt Lake City, Denver, Los Angeles, Portland, and San Francisco. He reports a big demand for Billy West comedies.

Great Interest Shown in "Isobel"

Much interest has been aroused in the state rights field in the presentation of "Isobel; or, The Trail's End," a production adapted for the screen from James Oliver Curwood's successful novel of that name, by George H. Davis. This production, staged and directed by Edwin Carewe with a cast headed by House Peters and Jane Novak, is one of the really big productions of the year, and the fact that the independent field is appreciative of its being offered in that market is attested by the numerous inquiries Mr. Davis has received from all parts of the country.

Mr. Davis, who continues to make his New York headquarters in the offices of Joe Brandt, president of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, 1600 Broadway, announces that he has been deluged with applications for territory with "Isobel."

Edward Small Opens Hollywood Office

An announcement from Edward Small Enterprises comes to the industry in the way of information that he has just opened an office in Hollywood, California for the purpose of being in direct contact with the professional both in the East and West.

"Produce for the Public"

Fans, Not Exhibitors, Should Be the Goal, States Harry Revier

"PRODUCING a picture is very much like writing a book," states Harry J. Revier, who is directing "The Son of Tarzan." "The goal should be the public, the ultimate consumer. No successful novel is written for the benefit of the publisher or the newsstand dealer. It is aimed at the great majority, the class whose opinion marks its success or failure.

"Pictures have the same jury, are good or bad, according to the verdict of the same majority. But how many producers and directors recognize this fact? Many of the screen's five-reel weak sisters today are financial and artistic invalids simply because they were not made for the screen.

"In a general way, of course, the producers of these failures admitted that the films would eventually reach the public and made certain concessions accordingly. But in the main they aimed their pictures at the exhibitor. Thinking entirely of impressing him and without regard for the effect on the story, they put in this scene or that and burden the picture with an expensive look, later shifting the load to the theatre-owner in the form of increased rental.

"Many of the pictures thus laden with spectacular scenes and lavish sets would be far greater money-makers for the exhibitors if they contained good heart interest or little human touches instead of these startling but cold features. A strong, consistent story well acted and properly directed makes a good picture. To break up the interest and continuity just to inject flashy scenes is artistic suicide.

"I do not mean by this that the selling qualities of a picture should be slurred in production. But I do maintain that the sales merits of a picture are in the things that fit into it naturally and not in sets, scenes or effects that are tossed in promiscuously just to give it what some producers call a 'sales angle' for securing exhibitors' bookings.

"It is a matter of record that pictures costing only $15,000 to produce have earned more than productions whose cost sheet reached the $150,000 mark. The reason for this lies principally in the fact that the $15,000 picture was made for the benefit of the picture-goer and the $150,000 white elephant was made to sell."

Goodman Picture to Be Ready Shortly

A motion picture written, directed and produced by one man is to be released shortly. The picture is "Thoughtless Women", a drama in six reels, and it is the work of Daniel Carson Goodman, author of "Hagar Revelly", "The Taker" and other novels and who is said to be the first novelist to turn his attention to the motion picture field. Alma Rubens will be featured in the leading role.

One of Mr. Goodman's most recent pictures was "The Wonder Man", in which Robertson-Cole presented Georges Carpentier, the French boxing champion.

On invitation of C. B. Price the States Rights representatives of over twenty-six states enjoyed a special showing on Wednesday, November 3rd, of the six-reel special picture, "Your Daughter—and Mine," which is soon to be released in the United States and Canada. This is the English made film originally called "Hindle Wakes," after the play by the late Stanley Houghton.

"The Victim" Interests Boston Exhibitors

"Following the announcement that I had secured the distributing rights for the New England territory of 'The Victim' numerous inquiries for bookings have been pouring into my offices," states Sam Grand, of the Boston Federated Exchange.

"I think the release of this production marks a distinct advance for the independent exchanges and illustrates the rapid strides made in the independent field within the last few months," continued Mr. Grand.

Concurrent with the release of "Below the Deadline," is the added announcement from the officers of Sidney Ascher Productions, Inc., of the appointment of Mack D. Weinberger, as sales manager over this and other productions which it will release. Mr. Weinberger again enters the state right field after a short absence from the New York D. W. Griffith office, from he resigned recently.

Friedman Has New Series

Celebrated Players to Release One-Reel Comedies in December

JOE FRIEDMAN, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, has added another series of pictures to those he is releasing through independent state right exchanges, offering, in addition to the Gumps Animated Cartoons, the Celebrated Comedies, one-reelers, directed by J. Hunt, the first of which will be released about December 1st.

They are high-class situation comedies and Mr. Friedman states they will be among the most interesting and mirth provoking short subjects yet offered to the exhibitors of the United States.

Mr. Friedman already has disposed of this series to the following exchanges: Merit Film Corporation, New York, for New York State and New Jersey; Federated Film Exchange, Boston, the New England states; Standard Film Service, Cleveland, for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky; Crescent Film Company, Kansas City, Western Missouri and Kansas; Mid-West Distributing Company, Milwaukee, the State of Wisconsin; Supreme Film Company, Denver, all the western states; R. D. Lewis Film Company, Dallas, states of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas and the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, of Chicago, will handle Indiana and Illinois.

That Mr. Friedman will have still other pictures to put on the United States market shortly, is indicated by the fact that he has signed up with Cartoonist Orr, creator of the famous Kernel Cootie cartoons, which are one of the most popular features used on the comic page of many of the leading newspapers in the United States for a series of comedies based on these cartoons.

Arliss's Work Wins Praise

Screen Director of "The Devil" Pays Tribute to Prominent Actor

GEORGE ARLISS, who will make his motion picture debut in the title role of "The Devil," which Harry Leonhardt and Andrew J. Callaghan are producing for Associated Exhibitors, is "sitting in" on the assembling and titling of the picture. He has held off rehearsals for "The Green Goddess," his next stage play, until "The Devil" is finished and perfect, states Pathe.

Nothing has pleased the producers more than the close harmony that has prevailed between their star and their director from the beginning. "We knew that we had two unusually brilliant men," said Mr. Leonhardt, "and that it was only a question of their getting to know each other. We arranged that they should share the limousine to the studio in the mornings; and in that semi-privacy they talked, and talked, and talked some more, and found they had much in common. Their tastes in books, plays, music, art, their views of life, were very similar. A strong and abiding friendship now exists between them."

The following tribute was paid to the actor by James Young, the director of "The Devil:"

"It has been a privilege, a pleasure, a delight to direct Mr. Arliss. The spirit he has displayed in submitting to the arbitrary demands of the camera—requirements so arbitrary that they irk most dramatic stars almost beyond endurance—has been admirable. And because

Public Getting More Critical

Charles Urban, Kineto President Believes Audience is Exacting

"THE student of the motion picture and of motion picture audiences," states Charles Urban, "is noticing of late that there is a distinct improvement in the critical ability of the public and even more particularly, such an improvement on the part of the man who most closely serves the public audience—I mean the exhibitor."

Mr. Urban has been identified with motion picture production from the beginning—all the way back to 1896. In the many years that have passed since then he has won a big reputation in many fields of the motion picture; particularly of educational and quality pictures, also of mechanical appliances and especially of pictures in color.

"I have noticed recently," Mr. Urban continued, "very definite signs that our motion picture public has reached that stage where advertising men would say they were 'educated.' I mean that they know how to pick and choose. People no longer merely go to the 'movies.' They have reached the point where they choose their theatre because they know that theatre represents a certain quality which they are seeking.

"The time was when the public did not concern themselves with quality in pictures. There were not so many theatres then; neither were there so many pictures and going to a picture-house was much like taking a chance in a grab-bag. This is no longer the case. One might say the education process is about complete. The fans, as we call them, know the kind of pictures they want and what is more, they are going to get them.

"The big exhibitors, the first run theatre men, have been giving the short subjects more and more opportunity in their programs.

Three Two-Reelers Finished by Westart

The Westart Pictures Corporation, which started work six weeks ago in Tulsa, Oklahoma, making two-reel western dramas announce that they have finished the first three pictures. These were given a private screening for the officials of the company.

J. Gordon Cooper, who directed the Chief Flynn stories is directing the Westart pictures. The leading man is Jack Mower who will be remembered as the hero in "The Third Eye" for Pathe. Al Hart, and Robert Conville, are respectively, character and heavy leads with the company.

The Westart company is purchasing stories suitable for five-reel pictures and condensing them into two-reel lengths. Each story is made in 4,000 feet and reduced later to a 2,000 foot negative. A large studio has been erected in Tusla.

"Black Gold", the first picture, will be released through independent exchanges about December 1st. "Black Gold" is a western story the scenes of which are laid in the Oklahoma oil fields. The plot revolves around an attempt to steal valuable oil lands. The story has a surprise finish with the denouement following the climax closely. The thirty Westart daredevil cowboys take a very active part in this and all other Westart pictures.

"Out of the Clouds", the second picture is a new departure in Westerns. "The Fatal Scar" is the third picture.

"The Son of Tarzan" on Final Episode

Harry Revier, director, Roy Somerville, photodramatist, and a company of over twenty players, have just returned from San Francisco, where they spent a few days finishing the initial scenes of the fifteenth and final episode of "The Son of Tarzan," which Mr. Revier is producing as a big special serial for the National Film Corporation.

Through the courtesy of Captain Cousins of the "President," Mr. Revier was enabled to secure a number of shipboard scenes for the grand finale of the serial while en route to the Golden Gate city.

Included in the party on location were: Karla Schramm, Manilla Martan, P. Dempsey Tabler, George Morrell and Eugene Burr of the cast, Ad Linkoff, assistant director, and Lee Humiston and Charles Clark, cameramen. "The Son of Tarzan" was adapted by Mr. Somerville from the famous book by Edgar Rice Burroughs. The world's rights to the serial are controlled by David P. Howells.

Lina Cavalieri, the star of "Mad Love," arrived in New York last week to fulfill her operatic engagements for the season, according to an announcement of Victor Kremer. Chicago Executives Meet

Independent Films Ass'n Heads Discuss Future of State Rights

IS it a fact that exhibitors in every section of the country are placing more bookings with the various independent exchanges than ever before? How does the volume of business being done by the independent exchanges compare with that of the program exchanges?

These two interesting questions were threshed out pro and con at a meeting of the executives of the Independent Films Association in Chicago last week.

An analysis of conditions in each distributing territory was presented by H. E. Belford, sales manager, with the prediction that if the independent film exchanges could rely on getting more releasing series like the Neal Hart Specials, which are released every six weeks, they would very soon be head and shoulders above the program exchanges in volume of business.

"The program exchanges are booking the cheaper pictures," said Mr. Belford. "The state right men are getting better prices for their product, because the exhibitors find more satisfaction in doing business with them and also because the pictures handled by the independents strike a higher average of quality than most program releases."

Reports from various parts of the country were said to have showed that state right men are doing capacity business at the present time, and that this business has shown a tendency to increase as rapidly as new units were added.

Independent Films Association will open a New York office within the next thirty days. Plans for increased production of its members exchanges for more units along the line of the successful Neal Hart series.

One thing brought out at the meeting was that the independent market offered a great opportunity for producers who were willing to cater to that field and make pictures fitted to the needs and requirements of the independent exchanges.

Following the business session, there was a dinner at the Blackstone Hotel. Those present were Eddy Eckels, president and general manager; H. A. Woody, secretary and treasurer; H. E. Belford, sales manager; Richard Robertson, advertising manager; H. C. Robertson, foreign representative; M. B. Raub, service manager.

Broadwell to Recapitalize

"Nick Carter" Producers to Have Four Units With Added Capital

BROADWELL PRODUCTIONS, INC., producers of the "Nick Carter" series which are being released through the Pioneer Film Corporation, announce through their New York representative, John J. Glavey, 1457 Broadway, New York City, the recapitalization of the Corporation from $30,000 represented by 60,000 shares of common stock to $3,800,000 represented by 300,000 shares of common stock, par value $10.00 each and 800,000 shares of preferred stock, par value $10.00 each, payable at 8% per annum on the common stock and 10% on the preferred stock.

The recapitalization was approved by the Secretary of State of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, a few days ago.

Following this extension of capital, the company announce for their future production plans the organization of two production units, each of which will make six special super-features per year and one company to make two-reel features, also one company to produce a feature serial. This will give the Broadwell Productions, Inc., four producing units.

Beside Tom Carrigan, Mae Gaston, Colin Chase and Harry Keenan, a well known woman star has been signed by Mr. Broadwell for the features.

Photoplay Based on Facts

"The Sky Pilot" Made by Curtis Is Based on Author's Own Experiences

"THE SKY PILOT," on which the motion-picture production of the Cathrine Curtis Corporation of Los Angeles and New York is based, and which is being put on with an all-star cast, is considered to be the most famous and popular novel of Ralph Connor, the Canadian preacher-writer. "Ralph Connor" is the pen name of the Rev. Charles W. Gordon, pastor of the Church of St. Stephens in Winnipeg. His novel is not all imaginative; it grew out of the author's actual experiences in the cattle ranges of Montana and among the rough pioneers in the foothills of the Canadian Rockies.

Cathrine Curtis purchased the rights to "The Sky Pilot" for the corporation of which she is the head. She has seen to it that the picturization of this drama of the hills and plains should lack no aid to success. She determined that all of the principal scenes in the picture should be made on the exact locations made familiar by Ralph Connor, and she secured an all-star cast to interpret the well-known characters. The picture will be released through the National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Field Shows Interest in Capital Stars

Lester Cuneo in "Lone Hand Wilson" seems to be making an instant appeal to the states-right field, according to report from Chicago. For many days the office of the Capital Film Company has been invaded by an army of telegraph and special delivery messengers. Up to the present time, ninety-five per cent of the state-right buyers have been heard from through some manner of communication.

A circular just being sent to all exhibitors in the United States, with an enclosed card, is bringing unheard of results. Exhibitors in the Chicago territory even coming in personally to get information regarding "Lone Hand Wilson."

The Fritzie Ridgeway two-reel Westerns, released in October, are also being received very favorably by movie fans all over the country, according to reports received from state-right buyers.

W. D. Russell, of Capital, sees nothing but the most optimistic future for the company because of the instant appeal Mr. Cuneo and Miss Ridgeway are making.

Equity Feature Booked Heavily in New York

Strong booking of "Whispering Devils," Equity's six-reel states-rights feature starring Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby, is reported by the Commonwealth Film Corp., which controls New York State.

In the course of a month it is claimed over two hundred bookings have been secured, covering the finest houses of New York State. The rentals are said to be above the average, and set a high water mark in Commenwealth's history, rivalling the income on the Clara Kimball Young productions in amount and length of run.

Fischer Pictures Past Half Way Mark

David G. Fischer, director and vice-president of Fox-Fischer Masterplays, announces that the half-way mark has been passed in the production of his eight-reel special, "In the Shadow of the Dome", featuring Dixie Lee. After another week's work at the Brooklyn studio, scenes will be taken of the House of Representatives in session.

Mr. Fischer has already taken 32,000 feet of film for this production, the total footage of which will amount to 60,000 feet before cutting.

Alexander Will Handle Many Features

The Alexander Film Corporation have closed contracts with the Ascher Features, Inc., for the physical distribution, the entire output of the Hamilton Film Corporation, the Triangle Film Corporation, Ascher Features, Inc., and the Ascher Productions. All the productions from Triangle with Hart, Talmadge, Ray Gish, Keenan, Olive Thomas, etc. will be recreated with new paper new prints and re-edited. The Alexander distribution will cover the entire State of New York and Northern New Jersey.

Sherman Speeds Up Production

Third Feature Named by New Producing Organization

HARRY A. SHERMAN, head of the recently formed Sherman Productions Corp., announces that until franchises covering the entire United States and Canada have been issued by Sherman Productions Corporation, no announcement will be made regarding the group of independent exchanges which will act as its distributing units.

When the circuit is complete a definite release schedule will be adopted by the franchise-holders and the equitable Sherman plan of delivering positive prints, based on actual pro-rata production cost, without advances of any kind, by the exchange, will then be put into active operation.

Meanwhile, President Sherman is carrying out his production plans, which contemplate the completion of from four to six attractions before the date of the initial release. Announcement has already been made of the completion of two productions, "Man and Woman" and "Miss 139." The third, announced this week for early release on the Sherman schedule is "What Will People Say?" a super-special which it is claimed will prove a vertible screen sensation.

Two other stories, announcement concerning which will be made later, are also being put into production, and another is under consideration, which will call for picturization upon a most elaborate scale.

Production on the last mentioned picture probably will be delayed until it can be submitted to the Sherman franchise-holders for decision as to its cost and box office possibilities, for under the Sherman policy no picture costing more than $100,000 will be made by Sherman Productions Corporation without first receiving the sanction and approval of the exchanges which will release it.

President Sherman is confident, however, that this decision will be favorable once the character of the story and its advertising and potential box office value is understood.

As he points out, under the Sherman plan of distribution, the production cost among twenty-five exchanges, according to territory, only after the picture is completed and ready, the question of expenditure is of secondary importance, if the requisite attraction value is contained in the picture.

Under the Sherman plan, the practical advantages to the distributor and the exhibitor are obvious, for the producer's and the distributor's profits are combined without detriment to either, and by eliminating the profit ordinarily required by the producer the system is said to operate directly to the benefit of the exhibitor as well as the exchange.

Equitable booking values are to be maintained based on the real cost of the picture, and not upon an arbitrary figure established by the producer and this operates for the benefit of all concerned.

"The Sherman plan," stated one exchangeman, "once it is put into full operation, will do more to standardize picture booking costs on the basis of a fair and equitable proportion of the actual production cost, than any other system so far evolved.

"With the privilege of rejecting any inferior picture, which Harry Sherman's personal guarantee affords each franchise-holder, the Sherman plan of dealing with distributors while entirely practical, is the fairest and most advantageous ever offered to the independent exchanges of their country."

$10,000 to Publicize Serial

Metro Film Exchange to Boost "Tarzan" in Philadelphia

ROBERT LYNCH, manager of the Metro Film Exchange, of 1321 Vine street, Philadelphia, which exchange owns the territory of Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey on the David P. Howells fifteen episode serial "The Son of Tarzan," is ready to start his big drive on this feature serial full of confidence.

"I am certain," states Mr. Lynch, "that not only will 'The Son of Tarzan' be one of the greatest box office serials, but that it will outdraw 'The Lost City' serial. I have been informed by not less than sixty per cent of the exhibitors who ran 'The Lost City' that it was a life saver for them during the summer months."

Metro Film Exchange, always one of the most enterprising and wide-awake in the Sleepy City, will spend at least $10,000 in publicity before any theatre will be allowed to run the first episode. They expect to put out two forty-foot floats with six horses to each one, with a miniature forest on one half of the float and on the other half two cages to contain different animals. One of these trucks is going to parade all around Philadelphia for thirty days before release date, going from one public school to another and in the evenings up and down the main streets. It will also visit all theatres possible.

Metro will go into newspaper publicity almost equally strong. They expect to take space in the newspapers of every town of any size in the entire state of Pennsylvania. "In other words," announces Mr. Lynch, "we intend to make this one of the best box office attractions of the season."

"The Son of Tarzan" is a fifteen episode jungle serial based on the book by Edgar Rice Burroughs. It was directed by Harry Revier from the scenario by Roy Somerville. World rights are controlled by David P. Howells, of 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

It is pointed out that the various exchanges who have already purchased rights on the serial are a recommendation of it. It abounds with thrills and rapid fire action, has a beautiful scenic background, and includes a very capable cast among its other assets. Philadelphia and vicinity, considered by some to be one of the best serial centers in the country, is expected by the trade to respond generously to the advertising and publicity appeal made by Bob Lynch. While no bookings are announced as yet, it is practically assured that "The Son of Tarzan" will find its way into some of the largest and most exclusive of Philadelphia's theatres. It is described as the kind of a serial that will win for itself a place in houses where never before has a serial been shown.

Joan Feature in Chicago

"She Played and Paid" Said to Go Big in Week's Run at Bandbox

"SHE PLAYED AND PAID," the Joan feature starring Fanny Ward, opened at the Bandbox theatre in Chicago on November 1st, and, it is reported, drew big crowds throughout the entire week. The Bandbox is one of the foremost of the loop theatres.

Chicago was in the midst of its first show storms at the time and the outlook for the picture was bleak. "Despite all the competing elements which included many strong bills in competing houses, 'She Played and Paid,'" announces Joan, "entered the Bandbox and with its tempting title incited the fans of Chicago to sit in at the 'game' and pay the price."

"Another surprising thing," states Joan, "in connection with the showing of 'She Played and Paid' in Chicago last week is that no particularly sensational stunts were employed to steer the public into the Bandbox. The showing of the picture was treated in a dignified matter-of-course way, as the Bandbox theatre has a prestige that does not call for any exciting campaigns in connection with its pictures though there have been showings where indirect drives were undertaken on a grand scale.

ONLY NEW SPROCKETS IN FIVE YEARS!!!

"These SIMPLEX machines have been run for five years. Only repairs were new sprockets. You can't beat them."

Liberty Theatre 10 Walla Walla, Wash.

Jack Eaton, president of the Town and Country Films, announces to W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, that "The Happy Duffer," a golf picture, will be the third of the Sport Pictorials. The fourth will be "Girls Will Be Boys," a girls' camp story. The fifth is entitled "Athletics in the Making," a subject taken at West Point, showing the cadets drilling, fencing and doing mass boxing. The sixth will be "How Do You Get Your Exercise," which will illustrate almost every kind of sport from football to trout fishing, and include slow motion of Greek sports.

Broadway Favorite is Signed by World

Eileen Wilson, who is being featured in "The Lady of the Lamp," the successful show now running at the Republic theatre in New York, has been signed up by the World Motion Picture Corporation.

This announcement was made by the World through Director James B. ("Smiling Jimmy") Kelly, who states that Miss Wilson will appear in the series of two-reel comedies which they will shortly start releasing.

As has been announced, the initial comedy will be entitled "The Little Liar," and Eileen Wilson has been engaged to appear in this. The acquisition of Miss Wilson will round out the cast for this production in every respect. Those who have followed the career of Miss Wilson on the legitimate stage are well aware of her ability. She has afforded many a pleasurable moment to those who delight in comedy-drama, and her present popularity has been earned by her inimitable and lovable dramatic style.

Louis Weiss Corrects False Statement

The following statement has been received from Louis Weiss, vice-president of the Numa Pictures Corporation, and also Artclass Corporation:

"Concerning the article printed in a trade publication of last week, emanating from Numa Pictures Corporation, I wish to emphasize the fact that Jimmie, the principal lion in the S & E state right offering "It Might Happen to You," is the same lion who was recently registered at the Belleclaire Hotel in New York with Mr. Walter Beckwith, the latter registering under the name of T. R. Zann.

"'The Revenge of Tarzan," in which this lion appears, was produced by Numa Pictures Corporation and not by Artclass. Due to my connection with Numa Pictures Corp. and also Artclass Pictures, a natural mistake was made by S & E Enterprises in stating that Artclass had produced 'The Revenge of Tarzan'."

"The Struggle" Now Ready

Canyon Announces Second Franklyn Farnum Western in Series of Six

"THE STRUGGLE," with Franklyn Farnum in the stellar role, has been announced by the Canyon Pictures Corporation as the second release of their series of six, five-reel western features which are being produced by Colonel William N. Selig.

Franklyn Farnum in this production plays the role of Dick Storm, a strenuous young Easterner who flees west to escape punishment for his supposed murder of a boxing instructor.

The advent of these pictures is claimed by Canyon to mark a decided step forward in the production of western photoplays. All of them are said to have compact and logical plots and are from the pens of the best writers of the day. The stories are all dramatic and have many humorous situations to lighten up each picture.

"The Struggle" was written by William E. Wing and was directed by Otto Lederer under the personal supervision of Colonel William N. Selig.

The series is proving to be a very attractive offering to the independent buyers of the counutry, and six pictures are being released at the rate of one every six weeks.

Prizma Campaign a Success

Judging from results now in evidence on the screens of the foremost Broadway motion picture theatres, the recent campaign, launched by Prizma to interest producers and exhibitors in the possibilities of enhancing their productions and presentations by the interpolation of Prizma color-schemes, is meeting with marked success.

The main title of "Madame Peacock" with Nazimova in the stellar role has been attractively done in Prizma colors and has excited favorable comment at the Capitol Theatre where it has been playing this week. At last Monday's showing of "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole super-special, at the Hotel Astor, it was noted that the main title was also Prizma-colored. "The Stealers," playing this week at the Broadway Theatre, is also representative of the artistic innovations being effected, Prizma colors entering into the main title and the sub-titles interspersed throughout the entire footage. The Capitol Dome, the trade-mark of the big Broadway picture palace, is also being shown on the screen attractively augmented by the insertion of chromatic effects by Prizma.

Another noteworthy achievement of the Prizma color process, recently showing along Broadway, is "The Melody of Flowers." In this attraction, Prizma, co-operating with Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, has synchronized beautiful color schemes in flowery settings with orchestral numbers. "The Melody of Flowers" has had, up-to-date, a seven week's run on Broadway—five weeks at the Critrion, one week at the Rivoli and this week at the Rialto. This harmonious co-ordination of colors and music has excited the admiration of the Broadway audiences.

It is understood that Prizma is

"I have shipped to our branches today a picture that has the sweep of action of 'The Birth of a Nation,' a picture such as I have longed for all summer and fall to bear the imprint of Associated Producers; a picture so fine, so big, so powerfully dramatic that it made a group of hardened picture people who watched it gasp for breath. This picture is Maurice Tourneur's 'The Last of the Mohicans,' a mighty production."

Mayer at Rothacker Plant

Views Mildred Harris Chaplin's "Old Dad"; Announces New Plans

ON his way back to the Coast Louis B. Mayer visited the Rothacker Laboratories where he viewed Mildred Harris Chaplin's picture "Old Dad" after its final editing. He was accompanied by Jack Schulze whom he has signed up to be technical director for all Mayer productions. Mr. Schulze staged "Four Years in Germany," "Rio Grande" and many other big successes.

It was a case of optimist meeting optimist when Mr. Mayer shook hands with Watterson R. Rothacker. "The coming year will be even bigger than you predict," said the visitor to Mr. Rothacker.

The Coast producer told he had contracted John M. Stahl to make specials.

"Mr. Stahl's first," said Mr. Mayer, "will be 'Women That Pass in the Night.' And the picture will be as good as the title. This will be one to watch for.

"Edwin Carewe will direct one picture for Anita Stewart and then will make a big special.

"Mrs. Chaplin's picture, 'The Woman in His House,' is going out as a road show. It will start on Broadway. We are arranging for a theatre now."

The Smith family—consisting of Pete, the Neilen publicity director, his wife and his infant heir apparent—en route to the Coast, stopped over in Chicago to see Marshall Neilan's latest, "Dinty," screened at the Rothacker Laboratories.

Miss Rubenstein came to Los Angeles only a year ago, when Mr. Lesser moved his executive offices from San Francisco, and while it is said to be her intention to retire from business activities in the Lesser organization, it is regarded as doubtful by her friends who know of Miss Rubenstein's intense interest in her work.

Raye Dean Leading Lady for Bert Lytell

Raye Dean has been engaged by Metro to play the principal feminine role in "A Message From Mars," the first Maxwell Karger production starring Bert Lytell, to be made and distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation. Seitz studio in New York.

Ruth Roland Completes Seventh Pathe Serial

"Ruth of the Rockies", Ruth Roland's seventh Pathe serial, finished its first run with the release on December 5 of the fifteenth chapter of this screen adaptation of Johnston McCulley's novel "Broadway Bab." The picture claimed a greater total of bookings than any previous Ruth Roland starring vehicle and has shown to a number of screen patrons that far exceeds the highest mark recorded by any other serial before the completion of its first run, says Pathe.

At present Miss Roland is at work at the Brunton studios filming "The Avenging Arrow," which will present in fifteen chapters a film version of a novel by Arthur Preston Hankins.

Good Cast in Chinese Play

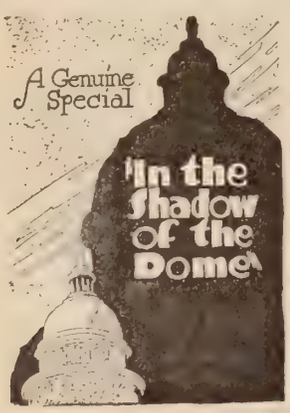
"Beyond the Great Wall" Cast Choosen from Broadway Plays

A CAST of Broadway players will interpret the principal roles in Photo Products Export Company's six-reel Chinese melodrama, "Beyond the Great Wall", scheduled for release as an independent attraction sometime in December.

The cast was assembled from the past season's Chinese stage plays, "East Is West" and Belasco's "The Sun Daughter." Lark Bronlee who understudied Fay Bainter in "East Is West" has the leading role of the Chinese girl; William Crowell who was seen in support of Lenore Ulrich in "The Sun Daughter", has the role of the young Chink and Joseph Chailee who was last seen on the stage with Otis Skinner in "Pietro" is casted as the Chinese mandarin. Richard Martin, said to be Richard Bartlemess' nearest double has the leading juvenile role.

The picture was six months in the making, a Chinese village having been erected by Director A. B. Heath and his staff of assistants. Howard Greene photographed. The picture was titled and edited by Joseph L. Kelley and produced by Eastern Film Corporation. The world's distributing rights are controlled by Photo Products Export Company. The art titles are the work of a Japanese artist and consist of photographic enlargements of miniature works in clay models. The picture is titled "Beyond the Great Wall" because of the notoriety of this expansive piece of masonry, catalogued as one of the "seven wonders of the world."

Photo Products Export Company's chief executive announces that immediately after the launching of the selling campaign of this production, another picture will be commenced under the direction of Mr. Heath. It is said that the story will be an adaptation of a famous author's work. It is likely that Miss Bronlee, the leading character of "Beyond the Great Wall", will be casted for the leading role in the next production. Photo Products is as yet undecided as to the manner in which this production will be handled. In all probability it will be sold outright.



Press-Book Available on "Velvet Fingers"

Loew Reiterates His Stand

"Exhibitor, First, Last and All the Time," Says Metro; Has Music Plans

MARCUS LOEW has reiterated his stand as "an exhibitor first, last and all the time," announces a statement received from the home-office of the Metro Pictures Corporation. The statement defining Mr. Loew's status was issued on the occasion of his recent inspection of the Metro studios on the Coast. Mr. Loew's observations at the studios were made entirely from the viewpoint of an exhibitor, says Metro, despite his heavy investment in the Metro organization. Mr. Loew plans to return East by way of San Francisco, Denver, Chicago and other cities in which he has large theatrical holdings. Mr. Loew is quoted by Metro as follows:

"I am an exhibitor myself and look at the amusement business through the eyes of the exhibitor," he said. "Wherever I have opened houses it has been to offer a new class of entertainment, or because the ownership of houses by producing organizations has handicapped the distribution of Metro features.

"My sole desire, so far as Metro pictures are concerned, is to put out the highest quality of pictures that can be made. I must have quality picture for my own houses and other exhibitors want the same kind of attractions. I am co-operating with other theatre owners in every move that promises to improve the quality of productions placed on the market.

"Right now I am interested in developing the production of musical scores to accompany all of our pictures. There is no denying that this feature of picture making has not been studied as carefully as it should have been, in the interest of the exhibitor.

"I have already established a musical library for the use of the exhibitor and plans are under way through which we hope to acquire the services of some of the greatest composers of music in America."

"So Long Letty" Scoring

Press Reviews and Exhibitors' Comments Register Satisfaction

ROBERTSON-COLE announces that "flattering daily newspaper reviews" are coming in constantly from various sections of the country on its release, "So Long Letty," the screen version of Elmer Harris and Oliver Morosco's stage success. Al Christie filmed the production. Commenting on the way the members of the cast have put this picture over, the New York Daily News says in part:

A T. Roy Barnes picture is 'sartin sure' to be comic. Any one who watched his long, lean gyrations, his funny facial antics, in 'Scratch My Back' will be willing to risk a second trial of his mirth producing faculties and go to see "So Long Letty."

"T. Roy is a rarely apt comedian in his role, and Miss Colleen Moore darkly pretty as his demure consort. Also there's that dumpling, Walter Hiers, looking as well fed as usual, doing the human lawn mower with pathos; and Grace Darmond is effective in garish, well-clad fashion."

Manager Will D. Harris, of the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, was one of the first to offer "So Long Letty" in the Middle West. The Columbus Dispatch said:

"Excellent advice to husbands and wives who are dissatisfied with each other is to be had from "So Long Letty,' the feature comedy which will be the attraction at the Grand this week. One of the most successful musical comedies ever introduced on the legitimate stage, 'So Long Letty' has been splendidly transferred to the screen, the popular T. Roy Barnes and fat, jolly Walter Hiers as the husbands, and Grace Darmond and Colleen Moore, as the wives."

Texans Praise "Earthbound"

El Paso House Closes Its Regular Performance for Special Showing

CLOSING the doors of a theatre doing capacity business at 7 o'clock in the evening in order that the theatre might be cleared in time for an 8:30 invitation showing of another picture is something unusual in motion picture annals. That is what Manager Ben B. Lewis of the Ellanay and the Grecian theatres did in El Paso for Goldwyn's production of Basil King's photodrama of the unseen world, "Earthbound," on Wednesday, Oct. 20, according to a statement from the Goldwyn office.

The invitation-screening took place at the Grecian theatre at half past eight o'clock. Invitations had been sent to clergymen, educators, newspaper men and others prominent in the life of El Paso and vicinity. The production aroused no end of comment among the guests present, it is stated by Goldwyn.

General House of Fort Bliss was among those present. He pronounced "Earthbound" one of the most splendid pictures he had ever seen and stated that he did not know when he had been so affected by story or sermon.

Rothacker Workers See Scenes of Holyland

One hundred and fifty Rothacker workers took a Sunday afternoon trip via the film magic carpet, to the Holyland. They were the guests of E. M. Newman, traveler and lecturer, who opened the season in Orchestra Hall.

Mr. Newman recently returned with film material for five lectures—"Jerusalem and the Holyland." "Damascus and Syria," "Constantinople and Turkey," "Spain" and "Ireland." Rothacker Laboratories developed the negatives and made the prints.

The pictures screened in Orchestra Hall Sunday showed in detail present conditions in the Holyland. Films made before the war emphasized the contrast between Jerusalem under the Turks and under present British protection. The British have built bridges to take the place of those destroyed by the Germans. A modern waterworks system now brings water from a distance of nearly 200 miles, to where formerly Jerusalem obtained its water from unsanitary wells and reservoirs.

Harold Lloyd in "Wrong Number" Due Shortly

Harold Lloyd will be seen soon in his Pathe production "Wrong Number," which the comedian completed a short time ago at the Hal Roach studios in Culver City. "Wrong Number," prints of which were shipped recently to the Pathe offices in New York, has not been given a release date as yet, but it is expected a definite date will be forthcoming soon.

W. R. Lighton is Signed by Dial Film Co.

Following on the heels of the announcement that the Dial Film Company has signed T. Hayes Hunter to direct a series of special productions, comes the news that W. R. Lighton, author and playwright, is to do the continuity on the Dial-Hunter productions.

Mr. Lighton is the author of the famous "Billy Fortune" stories that ran for many consecutive weeks in the Saturday Evening Post, and he is at present engaged in writing a new series of stories.

Fiction Offers Best Material

So Says Bayard Veiller Discounting B'way Play's Value

"THAT the picture-holder must turn to the fiction magazines, or novelists and original scenario writers exclusively and give up the idea that successful films can be made from Broadway's current plays if he is to protect himself in his investment" is the opinion of Bayard Veiller, director of Metro's West Coast productions. And Mr. Veiller should know. Having been associated with Broadway for many years not only as a newspaper man but as a successful playwright, his assertion cannot be easily disputed.

Metro's West Coast director has just paid a flying visit to New York and during his sojourn consented to talk to a representative of the NEWS upon a subject which is of paramount importance to the exhibitor and the public at large.

"The backbone of America, which means the entire country west of the Hudson river, is not interested in the Broadway play," continued Mr. Veiller, "all it asks is to be entertained. So the announcement of the exhibitor that Susie Snowflakes or Paul Dewdrop is appearing at his theatre in an adaptation of the great Broadway success, "Put Out the Fire," will bring him box office receipts only as far as the personal popularity of the star is concerned."

Mr. Veiller feels that the producer has been buncoed on the Broadway product. "Nine cases out of ten the play will prove to be poor screen material," he intimated, "and even if it scores in the silent version it has its appeal entirely with a metropolitan clientele. Why take my individual case, for example. Here I am, a Broadway man, living in California. It is natural that I should be in touch with the big street, yet I find I am no more interested in it than the exhibitor or picturegoer who resides in the Middle West. If I, who was formerly identified with Broadway, am out of touch with it, what must be the case of the fellow who only knows it by reputation?"

Mr. Veiller stated that as far as his plans are concerned he will continue to hunt for original material among the fiction magazines or the successful novel, with an eye upon the original scenario writer. He went on to say "that the stage is cluttered with the speculative producer who is anxious to dispose of the screen rights to his subject thereby gaining a fabulous sum in order that the play may be presented with the proceeds. Of course this plan reacts upon the screen producer and eventually upon the exhibitor and his public. To realize upon his expenditure the producer must ask an excessive price for his film—a film which, in reality, may not be worth over a few thousand dollars. The exhibitor, to realize upon his investment, must charge a higher admission price and publicize it with an elaborate exploitation campaign. And the dear public pays and pays and pays—yes, pays the price for an inferior picture which is supposed to be a masterpiece because it is an adaptation of the Broadway hit."

"Outside of four or five stage successes," Mr. Veiller continued, "such as 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' 'Way Down East,' 'Ben Hur,' and 'The Heart of Maryland,' the film public is not acquainted with the theatre. So the current hit of this season or last season loses its value. Unless it is sponsored by a well known and artistic producer."

The Metro chief added that his company will present only those Broadway plays which have been given a reputation by lengthy runs and sponsored by producers whose names mean something a thousand miles or more from New York. In proof of his earnestness in giving the magazine author or novelist a chance, Mr. Veiller has signed up for his company such favorite fictionists as Arthur Somers Roche, Donn Byrne and John Edward Russell. These writers accompanied the Metro chief back to the Coast. He states that he is writing three original stories for production, one of them being a sequel to his famous play, "Within the Law." Messrs. Roche, Byrne, and Russell have been, and still are, steady contributors to the fiction mart. F. Scott Fitzgerald is expected to go to Metro's West Coast studios in the near future. The company already has an option on his stories. Mr. Russell will specialize upon stories of the South Seas where he has maintained a residence for several months. The Samoans have chosen him as the logical successor to Robert Louis Stevenson because of his story-telling ability. His honorary title is Tusitala (meaning story-teller)—the same title that was conferred upon Stevenson.

Mr. Vieller is authority for the statement that every author will have a chance under his new plan of production. Whether his stories appear in a magazine of large circulation or otherwise, makes no difference just so long as they contain screen ingredients. Henri Bendel, the New York modiste, has been engaged to dress all productions. And several new directors have been signed to put Mr. Vieller's plans into execution.

Five Realart Films Listed

Four Issues Under Star Franchise Plan and Taylor Special on List

FIVE productions are announced by Realart for November release. They are "The Furnace", a William Desmond Taylor production; "Her Beloved Villain", with Wanda Hawley; "Eyes of the Heart", featuring Mary Miles Minter; "The New York Idea", Alice Brady in the leading role; and "Blackbirds", Justine Johnstone's first picture for Realart.

The four productions last named are part of the announced quota for the current year under Realart's Star Franchise. The fifth, "The Furnace", is the second Taylor super-special for Realart.

"The Furnace" is an adaptation of the book by "Pan", the famous anonymous English writer. Marriage and divorce form the theme and the treatment is declared to be unusually compelling.

An all-star cast was chosen for "The Furnace", among the players being Agnes Ayres, Jerome Patrick, Milton Sills, Theodore Roberts, Lucien Littlefield, Betty Francisco, Mayme Kelso, Robert Bolder, Helen Dunbar and Edward Martindale.

Wanda Hawley appears in "Her Beloved Villain" which is adapted from the famous French play "La Veglione", the stage production in this country being called "The Masked Ball." The cast includes Ramsey Wallace, F. Templar Powell, Tully Marshall, Lillian Leighton, Gertrude Claire, Robert Bolder, Margaret McWade, Irma Coonly and Jay Peters.

"Blackbirds" is Justine Johnstone's first Realart picture. She is supported by a strong cast. William Boyd, Walter Walker, Marie Shotwell, Charles Gerard, Alex Saskins, Grace Parker, Jessie Arnold and Ada Boshell are included in the supporting cast.

A witty comedy of marriage and divorce is Alice Brady's latest Realart picture, "The New York Idea." In the cast are Lowell Sherman, Hedda Hopper, George Howell, Lionel Pape, Margaret Linden, Edwards Davis, Harry Hocky, Nina Herbert, Julia Hurley, Marie Burke, Emily Fitzroy, Robert Vivian, Edgar Norton and George Stevens.

W. H. Cline Speaks at Ad Luncheon

Many truths and valuable bits of advice to exhibitors and advertising and publicity men of theatres were given in the twenty-minute talk by William Hamilton Cline, Assistant Manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Los Angeles, to an audience of more than 200 who attended the L. A. Advertising Club luncheon, presided over by Frank L. Browne, Manager of Clune's Broadway Theatre, L. A.

In the opinion of Mr. Cline, the most important advertising of the theatre is that of securing "over the backyard fence comments," and making the patrons of the theatre feel perfectly at home and comfortable in every sense while in the house. The latter is emphatically pointed out by the slogan of the L. A. Orpheum, "There is No Place Like Home Except The Orpheum." For advertising and publicity the newspaper, of course, is the best, but in many instances theatres do not get the full benefit of their paid space or the courtesy space extended them, for the reason that proper copy is not furnished the newspapers, declared Mr. Cline.

"Black Beauty," Vitagraph's picture, is nearing completion at the West Coast studios. Above are Jean Paige and Jimmy Morrison as they appear in the prologue

Completing "The Black Beauty" for Vita

Production on Vitagraph's picturization of Anna Sewell's classic, "Black Beauty," is rapidly nearing completion at the Western Studio of that company, under the direction of David Smith. The magnificent animal which plays the title role is already a marked steed in the streets of Los Angeles, and its recent appearance at the Los Angeles Horse Show, in which it won a prize, has also helped to create interest in the forthcoming production.

Jean Paige plays as "Jessie Gordon," the little old fashioned girl of the book. James Morrison impersonates "Harry Blomefield," the vicar's son. George Webb plays the polished heavy; John Steppling and Mollie McConnell take the part of Squire and Mrs. Gordon; Leslie T. Peacocke and Adele Farrington appear as Lord and Lady Wynwaring; Robert Bolder and Margaret Mann play the Vicar and his wife; Colin Kenny is George Gordon, brother of the heroine; Farmer Grey will be done by George Pierce; Georgia French is seen as Jessie Gordon's sister.

Original Musical Score for Metro Special

Louis Gottschalk, the prominent composer, who has made a special study of the use of music in connection with screen productions, is writing a complete musical score for "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," under the terms of a contract just made with Metro.

Instead of making use of bits of popular selections, as frequently is done in the preparation of scores for films, Mr. Gottschalk will furnish original compositions to accompany the action of the picture from the first scene to the final camera shot, states Metro.

Addition to Fox Studio in New York Started

The old building which stood on the corner of 56th Street and Tenth Avenue, New York City, has disappeared and stoneworkers have started laying a new foundation for Fox there. It is expected that the new corner of the Fox building will join the original structure to its roof level within the next three weeks.

Beadell With Stoll Films

Well Known Chicago Man to Open New Exchange Early in December

THE STOLL FILM CORPORATION, a newcomer in the field of distribution, announces that it has secured Ben W. Beadell as manager of the exchange it is to open in Chicago the first week in December. Ralph O. Proctor, general manager of the Stoll Corporation, closed the contract with Mr. Beadell last week, but the announcement was kept under cover for several days, and comes as a considerable surprise to Beadell's hundreds of friends in Chicago.

Mr. Beadell is one of the ablest and best liked exchange men in the west, is a guaranteed, all wool Chicago product, and has been connected with film circles in the Windy City for twelve years. He was born and educated in Chicago and in 1909 became connected with the Thomas A. Edison Film Company, then among the biggest in the country, and became their western representative. He had to travel some in those days and his territory encompassed Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri.

In 1904 Edison's Chicago office was closed and Mr. Beadell took over the western representation of Essanay. For three and one-half years he covered his old ground for Essanay, putting the pictures over in a big way and making an enviable record as a successful sales manager.

When Fred Aiken formed the Allen Film Company to handle Selig's "Garden of Allah," Mr. Beadell joined him, and in a few weeks' time had this picture in more theatres than any other feature in the same territory. Since that time Mr. Beadell has continued his successful career as manager of the large film concern and friends predict that even bigger things are in store for him with the Stoll Film Corporation.

When Mr. Beadell takes charge of his new office the first week in December, he will have affiliated with him a splendid sales force, the members of which are already being lined up.

All Star Cast With "Doug"

Many Well Known Players to Be Seen in New Fairbanks' Picture

IN his endeavor to present the most unusual picture filled with love, romance, snap and ginger that has ever come from a Fairbanks Studio, "Doug" has gone to the very extremes in obtaining an all-star cast to support him in "The Mark of Zorro," the 4th Fairbanks production to be released on December 5th by the United Artists Corporation. The picture is an adaptation of Johnston McCulley's novel, "The Curse of Capistrano," that appeared serially in the All-Story Weekly Magazine recently. The picture was directed by Fred Niblo.

For the feminine lead, Miss Marguerite DeLaMotte was chosen from a host of prominent candidates considered by Mr. Fairbanks. This is her first appearance as "Doug's" leading lady.

Noah Beery, who portrays the big, pretentious Gonzales,

Robert McKim, who is occasionally termed "the handsomest villain upon the screen," makes his first appearance in a Douglas Fairbanks production.

Among those who complete the cast are Albert McQuarrie and Charles Stevens, long members of the Fairbanks Company; George Periolet, Walt Whitman, Tote DuCrow, John Winn and Charles Belcher, Charles Hill Mailes and Claire McDowell.

Plan Wide Music Service

New Chicago Company to Furnish Scores as Aid in Presentations

MUSIC perfectly synchronized for feature films is something that the wide awake ehibitors, who desire to present their pictures in first-class manner, have long wished for, and the announcement that the Synchronized Scenario Music Company of Chicago was prepared to furnish scores, arranged so as to give feature pictures the proper musical setting, has been received with enthusiasm.

The new company is working on the plan of distributing its music scores in every city of the United States where the film exchanges are located and operating from these territorial divisions, foreign market to be opened up a little later.

The Synchronized Scenario Service eliminates all worries of following "music cues" and purchasing large amounts of sheet music, it is stated, and gives a complete music scenario with every feature, especially arranged by such prominent music directors as Carl Edouards, director of music, Strand theatre, New York City; James C. Bradford, formerly writer of music synopses for Famous Players and now doing similar work for the First National Exhibitors Circuit; and C. J. Breil, composer of the music score of "The Birth of a Nation"—these famous musicians being directors on the staff of the Synchronized Scenario Music Company.

The music scenarios are so arranged that they may be used by piano or organ alone or by a ten piece orchestra and used in perfect accordance with any speed projection.

Press-Book Ready for "Slave of Vanity"

Robertson-Cole's publicity department has taken especial care with the press and campaign book for "A Slave of Vanity," starring Pauline Frederick. Every possible aid to the exhibitor is given in the "A Slave of Vanity" press book which is one of the most artistic as well as practical numbers of Robertson-Cole's remarkable series, declares the releasing organization.

Tipped in at the back of the book is an eight-page publicity section containing dozens of stories of various sizes prepared with the needs of newspapers of all sorts in view. Armed with this, the exhibitor can give the press of his town a complete and comprehensive selection of news stories for the advance, opening, review, general, feature and short notices which may be desired, states Robertson-Cole.

Larry Semon's Next Is "The Sportsman"

"The Sportsman" has been selected as the title of Larry Semon's next Vitagraph comedy. Like the previous Semon comedies it has been filmed at the West Coast studios and locations on the Pacific Coast under the personal direction of the comedian. It is now nearing completion.

Semon has taken what is for him an entirely new theme for this offering. The famous comedian appears as a fearless lion hunter, a burlesque, of course, but a character which will afford Larry unlimited opportunities for fun-making, states Vitagraph.

All Sections Hail Fox Special Is Report

"While New York Sleeps" has started on its way through the neighborhood film houses and first-run theatres in the bigger cities. Telegrams, night letters, and personal letters from showmen everywhere are reaching the home office of the producer in New York, declares William Fox in a statement just issued.

From Sioux Falls, S. D., H. J. Updegraff, of the Princess theatre, wired twice expressing his enthusiasm over the picture. The first wire reads as follows:

"While New York Sleeps" played to capacity business, forced to run extra performance. Sorry I didn't have thousand more seats. Had them standing up from noon until nearly midnight. In my opinion a great drawing card in any territory."

Two days later his second wire arrived:

"While New York Sleeps" going over great. Would like extra day. letter follows."

Wedgwood Nowell Has Strong Support

In "813", the Robertson-Cole production which is soon to be released, is featured Wedgwood Nowell, known as "the most perfect Latin type on the American screen," states the producing concern. Mr. Nowell plays the part of Arsene Lupin, the famous French detective, whose exploits traced in the celebrated fiction of Maurice Leblanc, are known to hundreds of thousands of readers in every civilized land.

Wtih Mr. Nowell in the picture is a good cast. Kathryn Adams who has appeared in a number of Robertson-Cole releases, plays a prominent part; Wallace Beery, whose work on both the dramatic and musical comedy stage, made him a Broadway favorite, has the role of a "heavy." Others in the cast are Ralph Lewis, J. P. Lockney, William V. Mong, Colin Kenny, H. Milton Ross, Thorton Edwards, Frederick Vroom, Mark Fenton, Laura LaPlant and Vera Steadman.

Charlie Murray Seen In Sennett Comedy

"Love, Honor and Behave" is the first Mack Sennett five-reel production to exploit the comedy talent of Charlie Murray in a stellar role. The picture has been completed; has passed the cutting-room stage; and is on its way to First National headquarters in New York from whence it will be distributed.

More Films in Realart Offer

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION has announced the inclusion of two more Mayflower special features in its general offer of productions available under "the honor system" of rentals.

R. A. Walsh's "The Deep Purple" and Charles Miller's "The Law of the Yukon," both very recent releases, now can be obtained along with Allan Dwan's "Soldiers of Fortune," "The Luck of the Irish" and Emile Chautard's "The Mystery of the Yellow Room."

Realart also has announced the removal of all time limits originally placed on its proposition.

"This," says J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, "is our answer and that of the Mayflower Photoplays Corporation to inquiries regarding the success of our revolutionary plan of motion picture distribution."

It was explained at the Realart offices that two propositions were made originally. One was a general offer, made through the trade press, and confined to the two Allan Dwan productions and the Emile Chautard feature. The other offer, made by mail to Realart customers, included all five pictures. The present announcement, according to Mr. Woody, extends the whole plan to cover all of the Mayflower productions which are released through Realart.

"We are taking off the time limit because the demand for the specials on the pay-after-you-have-run-the-picture plan has been much greater than was anticipated," Mr. Woody explains. "The real fact of the matter is that we have been forced into this action. Originally, some of our executives and managers were dubious about results, and a time limit was placed in order to satisfy those who were not thoroughly sold on the idea. Now, however, the plan has booked our prints so far ahead in most branches, and there are so many unapproved requests for playing dates that it would be unfair to exhibitors, to Mayflower and to ourselves. Our instructions to managers are permanent so far as these features are concerned.

"Back of this, though, is a more important consideration, but before I tell you about this I want to make it plain that there is, technically, a time limit to the offer. That limit will be fixed by exhibitors themselves. Ocr instructions to managers are to accept playing dates only on a basis which will keep their prints working without interruption.

"Conditions with respect to open dates vary in our different branches. Some of them are booked up solidly until after the first of the year, a few of them still can accept dates in December and one or two offices have a very limited amount of open time in November. Every effort will be made to accommodate exhibitors with the playing time they want, but of course it is necessary that we have some system of handling requests, and the plan outlined seems to be the one which our managers have found most satisfactory in average cases.

"We started the plan on a limited scale. We were prepared to back out gracefully if it didn't work. But it has worked. The principal facts thus far developed, or apparently developed, are these:

"First, the plan has brought us reasonable returns as compared with rentals which exhibitors have paid on the old fixed-price basis of selling. We are satisfied, on consideration of the revenue derived from individual theatres, that exhibitors have given us a thoroughly square deal on the average.

"Secondly, the system being tested has given us exceptionally wide distribution in a very short time. Quick distribution reduces operating costs. As matters now stand in the trade about two years are required to obtain the full revenue ordinarily to be derived from a picture. To shorten this period is to increase the turn-over both of merchandise and capital.

"Thirdly, there is the important matter of reaching exhibitors with whom we have not previously done business. Probably forty per cent of the applications received in the first two weeks of our campaign were from non-customers. Half of these came from houses which we had never solicited for business.

"Fourthly, and following logically on from the thought just expressed, there is the matter of the small-town exhibitor's welfare. The Realart plan has a very direct bearing on this condition. I do not claim that it is working miracles, but if it accomplishes nothing more than to direct a distributor's attention to the importance of this greatly neglected field it is at least justifying itself. Our observations along this line are being very carefully made, and I hope ere long to announce definite conclusions—and perhaps decisions—of a rather radical sort."

Bacheller Story to Be Filmed

T. HAYES HUNTER, as was announced last week, has been engaged by the Dial Film Company to direct "The Light in the Clearing," the first of Irving Bacheller's books to be brought to the screen and released on the W. W. Hodkinson program.

The Hodkinson organization will work hand in hand with the Dial Film Company in the making of this picture. H. Thompson Rich, a recent addition to the Hodkinson staff, is at present engaged in preparing the continuity of it.

When Mr. Hodkinson acquired the screen rights to Mr. Bacheller's works, he issued a statement in which he said that these books would not be picturized until such time as the proper arrangements could be made to insure their adequate presentation.

With this end in view, Mr. Hodkinson has been watching the producing and directorial field with an unusually wary eye, and some weeks ago the initial negotiations were entered into which bore their full fruit in the announcement that T. Hayes Hunter has been signed to direct "The Light in the Clearing."

The work of T. Hayes Hunter in directing "Earthbound," an achievement that has placed him in the foremost ranks of successful directors, is emphasized in a statement emanating from the New York headquarters of the W. W. Hodkinson organization. The Hodkinson statement follows:

"If T. Hayes Hunter had done nothing else but direct "Earthbound" his fame would be an assured and permanent thing, for seldom has the screen seen such a perfect illustration of directorial genius as was marked by the above named production. A picture without a flaw, its flawlessness was due to the superb genius of T. Hayes Hunter, under whose guidance 'Earthbound' was made. He has been responsible for many screen successes in the past, among which may be numbered 'Desert Gold,' another singularly successful Hodkinson release, "The Cup of Fury," and "The Border Legion." But all of these fade into insignificance before the absolute perfection of 'Earthbound.'

"It is such a man as this who can properly interpret Irving Bacheller; indeed Mr. Hunter has expressed himself as being more than pleased that he should be the one chosen for this great task. It is altogether fitting and proper that it should be called a great task, for it is a most emphatic move in the right direction in following up the principles Mr. Hodkinson has laid down. It is a plank in the drive for better pictures that Mr. Hodkinson is sponsoring.

"Mr. Bacheller, who was one of the guests at the Hodkinson luncheon which was held at Delmonico's on Thursday, November 4th, said that he esteemed it great honor to be numbered among those men who played a part in the sure advancement of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and Mr. Hodkinson in turn expressed himself as being highly gratified that he should be the one to bring this great author's works to the screen.

"Every step which can be taken to assure the absolute perfection of the screen version of Mr. Bacheller's book is now in the course of consideration, and it is confidently expected that the finished product will be in every way worthy of T. Hayes Hunter, the director, Irving Bacheller, the author, and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation who have co-ordinated the efforts of two great men into one perfect harmonious whole."

A scene from "Diamonds Adrift," a new Vitagraph production starring Earle Williams

Vitagraph Feature Started

Earle Williams with Fine Cast in Support Stars in Mystery Drama

COASTWISE shipping is so heavy along the Pacific shores at this season that it was with difficulty that Vitagraph chartered a steamer for a week's cruise in "Diamonds Adrift," the next Earle Williams' feature. This week the star and his company, headed by Director Chester Bennett, are on the Pacific Ocean, taking scenes at sea and at the beautiful harbor of the famous Catalina island. One of the largest steamers in the coastwise lumber trade is being used.

This feature will show Earle Williams in another role of the same strength as he had in "The Purple Cipher," one of the cleverest mystery pictures in years. The plot combines the society type of drama in which the star is best known with the action melodrama that all can enjoy. It is highly dramatic, dealing with the disappearance of a diamond bracelet which a wealthy woman's little son has accidentally slipped over the head of a pet cat. The cat escapes, gets aboard a steamer, and ends up as the pet of a beautiful senorita in Mexico. Of course, no one can believe that the gems are real.

A ship-owner's son, played by the star, however, needs that $5,000 reward when his father cuts him off. He has many exciting adventures, but finds the cat and wins the girl.

Beatrice Burnham acts the part of the Spanish girl. George Fields is cast as the Mexican villain. Hector Sarno plays the girl's father. William Walling has the part of Captain Johnson, a fighting ocean skipper. Little Richard Headrick, who won fame in W. S. Hart productions, takes the important part of the little boy who starts all the trouble. Melbourne McDowell, Jack Carlisle and Lenore Lynard also have important parts.

"Mark of Zorro" Due Dec. 5

Douglas Fairbanks Goes Limit in Providing Spectacles for Picture

ACCORDING to a statement from the headquarters of United Artists, Douglas Fairbanks has gone the limit in his newest picture, "The Mark of Zorro," in the way of providing spectacles for his production. This picture will be released on December 5th, it is announced. A feature of the production is stated to be the unusual settings, absolutely perfect in their most minute details.

The most striking instances of Fairbanks' prodigality in staging spectacular settings for his pictures in the past are the reproduction of the famous casino of Monte Carlo, which was erected at the cost of thousands of dollars, it is stated, for his picture, "The Mollycoddle," and his construction of a typical Western town on the side of a hill for the realistic flood scene in "When the Clouds Roll By," during which a million gallons of water were precipitated from a specially constructed reservoir over the town below.

In his next production, "The Mark of Zorro," "Doug" has spared no expense in erecting an exact replica of the City of Los Angeles during the time of early California when its destinies were guided by the Spanish.

The San Fernando Valley, said to resemble the space about Los Angeles during that period, was carefully selected for the purpose of duplicating the old city. The necessary data for the erection of the city required many weeks of work. Transforming of the little valley into what was once Los Angeles during the Spanish regime, required hundreds of skilled workmen and an exact reproduction of that portion of Los Angeles forms the central settings for the next big four pictures.

Big Opening for "Kismet"

Robertson-Cole Announces Great Preparations for Strand Showing

THE publicity organization of the Strand Theatre, New York City, is bending every effort toward making the Broadway opening of the Robertson-Cole Production, which stars Otis Skinner, the biggest week ever played by a picture at any house in the country, declares the releasing organization.

The Strand Theatre, according to Robertson-Cole, is striving to make this a model engagement from the exploitation and advertising angle. The date of the Strand booking is the week of November 14.

The Strand contract followed a day after the trade premier of "Kismet," which took place at the Hotel Astor grand ball room on the evening of Monday, October 25. Coming so swiftly after the first public appearance of the picture, Robertson-Cole holds the booking to be a most flattering endorsement of its great production on the part of one of the country's most representative exhibitors.

Every means imaginable will be employed to tell New York about "Kismet," states Robertson-Cole, and the thousands of exhibitors who expect to show the Skinner production at the first opportunity will herewith have a golden opportunity to observe how it can best be done.

The day following the booking, Strand artists were at work on a prologue, which will be so elaborately worked out, and so colorful, as to prepare the mind fittingly for this Robertson-Cole picture.

While this preparation has been under way inside the Strand, Broadway has been interested in watching the out-of-door advertising. In many of the leading windows of the Rialto, the Strand has placed the beautiful oil paintings of Otis Skinner in "Kismet" which it has had made for shipment to all parts of the United States. As early as two weeks before the "Kismet" showing is scheduled to start, the Strand Theater ordered 30,000 of the new Robertson-Cole program-heralds for advance distribution. The entire center of this beautiful bit of advertising the Strand occupied with an announcement in bold type of the "Kismet" booking.

Careful attention is to be paid to the lobby of the Strand Theatre which will be transformed into a charmed pathway leading into the Bagdad of old, declares the Robertson-Cole organization.

Universal Features Finished

Final Scenes Taken for the Edith Roberts and Eva Novak Productions

THE final scenes of two important features were filmed at Universal City during the last week. One is "White Youth," starring Edith Roberts, and directed by Norman Dawn, and the other is "The Torrent," starring Eva Novak and produced by Stuart Paton.

"White Youth" is a whimsical story of the attempted mating of May and December. The authors are Clara Beranger and Forrest Hallsey, whose creations have met with success on stage and screen. The locale is quaint Louisiana, with its French background and its antiquated customs. Edith Roberts, who has not been seen on the screen in five months, returns in the role of a young girl who has been reared in a convent and who is delighted when she hears that her grandfather has chosen a husband for her, because marriage means a trousseau and a long train. Norman Dawn, who directed Miss Roberts in two of her biggest successes, "Lasca" and "The Adorable Savage," guided the charming young star through her latest feature. In her support will be seen Arnold Gregg, Thomas Jefferson, Alfred Hollingsworth, Hattie Peters and many others.

"The Torrent" is a story of romance and adventure by George Rix, newspaperman and correspondent, who has dramatized several of his personal experiences. Miss Novak appears as a young girl who has jilted the man she really loved, an aviator in the government service, to marry a man of wealth. A year later, on a yachting cruise in Southern waters, she seeks to escape her husband's drunken attentions by taking shelter in the boat's tender, which is cut adrift. She is washed ashore on a desert island, where she is discovered by her former sweetheart, who has been conducting experiments with a government torpedo in the unfrequented waters. The situations which develop furnish interest and thrills for five exciting reels. Stuart Paton, who directed Miss Novak in her former success, "Wanted at Headquarters," also produced her latest picture. Jack Perrin plays the principal male role, others in the cast being Lawrence Shumway, Oletta Ottis, Jack Curtis and Harry Carter.

"Snub" Pollard Comedy Due November 21

"The Dear Departed," the latest Rolin comedy, released by Pathe November 21st, should be invaluable, in these days of high prices as it shows the various methods of dodging creditors in a highly amusing manner, declares Pathe. "Snub" Pollard is featured in the comedy, ably assisted by Marie Mosquini, "Sunshine Sambo," Hughie Mack, an amusing bear actor, and the Rolin Comedy comedians.

Story by John Moroso
Directed by Henry King

One man saw in the beautiful innocence of the girl only something to pursue and capture.

The other saw in her something to be guarded and cherished and yet he was a crook.

To be worthy of her he decided to be straight, and straight he was from that day on. Yet those who should have been the first to help him in his worthy resolve were the last to believe and aid, the representatives of the law.

A really splendid picture, full of suspense, action, and lots of humor, too.

"THE PHANTOM FOE" (Pathe)

Most unusual is the serial with the required attributes of a "feature" photoplay. "The Phantom Foe" has them.

First, there is the star, Juanita Hansen, at her best and losing no opportunity to show to advantage her ability as an actress as well as her aptitude in wearing beautiful gowns.

"The Phantom Foe" has a general appeal, is filled with thrills and mystery, promising good serial entertainment if the remaining episodes keep an even pace with the first two, and adding another laurel to the clever pen of George B. Seitz, as well as proving the directorial abilities of Bertram Millhauser.—LILLIAN GALE.

"THE PHANTOM FOE" Baffling Mystery Drama, Involving Hypnotism and Featuring Juanita Hansen, Is This Pathe Serial.

Reviewed by Jessie Robb.

Those film fans who enjoy being thrilled by mysterious disappearances, hair breadth escapes, murderous attempts on the life of the heroine and all the other villianies that go to make up a first-class mystery serial, will receive their full quota of thrills in "The Phantom Foe," a Pathe serial. The mysterious and baffling occurrences are cumulative up to the last episode, when the cause is explained and the real villain caught. The entire production has been handsomely mounted and with fidelity to detail. The many elaborate gowns worn by the women of the cast will please the feminine spectators.

A cast of well known serial players, headed by Juanita Hansen and Warner Oland, has been assembled and they measure up to the hard work demanded of them.

EXHIBITORS HERALD

WARNER OLAND AND JUANITA HANSEN IN THE PHANTOM FOE

Fifteen-episode serial; Pathe. Directed by Bertram Millhauser. Published October 17.

OPINION: If one were to come in on the showing of "The Phantom Foe" unaware of the fact that a serial was being screened he would at once gain the impression that he was seeing a fast moving feature picture, and an extremely well done one at that. For "The Phantom Foe" is not merely serial material, in the sense that we have come to know serials, but a combination of two types of production, serial and feature.

In other words "The Phantom Foe" has everything serial fans expect, action, romance, mystery, suspense, plus the niceties of a feature in investiture, acting and graceful handling. Furthermore, the subject matter, while odd, is neither wild nor silly. It is a story; at least that part of it told in the first two episodes which are all that have so far been shown, that does not over-tax one's credulity. All these factors blended into one unit give Pathe something different in serials.

One of these men started at the top of the ladder, rich, respected, and unsuspected.

The other started from the bottom, an ignorant brute, poor, suspected, and finally jailed.

A woman was the magnet to both.

They passed each other, one going up and the other going down.

The story makes a great human picture with a great hero of brawn and brain, a hero for men, and a hero for women.

Universal Pictures Emphasize Story

That Universal officials recognized the present trend towards all-star productions is said to be well evidenced by several recent Universal productions in which no attempt has been made to star any one player, and in which the story interest and excellence in production have been held paramount.

Among these pictures have been "The Secret Gift," a homely tale of lowly hearts in well recognizable situations, and "Pink Tights," a circus picture of universal appeal.

The latest non-star picture undertaken by Universal is called "Gold and the Woman." It was written by John Colton and Douglas Z. Doty, of the Universal scenario staff. Colton is well known as a popular author. Doty has been editor of several of America's largest publications.

"Truth About Husbands" Given Screening

"The Truth About Husbands," directed by Kenneth Webb, personally supervised by Whitman Bennett and to be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was given a pre-lease private screening on Wednesday, November 3rd, to exhibitor officials of First National and the heads of staff of the Whitman Studio.

"The Truth About Husbands" is an adaptation of the "The Profligate" by Sir Arthur Pinero, which scored a success in London a few years ago when it was produced with a notable cast of stars. There are seven practically star parts demanding unusual histrionic ability for the proper portrayal of the story.

Bookings Reported on "The U. P. Trail"

Among the first big bookings to be reported on Benjamin B. Hampton's production "The U. P. Trail," made from Zane Grey's novel for release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is that of Tally's Broadway theatre, Los Angeles Calif., where "The U. P. Trail" will play a two weeks' engagement.

Race Picture Scores Big Hit

Educational Has 100 Prints of Picture Now in Use

FOLLOWING the record-breaking joint premier showing "The Race of the Age," the exclusive two-reel picture of Man o' War's victory over Sir Barton at Windsor, Ont., at the Strand theatres, New York and Brooklyn, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., reports that advices from its branch offices indicate that all precedents for two-reel pictures will be broken with the showing of this film.

At Grauman's Los Angeles, the picture was made the feature of the entire bill, given with a special setting and then followed by a trained horse act. According to Los Angeles newspapers there has never been a film shown in that city that stirred such audience enthusiasm. Similar prominence was given the picture last week at such theatres as the Colonial, Columbus, Ohio; the Strand, Dayton, O; Walnut, Cincinnati; both the Rialto and Newark in Newark; the Strand in Buffalo; Albany in Schenectady; the America in Denver, the Adams in Detroit and in many others.

In every case the Man o' War picture was made the dominant feature of the newspaper advertising, and in most cases considerable advance space was devoted to the announcement. Educational reports that efforts of some theatres to persuade the public that they had real pictures of the contest when they were exhibiting only excerpts from news weekly, taken outside of the race course, proved abortive.

Special musical programs were employed in all the houses with the presentation.

More that a hundred prints have been started to work through the United States and Canada. Equal interest has been shown in the picture abroad. The English rights have been sold for a large amount and energetic bidding for the rights for France, Italy, Australia and several other countries is reported.

Here is a glimpse of "Wedding Blues," a two-reel Christie comedy, released by Educational in which Helen Darling has a prominent role

Practically every New York York newspaper gave "The Race of the Age" the leading position in its Monday morning review after the Sunday opening at the Strand, several of them devoting their entire space to the production.

The New York Times compared its presentation with the achievement of Edward Muybridge, who made the first motion picture—an animated record of a horse race—by arranging a battery of twenty-four cameras so that their plates would be exposed as the horse ran in front of them. Then it says: "It does not seem to be going too far to say that an epoch of motion picture history is marked by Muybridge's twenty-four plates and the 2,000 feet of film at the Strand this week."

In the course of nearly a column the Times goes on to say:

"But the popular interest in 'The Race of the Age' as the picture is called, will not be in its historical significance but in the picture itself, and in comparison with it most movie melodramas with their labored efforts to thrill will seem like so much blank and wasted film. Those who see 'The Race of the Age' will have many of the sensations of those who went to the Windsor track, and they will see the race itself better than many who were there, for few, if any, seats offered the clear and continuous view of the horses that has been obtained by the cameras. whose separate reels have been assembled on one length of film.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Frank Lloyd Films Announced

Pauline Frederick the Star of Two; Due for Early Release

DIRECTOR FRANK LLOYD is responsible for four of the early fourth year Goldwyn pictures, two of which will be released as Frank Lloyd Productions.

The first of the four pictures released, the screen version of Alexandre Bisson's drama, "Madame X", has already proved itself one of the new season's most artistic and financially successful productions, declares Goldwyn. Pauline Frederick, the star of "Madame X", has created her best screen part as Jacqueline Floriot in this production.

"Roads of Destiny", picturized from Channing Pollock's play founded upon O. Henry's story of the same title, recently completed by Mr. Lloyd, also stars Pauline Frederick. In this unusual picture, the star portrays four characters in four different situations, yet all basically the same character and ending in the same climax. The various "roads of destiny" all lead to the same ending. In the cast of "Roads of Destiny", which will soon be in all Goldwyn branch exchanges, are John Bowers, Richard Tucker, Jane Novak, Hardee Kirkland, Willard Louis, Maude George and M. B. ("Lefty") Flynn.

The first Frank Lloyd Production "The Great Lover", will also soon be in all Goldwyn exchanges. It was filmed from Leo Ditrichstein's most successful stellar vehicle on the stage, written by himself and Frederick and Fanny Locke Hatton. Under Mr. Lloyd's direction, the screen version retains the high comedy value of the stage play, it is stated by Goldwyn, and the dramatic situations are said to be heightened by the latitude of scene allowed by the motion picture camera.

As Jean Paurel, the great tenor about whom the action of "The Great Lover" revolves, John Sainpolis is reported to give a portrayal which, in the opinion of the producer and director, rank in sincerity and artistic fidelity to life right along with the stage characterization of the part by Mr. Ditrichstein. Claire Adams has the leading feminine role. Others in the cast are Lionel Belmore, John Davidson, Alice Hollister and Richard Tucker.

Mr. Lloyd has just started production on Gouverneur Morris' first original screen story, "The Water Lily", a tale of the Boxer rebellion, which will be released as a Frank Lloyd Production as well as an Eminent Authors' Production. The cast for this picture has not yet been announced although the work of erecting a Chinese street on the Goldwyn lot has been under way for two weeks.

"Black Beauty" Nearing Completion on Coast

A family picture has been attained in the special production of "Black Beauty," based on the autobiography of a horse by Anna Sewell, according to Vitagraph. The picture is now nearing completion at the West Coast studios under the direction of David Smith. The animal scenes were completed some weeks ago and last week David Smith, the director, finished the outdoor scenes in which both the human characters and the horses appeared. Only a few of the interiors, with the human players alone, remain to be made.

"The family appeal of 'Black Beauty,'" states Vitagraph, "will be one of the strongest features. It is as sweet and clean a story as ever was written—or filmed."

157,000 Feet of Film in "Outside the Law"

In cutting and editing "Outside the Law," the new big Priscilla Dean picture promised for release by Universal about the first of the year, Tod Browning, its director, has 157,000 feet of film from which to choose the six or seven thousand feet which will represent the finished production.

For five months, director, star and company, have been busy filming shot after shot of action, atmosphere and action from which to build Miss Dean's latest "crook" picture. Many thousands of feet were "shot" in San Francisco's Chinatown to be used in several sequences portraying the quaint ways and the wicked wiles of the transplanted Oriental.

Midnight Frolic Girls in Billie Burke Film

In her latest Paramount picture, "The Education of Elizabeth," Billie Burke appears in a scene from the Midnight Frolic which was transplanted intact from the roof of the New Amsterdam theatre to the new Long Island studio of the Famous Players. This was the first time, and probably the last, that Miss Burke ever appeared in one of her husband's revues. Mr. Ziegfeld is said to have broken one of his ironclad rules in permitting six of his most famous beauties to appear in a picture in the very same costumes they wear in The Frolic.

LeRoy Scott and Gertrude Atherton at Work on New Screen Productions

LEROY SCOTT, the New York novelist and playwright, has arrived at the Goldwyn studios, to aid Gerald C. Duffy in making the screen adaptation of his story, "No. 13 Washington Square." The story was dramatized and produced several seasons ago with May Irwin in the principal role. The story is a tale of complications in New York life and should make a splendid screen comedy, states Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Mrs. Gertrude Atherton, the California novelist, who has been at the studios most of the time for two or three months writing and helping prepare the continuity for her first original screen story, is now spending all her time with Wallace Worsley designing the principal sets for the picture. It has gone into production under the working title of "Noblesse Oblige."

Lewis S. Stone and Mabel Julienne Scott, who have just completed acting the principal roles in the picturization of Leo Ditrichstein's stellar success, "The Concert," are cast in the leading roles in Mrs. Atherton's picture.

The continuity for Tom Moore's next stellar vehicle, "Mr. Barnes of New York," Archibald Clavering Gunter's successful novel and play of the 'eighties, has been completed, and it will go into production within a short time under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, who directed "The Concert."

Director E. Mason Hopper and the company filming Rupert Hughes' first original screen story temporarily entitled "Mr. and Miserable Jones," have returned from Catalina where they went on location and where a number of beautiful exteriors in the picture were "shot." Mason N. Litson has completed the tenth Booth Tarkington "Edgar" comedy and Frank Lloyd has started work on "The Water Lily," Gouverneur Morris' first original screen story for which an entire Chinese street is being erected on the Goldwyn lot.

Book More Keaton Films

Strand and Rivoli, New York City Contract to Show More of Series

AS an evidence that the new Buster Keaton comedies, produced by Joseph M. Schenck and distributed by Metro, have made a real hit with New York picture-goers on their first showing, Metro Pictures Corporation announces that two of the most prominent Broadway theatres have contracted to show more of the Keaton comedies. These theatres are the Strand and the Rivoli.

Buster Keaton's first two-reel laughmaker, entitled "One Week," had a dual metropolitan premiere at the Strand and Rivoli theatres during the week of October 24.

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand, immediately booked others in the series of Keaton comedies, which are to appear every eight weeks. The second will be "Convict 13," followed in order by "The Scarecrow" and "Neighbors," with others, as yet not titled, coming in regular order. Not only will succeeding Keaton comedies be shown at the Strand, but Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli, has decided to exhibit more of them also.

Buster Keaton collaborates with Eddie Cline in the authorship and direction of his slapstick vehicles. Metro believes he will be crowned king of all screen comedians within a very short while.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE —PAGE 3901

"The Witching Hour" Is Strong Production

From all accounts one of the strongest subjects ever released by Paramount is the recently completed William D. Taylor production of Augustus Thomas' famous play, "The Witching Hour," the scenario for which is the work of Julia Crawford Ivers, who was responsible for the continuities of "Huckleberry Finn" and the other Mark Twain stories which were released by Paramount with great success. Elliott Dexter plays the feature role of Jack Brookfield, the dramatic and compelling figure of the play.

Besides Mr. Dexter it includes Winter Hall, Ruth Renick, Robert Cain, Edward Sutherland, Mary Alden, Fred Turner, Genevieve Blinn, Charles West, L. M. Wells, Clarence Geldart, J. Blackwell and others.

Clara Beranger Story Now Being Filmed

"The Painted Lily," the picture Mae Murray is now making at the Long Island Studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is the first original story Clara Beranger has done for this organization since she was signed on contract several years ago.

Under the terms of her new contract which she signed in June, Miss Beranger is given two periods of four weeks a year in which to write originals. Miss Beranger completed another story of her own recently on her trip home from Europe, which will be produced for Paramount, and she is busily making plans for a third.

Word has been sent to exhibitors throughout the country that the second William Fox serial, entitled "Fantomas," will be made in twenty episodes instead of fifteen as originally planned. The first Fox serial, "Bride 13," which is having so successful a run, was in fifteen episodes. The Fox officials plan to release the first episode of the "Fantomas" serial on the day of the fifteenth episode of "Bride 13" goes upon the screen.

When Director Edward Sedgwick began making "Fantomas" he had a wealth of material from which to choose. He is said to have crowded thrill upon thrill in such great numbers that he now has surplus enough for another serial. Wherefore, Mr. Fox has ordered him to extend the serial to twenty episodes.

Madlaine Traverse to Return to Screen

Madlaine Traverse who left the Fox Company at the beginning of the summer to enjoy a rest, will shortly return to the screen according to an announcement just made. Whether Miss Traverse will produce pictures with her own company as once was reported or has contracted to fill stellar roles for one of the leading producing organizations, is not stated, but it is known that several of the latter have been negotiating with Miss Traverse.

It is expected that a definite announcement will be made sometime next week, at which time it is said Miss Traverse will make known her plans.

Action and Mystery in R-C Release, "813"

"813," which is shortly to be released by Robertson-Cole as a super-special, is said to be especially strong in story interest and action, which are the prime requisites for a picture of mystery and thrills, such as this screen adaptation of an exploit of the famous French detective, Arsene Lupin. The most significant detail of "813," declares Robertson-Cole, is that it does not disclose its secret until the very last few feet of film.

Promotions Announced W. W. Hodkinson

News of two promotions recently made comes from the home offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Robert Hodkinson, who was formerly manager of the traffic department, has been made laboratory supervisor, and Donald M. Mesereau, formerly engaged in assisting H. S. Beardsley, eastern district supervisor, has been promoted to be manager of the traffic department.

Congratulate Pathe News Reel

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., reports that a great number of communications have been received at the home-office of the organization, congratulating Pathe News for its work during the past decade. These congratulations were extended on the occasion of the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the news-reel.

Typical of these statements, is that from S. L. Rothapfel, of the Capitol, New York, who writes:

"For many years I have used the Pathe Weekly, and the Pathe News, and its reliability, authenticity, and general good taste make it a most desirable and interesting publication. I could not think of running any presentation without subscribing to this most worthy screen periodical."

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, Philadelphia, is another famous exhibitor, who sings the praise of Pathe News. He said:

"I note that the tenth anniversary of Pathe News is about to be celebrated, and I felt that I could not let such an occasion pass without extending to Pathe my sincere congratulations for the success attained by this branch of your distributing organization. I have watched the growth of 'Pathe News' with real interest and I have noted with delight that the instinct for news is present in every foot of the film you present in this up to the minute assembly of the most important happenings."

A. J. Schad, of Reading, Pa., wrote:

A tense scene from "The Devil to Pay," a new Pathe picture with a strong cast, among whom is Robert McKim

"Ten years ago when the first Pathe Weekly was produced, we realized that it would be a big feature. We booked it, and have shown it on our screen ever since then. It proved to be a big feature and it has continued to be such with each succeeding number.

"We congratulate you on this tenth anniversary and congratulate ourselves for having had the opportunity to show this excellent news film all these years. May success continue to follow you in presenting to the world the latest news in picture form."

Another veteran user of Pathe News is Montgomery Moses, manager of the Taylor Opera House and Trent theatre, Trenton, N. J., and here is what he says about it:

"It affords me great pleasure to state that the Pathe News without a doubt, is, in my opinion, the best news service on the screen today. I would not substitute it for any other and I have been using the same for the past six or seven years."

George M. Fenberg, manager of the Auditorium and Alhambra theatres in Newark, Ohio, pays this tribute:

"Hearing that Pathe News will soon celebrate its tenth anniversary I want to say just a few words. I have been in Newark for five years and have run the two issues weekly since the News became a bi-weekly publication, and can truthfully say, I think, in fact know, it to be the best news weekly in the market. This is one feature of my program that I never miss and my many patrons always look forward to Monday and Saturday, the days I show the Pathe News. I wish to congratulate you on your anniversary and wish you good luck in the years to follow."

J. W. Brandon, of Brandon and Bradbury, who operate the New York string of theatres which includes the Bunny, Majestic, Olympia, Olympic, Morrish Garden, and Van Kelton Stadium, states:

"We have been a patron of Pathe News for a long time and hope to be until you celebrate another tenth anniversary. Our program would be incomplete without Pathe News. Our patrons share our opinion."

Enlarge Scenario Department

Universal Makes Some Important Changes in Personnel

IMPORTANT changes and enlargements in the Universal Scenario Department have just been announced by John C. Brownell, scenario chief of that film organization. With the addition of several new scenario experts both at the Coast and in New York, the department now is in position, says Brownell, to assure Universal stars of the best possible material for their feature productions.

Among the important additions in the New York office, directly under the supervision of Mr. Brownell, are Robert F. Roden, and Miss Dana Rush. Roden is a photo-play writer of considerable experience, and recently completed the story for a new Universal serial, "The Diamond Queen," adapted from "The Diamond Master," by the late Jacques Futrelle. This serial, the continuity of which was written by George Pyper, now is being produced with Eileen Sedgwick in the title role.

Roden is considered one of the leading American authorities on rare books and bibliography. He formerly was a rare book "scout" for the firm of George D. Smith. He is the author of many books on books and printing, among them "The Cambridge Press," the authority on the history of printing in the United Press.

Roden has been in the moving picture field for several years, and is the author of several successful screen plays, among them photoplays starred in by Violet Mesereau and Marie Doro. He was for several years a special writer for the Boston Transcript and the New York Times.

Miss Rush is known as one of the most finished story readers in the moving picture field. She formerly was with the literary agency of Alice Kauser, where she was associated with L. D. Giffen, head of the moving picture department. She is a playwright as well as a writer for the screen. She also has turned out several colorful prologue and tabloid productions.

The most important change in the scenario department at the West Coast, headed by Lucien Hubbard, former Vitagraph scenario expert, is the acquisition of Charles F. Bender, a New York newspaper man who was associated with Hubbard in the East for many months in the preparation of original screen stories.

Bender now is Hubbard's assistant at Universal City. Others in the efficient department Hubbard has built up at the Coast are Douglas Z. Doty, formerly editor of the Cosmopolitan; John Colton, a well-known novelist; Burl and LeRoy Armstrong, Doris Schroeder, C. B. Hoadley, George C. Hull, Wallace Clifton, Eleanor Fried, Alice Catlin, E. W. Guyol, M. Loewstein and Rose Weiler.

The expansion of Universal's scenario department resulted, it is understood, from a conference between Brownell of the home office scenario department, and Hubbard at the West Coast, looking to the best means of obtaining more and better material for Universal pictures.

"We want to be sure," said Brownell, in a recent interview, "of giving careful and expert consideration to every bit of material that passes through our hands. Mr. Carl Laemmle is determined that Universal stars shall get unusual stories and that these stories shall be unusually presented."

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Three of the wild ones in "Mama's Boy," a Pathe release.

Fans Select Story for Torchy Comedy

"Torchy Turns Cupid," the next of the two-reel comedies made from the stories by Sewell Ford and starring Johnny Hines is promised by Educational Exchanges to furnish an even greater delight to the readers of the tales of the red-headed office boy than any that have gone before, since it represents the choice of a group of Torchy fans.

Some two months ago Johnny Hines was the guest of a house party when the subject turned to the Sewell Ford stories. It was suggested that a vote be taken to determine the most popular story in the seven volumes and the result was "Shunting Brother Bill" upon which this present comedy is founded.

Chester Comedy Title Called Ideal

According to Educational Exchanges, the perfect motion picture comedy is found in "You'll Be S'prised," the latest of the two-reel Chester fun films which will be released early in December. It is recommending the name alone to be used in a teaser campaign by theatres, since surprise is the big element of the picture. It deals with the foiling of a couple of villains who rob the village station agent. Of course, Snooky, the Humanzee, is the bright particular hero, but little Ida May McKenzie, who has been named "the sweetest child on the screen," has an equally important part.

A dog and a goat contribute considerably to the comedy element.

William Welsh Returns to Universal Forces

One of the many actors going from East to the West Coast is William Welsh, who now is on his way back to Universal City, after having been out of the Universal employ for several seasons.

Welsh was personally re-engaged by Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, several days after that executive returned from Europe. He will do character leads in some of the forthcoming Universal features. It has not yet been determined what his first picture will be.

Pioneer Makes Over Serial

Gets Negative of "The Mystery Mind"; Robert Pauline Starred

"THE aristocrat of serials" is the slogan adopted by the Pioneer Film Corporation for "The Mystery Mind," a 15-episode picture written and produced by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey for the Supreme Pictures, Inc., from which concern Pioneer took over the serial for the United States and Canada. The production has just been completed after more than ten months of continuous work, and "The Mystery Mind" negative was turned over to the Pioneer this week.

The greater portion of the work was done at the Supreme Pictures studios in Flushing, according to an announcement which emanated yesterday from the office of President A. E. Lefcourt at Pioneer headquarters. Many of the scenes, however, were made in the wilds of Florida. The story carries the spectator back to the upper reaches of the Orinoco, where the mystery is unravelled.

In starring J. Robert Pauline in "The Mystery Mind," exhibitors know that their patrons are familiar already with the famous hypnotist, who has appeared on practically every stage.

Playing opposite Pauline, Violet MacMillan brings to serials a new type of serial heroine. Among heavies, Paul Paner has been a serial favorite since the classical serial days of "The Perils of Pauline." Completing the main cast of characters is Peggy Shanor, who gained high prestige in "The House of Hate." Announcement will be made later of the date of release of the serial.

Costly Sets for Stroheim

"Foolish Wives" to Cost More Than Any Previous Universal

THE technical heads at Universal City have just completed the most elaborate series of sets ever used in a Universal picture, word comes from the Coast. They were constructed for use in Erich von Stroheim's new feature, "Foolish Wives," and represent in faithful detail an exterior at Monte Carlo, the Mediterranean gambling resort showing the famous Casino, the Grand Cafe and the Hotel de Paris.

The buildings are built to exact scale and tower many feet in the air in white splendor. Thousands of feet of lumber and many tons of cement and plaster were used by Von Stroheim. They are making "Foolish Wives" the costliest picture, by more than two and one-half times, ever made by Universal

At Montery, California, additional costly sets have been constructed for this picture, representing the back view of the several large structures, and showing the terraces down to the sea, in exact replica of the magnificent view to be had at Monte Carlo. Von Stroheim has just taken a company including 200 extras to this location to film a series for Universal, and in which he himself takes a leading role.

The actor-director has just completed a series of scenes at Universal City depicting action in and around a small lake. Stroheim had a special lake built for this picture. It took a corps of fire engines and water-pumps several days to fill it. The engines later were used to aid in a gigantic storm effect which Universal officials who saw its filming say rivals the elements in violence and verisimilitude. Von Stroheim's company had to work knee-deep in water for more than a week.

Well Known Players in "Sentimental Tommy"

By a coincidence the three principal characters in the John S. Robertson production of Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy" for Paramount, all scored successes on the stage or in filming the Kate Douglas Wiggin novel, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

Mabel Taliaferro, who interprets "The Painted Lady" in the Robertson picture, created the role of Lovey Mary on the stage. Careth Hughes, who has the role of Tommy, and May McAvoy, who is Grizel, were both in the Paramount production which Marguerite Clark did, young Hughes playing the leading male role and Miss McAvoy appearing as Asis.

Hauber Theatres Laud Hodkinson Release

A letter received by Joe Bloom, Hodkinson Supervisor at St. Louis, from the Hauber theatres, Conway, Ark., reads as follows:

"I just want to tell you that 'Riders of the Dawn' is undoubtedly one of the best, if not the very best, pictures I have ever seen, bar none, and I am wondering if you could not arrange to give us a return date on it. If so, we could use it any Monday in November, preferably the beginning of the month."

"Riders of the Dawn" is the second of the Zane Grey novels to be made into a picture by Benjamin B. Hampton for release by Hodkinson.

"Hard Boiled" Convicts Cry at "Madame X"

"Madame X," a Goldwyn picturization of Alexandre Bisson's drama, in which many of the most poignant scenes are laid in prison, made the "hard boiled" fans at Sing Sing "sniffle and cry like a bunch of school girls at a canary's funeral," according to a writer in the Sing Sing Bulletin, writing in the October issue, after a prison showing of the feature.

Mermaid Comedies at Big Detroit Houses

The Mermaid Comedies, in competition at two of the biggest theatres, was the unique situation in Detroit last week. "Nonsense," in which Jimmie Adams is featured and directed by Jack White, was on the bill at the Broadway Strand, while "Dynamite," starring Lloyd Hamilton, was being shown at the Majestic.

Annette Kellerman, in "The Art of Diving," the third of Educational's special releases, also occupied a prominent position on the bill at the Broadway Strand.

Dead Men Tell No Tales

Entire Torchy Series to Run at Strand

Following the personal appearance last week of Johnny Hines, star in Torchy Comedies, at the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, it was announced that Managing Director Edward L. Hyman had signed a contract for the whole of the first year's series of two-reelers made from the stories by Sewell Ford and released through Educational Exchanges.

According to Educational, while there has been an uncertainty on the part of some exhibitors in booking the first one or two of these pictures, such showings have been followed, without a single exception, by contracts for the entire series.

S. Barret McOrmick, managing director of the Rivoli, Toledo, and acknowledged one of the world's premier showing, has featured the Torchys from the week his magnificent new theatre opened.

Educational Exchange Starts With Record

A new record is claimed by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., for its new Denver office. Within less than a week after E. J. Drucker took charge as manager he had booked the entire series of Christie two-reel comedies, with one release every two weeks at the Princess and Rialto theatres, and both the Mermaid and Chester series at the America. At the same time he received several offers for the Torchy Comedies.

In addition, in the same week he booked "The Race of the Age," the exclusive two-reel picture of the Man o' War race at the America for what is said to be the highest rental ever paid for a two-reel subject.

Dorothy Dalton Back at Paramount Studio

Dorothy Dalton is back at work at the new Long Island City studio of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation after a lapse of a few weeks, during which time she appeared in "Aphrodite" for the Chicago run. Miss Dalton is doing "The Teaser," a story of the Canadian northwest, written especially for her by J. Clarkson Miller, in which she has the sort of role in which she first achieved great success.

Virginia Banker Joins Kane Organization

Stanley M. Ragland, who for several years has occupied responsible positions in a leading bank of Virginia, moved to New York this week and joined the staff of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. His decision to ally himself permanently with the photoplay industry is additional evidence of the growing recognition of the business by men in other lines of activity.

French Woman Director in U. S.

A SERIES of eight dramatic French productions, to be made for Falker-Tyrol Productions for release through a large distributing organization in this country, is announced by Mme. Germane Dulac, director and producer of Les Films D. H., who sailed for France recently after a three weeks' stay in America.

Madame Dulac has the distinction of being the only French woman director. In her picture career, which started in 1910, she has directed approximately forty-five pictures. Included among these was work for Malpas and Le Film D'Art, two well known French producing companies. In her career as a director she won for herself an enviable reputation and her work in drawing out the fine points of comedy has long been recognized in France.

Arriving on October 25, Mme. Dulac began at once to make herself familiar with American production methods as well as American tastes. She witnessed all the bigger picture productions on Broadway and was a visitor at the D. W. Griffith and Paramount studios. She intends to model her new French studio, which she contemplates building in the south of France after these American structures.

Madame Germaine Dulac

"We fell far behind during the war," stated Madame Dulac, "and as a result studio facilities are very bad indeed just at present. That is one of the reasons for my trip to America. I have made Falker-Tyrol Productions my agents on this side and commissioned them to send to me all the American apparatus, equipment, and accessories that I may need. I intend also to have an American engineer and electrical equipment expert supervise the building of my new studio."

Upon returning to France, Mme. Dulac says she will begin at once to make her dramas. Mlle. Denise Lorys, who has already been under the direction of Mme. Dulac, will be starred in these features. Stories will be chosen from the best material obtainable—both French and American. Her agents in America will buy such works of American authors as appear to be up to her standard. American continuity will be written for all of the coming dramas, whether they are the work of French or American writers.

Mme. Dulac believes that it is possible to find French stories that would please America, provided they were developed according to American tastes. She intends to visit New York as often as possible and will probably return again within six months.

It is expected that Falker-Tyrol Productions will announce the releasing arrangements of these pictures in the near future.

Fox Studios Hum with Action

NEVER since the completion of the mammoth Fox studios at Hollywood, California, has there been much activity throughout the entire organization as at present according to advices from the home-offices of Fox Film Corporation. There are more companies working simultaneously than ever before in the history of the plant, announces the statement.

Tom Mix, under the direction of Lynn F. Reynolds, is making a new Western story written especially for the star by the director—a story in which the cowboy star does some fancy as well as hazardous auto driving.

With Scott Dunlap directing, William Russell is working in a story known as "The Cloth of Gold." The story is by Jules G. Furthman and furnishes the star, it is said, with a role of extraordinary force—that of a criminal masquerading as a clergyman.

Shirley Mason is creating the steller role in a story called "Flame of Youth," with Howard M. Mitchell directing her. Mr. Mitchell, it will be remembered, staged "Love's Harvest," "Little Wanderer" and "Molly and I," in all of which Miss Mason achieved success. He has also directed, since these were two interesting pictures, "Beware of the Bride" and "The Husband Hunter," starring Eileen Percy.

Lionel Adams, playing the father in "Fantomas," a new Fox serial

Jules G. Furthman, who has been writing original stories and adapting novels for Fox for some time, is engaged in his initial directorial effort with the beautiful Eileen Percy. The name of the play is "The Land of Jazz," and it is said to be a picture most unusual in plot and uproariously funny in incident.

"Partners of Fate" is the title of the picture in which Louise Lovely, the newest of Fox stars, is at work, under the direction of Bernard Durning, also a new director under the Fox banner.

A story by Robert Welles Ritchie, which appeared in "The Country Gentleman" under the title of "Trails to Two Moons," is being picturized by Fox with Buck Jones as star. The interiors are now being made at the Hollywood studio, and the company will go into the uplands near Los Angeles for the exteriors within two weeks. Edward J. LeSaint, a veteran of directing the popular Jones in the the Fox staff on the west coast, is role of hero of a story of warfare between Western cattlemen and the hated sheepmen. Mr. LeSaint adapted the story from the original.

Important in the Fox activities in Hollywood are four Sunshine Comedy units, all working at full speed in the same lot, keeping the Sunshine widows on the jump as they switch from one director to another in the various sets, which range from bathhouse scenes to magnicent hotel lobbies, it is announced.

Clyde Cook, the inimitable pantomimist and contortionist extraordinary, who is making for Fox a series of "Clyde Cook special comedies" is as busy as the proverbial bee—and a good deal funnier in action, says William Fox.

JEROME STORM this week completed the organization of his production staff and placed under contract the players to appear in support of Lillian Gish in her first picture directed by Storm for the Frohman Amusement company. Filming of the play, by Fred de Gresac, commences next week at the Biograph studio, which has been leased by the Frohman company.

Warren Fromme assistant to Mr. Storm, was formerly assistant director for Hobart Henley and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Harold Brown's services as technical director were secured this week, thus completing the quota of technical aides.

James Rennie will act as leading man for Miss Gish. He now is appearing on the New York stage in a leading role of "Spanish Love."

An important role is taken by Emily Chichester, who recently appeared in "The Woman in Room 13" and prior to that appeared in a number of Griffith productions.

The chief character part is played by Emily Fitzroy, who came into prominence as the boarding-house keeper in D. W. Griffith's "'Way Down East."

Other members of the cast are: Una Merkle, Alice Fleming, Helen Flint, Dorothy Grau, Dorothy Chappell, June Terry, Mary Foy and Frances Silcox.

First National Office in Portland

Announcement is made of the opening of a branch office of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., at Portland, Oregon. The new office will, it is said, especially benefit the exhibitors in southern and eastern Oregon, for the office will be kept stocked with exclusive prints of all releases and a full line of accessories so that all shipments will be made direct from there, according to Jensen and Von Herberg, holders of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc. franchise in that territory.

L. O. Lukan, northwest director for First National, will be in general charge of the new office. In addition to the manager, the staff includes a booker, cashier, poster clerk, skipper, salesman, bookkeeper and film inspector. An appropriation of $20,000 has been made to cover tentative salaries for the first year. Offices for the new branch have been secured at Ninth and Burnside streets.

Two Paramount Releases

Melford's "Behold My Wife" and "Sins of Rosanne" Issued Nov. 7

GEORGE MELFORD'S production, "Behold My Wife," an adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Translation of a Savage," and Ethel Clayton in "Sins and Rosanne," a screen version of Cynthia Stockley's story of South Africa, "Rosanne Ozanne," are the Paramount releases scheduled for November 7.

One of the most conspicuous features of "Behold My Wife," one which was commented upon by every New York critic during the picture's successive pre-release engagements at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, is the excellence of its cast. Heading the list of players is Milton Sills. Playing opposite him is Mabel Julienne Scott, who jumped into prominence as a screen artist in the George Melford production of "The Sea Wolf." In a role almost equally important is Elliott Dexter, former leading man in the productions of Cecil B. DeMille, who but recently has returned to pictures after a long illness. Then there is Ann Forrest, who registered one of the character hits of the year in William De Mille's production of "The Prince Chap;" Winter Hall, who had a leading role in Cecil B. DeMille's "Till I Come Back To You;" Maude Wayne, who was last seen in "The Fighting Chance;" Helen Dunbar, Fred Huntley, Jane Wolfe, Mark Fenton and F. Templar-Powell.

In "Sins of Rosanne," Ethel Clayton is again presented in a highly dramatic role, as may be deduced from the fact that all of Cynthia Stockley's stories have a decidedly dramatic flavor. The scenario was written by Mary H. O'Connor, formerly scenario editor at the Lasky studio. The story is laid near the famous Kimberley diamond mines in South Africa and the opening scenes show the heroine as an infant. When she is severely ill and is given up by the English doctor, she is taken in hand by a Malay woman and cured. At the same time the woman impregnates the child with a craving for gems. This craving leads her in later life into a strange alliance with an unscrupulous diamond smuggler and nearly shatters her romance with a young English baronet.

Miss Clayton's leading man is Jack Holt and the cast includes among others, Montaine La Rue, Mabel Van Buren, Fred Malatesta, Clarence Geldart and Guy Oliver.

"Over the Hill" at Lyric

Continues to Draw 'Em in Despite Changes in Housing Accommodations

WHILE moving in its appeal to the human heart, "Over the Hill," the William Fox special production which has played to constantly crowded houses since its premiere at the Astor Theatre, in New York, on September 17, has been moving also in another way—in its search for a permanent location among the Broadway playhouses. The most recent move was on Sunday last, November 7th, from the Central Theatre to the Lyric Theatre—where, according to the Fox officials, the lease assures a long and uninterrupted run.

"Over the Hill" has had an unusually successful career since making its bid for Broadway patronage. Following its hearty welcome by press, pulpit and public at the Astor theatre, notice was served that another attraction, holding a prior lease, must move in. The Fox production, after enjoying four weeks of unprecedented motion picture business, moved out to the Nora Bayes Theatre nearby.

It has long been a pet theory of Broadway theatre wiseacres that no Broadway production can move during the height of its prosperity and continue its success. "Over the Hill" boldly and triumphantly challenged this idea by not only moving to the Nora Bayes, but by hanging out the "S. R. O." sign at every showing during the week's run there.

Another wallop at Broadway's pet theory was taken when, after the week at the Nora Bayes Theatre, "Over the Hill" packed up and hied to the Central Theatre—also in the heart of the White Lights—where hope was held out that the landlord would talk in terms of months instead of days. The end of the third week brought with it blasted hopes, and again "Over the Hill" went merrily on its house-hunting way.

Convinced that his wonderful picture had scarcely begun its life of Broadway prosperity, Mr. Fox quickly solved the problem by securing a lease at the Lyric. The announcement that "Over the Hill" would not be shown in any neighborhood motion picture theatre during 1920, 1921, 1922, and the evident determination to keep the picture on Broadway, give double assurance of faith in the picture for a long and prosperous Broadway showing, declares William Fox.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Paul Iribe, the French architect and designer, has gone to the Coast to assist in the production of "Anatol," Arthur Schnitzler's play, which Cecil DeMille will make into Paramount's first super-feature with an all star cast. The announcement of Mr. Iribe's trip to the Coast with Jesse L. Lasky, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, came immediately after the statement from the executive offices of the company concerning the new policy of production which brings all the forces of the high Paramount organization together for the making of super pictures.

The talents of the Frenchman will be added to those of Mr. DeMille, the all-star cast consisting of Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels, Wanda Hawley, Agnes Ayres, Wallace Reid, Elliot Dexter, Theodore Roberts and Theodore Kosloff, and the collaborating authors, Jennie Macpherson, Avery Hopwood, Beulah Marie Dix and Elmer Harris in the production of 'Anatol."

Big Cotton Crop Brings Boost for Film Trade

W. T. Yoder, Southern District Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., who is at present in New York, brings news of improved conditions in the South. He says:

"There is a big cotton crop this year, and the feeling is general that better prices will continue and that is all that is needed to restore confidence and activity everywhere. There are evidences of new life at all the chief centers. Even building is being resumed. Especially significant is the fact that more capacious and finer motion picture theatres are being built in a number of the larger Southern cities.

"During the recent period of depression the motion picture business did not suffer to the same extent as other lines. As usual, people found relief from their worries in this favorite form of recreation. But, nevertheless, the last week or two have witnessed a decided increase in attendance, with the best class of pictures drawing to capacity."

Hodkinson to Release Comedy Production

What W. W. Hodkinson describes as one of the really brilliant comedies of the year was completed recently by the Rockett Film Corporation. This is "The Truant Husband," made by Al and Ray Rockett from the story by Albert Payson Terhune, which appeared in the May issue of the Cosmopolitan magazine. It is a singularly clever bit of motion picture construction with an exceptional cast of players, foremost among which may be mentioned, Mahlon Hamilton, Francelia Billington and Betty Blythe. It is interesting to note that "The Truant Husband" is the first comedy ever to be released on the Hodkinson program.

Related Arts Must Aid Film

And Thus Deficiencies of Picture Will Be Covered, He Says

"THE motion picture art must call to its aid all the related arts. There is much that is incomplete in motion pictures. They are silent and they are without color tone. Music has long been employed to cover up the silence. Art will be employed to render the beholder oblivious to the fact that the pictures are without the emphasis of sound.

M. Leone Bracker, internationally famed American poster artist, recently commissioned by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. to make a series of poster pictures, thus expressed himself in an interview in a Los Angeles paper shortly after his arrival on the Coast. Commenting on the influx of literary lights into the cinema world and expressing the belief that similarly the industry would attract to itself the best talent in the art world, Mr. Bracker is quoted in part: "You will note," said the artist, "that there is now in progress a veritable exodus from literature towards the Canaan of the films that is full of promise for the betterment of story materials available for motion pictures and a solution of, or at least a valuable step towards the solution of, the difficulty producers are said to experience in maintaining the supply of the better sort of scenario in keeping with the greater demand, and particularly the better standard demand, which prevails today. Rudyard Kipling, the gentle James Matthew Barrie (I decline to identify him as 'Sir James'), Edward Knoblock, Sir Gilbert Parker, and George Bernard Shaw are some that are traversing the arid waste of the desert of words to reach the vivid oasis of picture revelation.

"It must be the same with art. I believe that the motion picture will attract to itself the best that the world of art has to offer. It is, after all, merely a matter of progress and of recompense. Wagner would have written a certain opera had the equivalent of the forty thousand dollars he demanded been forthcoming. Artists are really better business men than the world gives them credit for being. They only pretend to artistic ignorance in business affairs.

"The motion picture art must inevitably call to its aid all the related arts, for there is much that is incomplete in motion pictures. They are silent and they lack color tone. The first impressions we receive of the natural world in which we live are related to sound and to color. Pictures, for the most part, are black and white and are without the distinction of sound. Music is engaged to cover up the silences; art will be employed to render the beholder oblivious to the fact that the pictures are without the emphasis of sound.

"The artist who apologizes for his relations to the motion picture is an anachronism; he is out of date. I believe that if so solid and substantial a creator in thought as Matthew Arnold were alive today he would be happy to relate himself to the pictures,—and as for such illuminative, creative geniuses as Edgar Allan Poe and Guy De Maupassant—what could not they do with a camera, a director and an hour or two of leisure? Incidentally, the pictures are revealing to the artist the fact that he has an audience. The world loves, recognizes and endorses beauty. The artist is brought into a new distinction through the films which open up to him amazing opportunities to express himself in the terms of his art to an audience that covers the civilized globe.

"I welcome the opportunity given me by Associated First National. It is my belief that the picture poster can be made so dramatic and human and yet so illustrative of the actual picture inside the theatre that the man in the street will stop, look and go in."

Metro Specials for Openings

Metro Films Open New Strand, Albany, and Seattle Theatre

TWO big motion-picture theatres, the New Strand of Albany, and the Winter Garden, of Seattle, are starting their careers as exhibitors of photoplays by featuring Metro special productions during their opening weeks. The fact that the managers of these new houses have chosen Metro productions on the occasion of launching their enterprises, is looked upon by Metro officials as an augury of their success in pleasing the public.

The New Strand Theatre opened its portals to the people of Albany, on November 7, with a bill headed by "The Price of Redemption" starring Bert Lytell, and including "One Week," Buster Keaton's comedy, another Metro release. The Winter Garden in Seattle, opening November 21, will present Metro's "The Great Redeemer," produced by Maurice Tourneur, and also the Keaton comedy, "One Week."

Not haphazard is the choice of two Metro feature pictures for the opening week, according to the management of the New Strand in Albany, which announces that Metro Special productions will follow in the future. The Strand is owned by The Moe Mark Company, which owns and operates in addition, the Strand Theatre of New York, the New Strand of Brooklyn, and others of the same name.

The New Strand Theatre is modern is every detail. It is spaciously built, with every convenience that will cater to the comfort of its patrons. Its seating capacity of about 2,400 makes it almost as large as the New York Strand Theatre. Architecturally, it is considered one of the finest motion pictures in the East.

James Q. Clemmer and Edward James are the owners and managers of the Winter Garden in Seattle. The reasons leading up to the choice of these two metro films are explained by Harry Lustig, special representative of Metro at Seattle, in a letter recently received at the home offices. He writes in part:

"From all the current productions on the market, and after reviewing practically everything worth while, Messrs. Clemmer and James decided that 'The Great Redeemer' would be a very appropriate opening attraction. Consequently, we had the pleasure of selling this beautiful special production.

"In conjunction with 'The Great Redeemer,' the first Buster Keaton Comedy—'One Week'—will also be shown. This is a combination that is hard to beat and in my estimation will be a program worth remembering for a long time."

"The Great Redeemer," by H. H. Van Loan, is a Maurice Tourneur production distributed by Metro, and acted by House Peters, Marjorie Daw, Jack Macdonald and Joseph Singleton. "The Price of Redemption" was adapted by June Mathis from I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Temple of Dawn," "One Week," is the first of a series of Buster Keaton two-reel subjects produced by Joseph M. Schenck and released by Metro.

Edward Jose Finishes Release for Pathe

Actual production work on the new Edward Jose feature for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has been completed, and Mr. Jose is now applying himself to assembling and editing his film, which the Associated Exhibitors will distribute through Pathe.

The Jose special, which as yet has not been titled, was in production over ten weeks. It is reported by Pathe to be the most pretentious picture this director ever attempted in a career of more than five years as a photoplay producer.

Suggests a Way to Get Stories for Screen

A practical way of securing stories adaptable to the screen has been conceived by R. A. Walsh, whose independent productions are being presented as First National attractions by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation .

Briefly the scheme is this: Through the publicity department of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, a query is being sent to the literary critic of every newspaper in the country asking for specific information concerning current novels, advance copies of which are always forwarded to these critics direct from the publishers.

The queries sent by Mr. Walsh are in the form of questionnaires and can be filled out with a minimum of time and effort by the literary editors. Space is left at the bottom of each questionnaire where the editor can paste his published criticism of the book in question. An addressed and stamped envelope is enclosed so that neither the critic nor the paper is put to any expense in sending the information to Mr. Walsh.

"In this fashion," said the producer, "I hope to be able to obtain advance information on every book published."

Al St. John, comedian, acrobat, tumbler, and slapstick comedian is now at work with the Fox Sunshine Comedy forces at the Hollywood studios in California. Peculiar interest and importance attach to the engagement of St. John for the reason that he brings to the organization not only his ability as a mirth-making actor but his ability as a director as well.

"His addition to the personnel of the Sunshine Comedies marks again the consistent-policy by Fox Film Corporation of maintaining these hilarious two-reel films at the highest level in every respect," declares William Fox.

New Single Reel Comedies

Educational to Release Vanity and New Gaiety Comedies Weekly

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces that beginning with the first week in December his company will release single reel comedies weekly. There will be two series of these pictures, one the Vanity Comedies, produced by the Christie Film Company, and the other the New Gaiety Comedies, into which the girl element will enter the more strongly.

Arrangements for these pictures were completed sometime ago and therefore production is well ahead. In order that exhibitors may appreciate that these pictures are above the usual single reel fun film, prints of the first of each series have been sent to all the branch offices with instructions that exhibitors be invited to see these pictures before contracts are offered. This plan was followed with the greatest success by Educational in the case of its four series of two reel pictures.

While in the first few of the Vanities some of the players who have been familiar in two reel Christies will appear, new faces will be seen in the later ones and the appearance of these players will be confined to these shorter films. In this way they will be made entirely distinctive. The same plan will be followed with the New Gaiety series and it is promised that these pictures will introduce several male and female comedians who will leap into sudden popularity.

In both series there will be emphasis placed on the story element, plenty of action, a definite purpose in their creation.

"We expect, said Mr. Hammons, "to prove to exhibitors that these single reelers contain more real merit and abler casts than a greater portion of the two reel comedies on the market. It has been unfortunate that the single reel comedy has in the past represented a poorer picture than the two reeler, inferior casts and far less care in production. We have had a demand for these single reelers for some time, but we did not care to enter the field until we were sure that we would be able to offer the same degree of quality that has made our Mermaids, Chesters, Torchys and Christies such successes."

"Tea For Two," the first Vanity, will be released the week of December 5 and the first Gaiety, "Ain't Love Grand?" Dec. 12. "Without a Wife" will be the second Vanity and "Sand Witches," the second Gaiety. They will then alternate regularly.

Omaha Holds "Movie Week"

Associated First Nat'l Releases Play Big Part in the Celebration

ACCORDING to a statement from the home-office of Associated First National Pictures, its attractions enjoyed a feature place in the celebration of "Movie Week" from November 7 to 14th in Omaha, Neb. More than thirty Associated First National pictures were billed and played in some fourteen theatres of the city and suburbs.

Taking time by the forelock as soon as plans for a movie week formulated general manager C. E. Holah of the A. H. Blank Enterprises and of Associated First National Omaha Exchange conceived the idea of making a special First National week of the opportunity the projected movie festival would afford. Further Mr. Holah devised the scheme of arranging for the publication of special suburban sections of the Omaha newspapers as a means of securing wide attention to the slogan "Go to the Movies," and these supplements carried advertisements of all suburban houses during the movie week.

As a result of the First National's representative's enterprise, the following theatres played that organization's attractions, namely: Rialto theatre, "Peaceful Valley," entire week; Strand theatre, "Nomads of the North," entire week; Alhambra theatre, "In Wrong," Sunday; Alhambra, "The Family Honor," Monday and Tuesday; Alhambra theatre, "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," Wednesday, Thursday and Friday; Alhambra theatre, "A Splendid Hazard," Saturday; Grand theatre, "Polly of the Storm Country," Sunday; Grand theatre, "Go and Get It," Monday and Tuesday; Grand theatre, "The Fighting Shepherdess," Friday and Saturday; Suburban theatre, "Heart o' the Hills," Sunday; Suburban theatre, "The Family Honor," Monday; Suburban theatre, "Polly of the Storm Country," Wednesday; Rohlff theatre, "A Splendid Hazard," Sunday; Rohlff theatre, "The Idol Dancer," Tuesday and Wednesday; Rohlff theatre, "The Yellow Typhoon," Friday and Saturday; Boulevard theatre, "The Idol Dancer" Sunday and Monday; Boulevard theatre, "The Jack-Knife Man," Tuesday and Wednesday; and the Boulevard theatre, "The Master Mind," Thursday and Friday.

Goodman Picture to be Pioneer Release

The Pioneer Film Corporation will release the special feature, "Thoughtless Women," which was written, directed and produced by Daniel Carson Goodman, the author of "Hagar Revelly" and "The Taker," according to an announcement of Mr. Goodman. Alma Rubens is the featured player in "Thoughtless Women."

Brady's "Life" Tried Out in Stamford, Conn.

William A. Brady's recent presentation of his picture, "Life," in Stamford for the first time on any screen, is said to have stirred that Connecticut town as have few attractions seen in the Stamford theatre in many seasons. With the idea of securing the verdict of the paying public in relation to "Life" on the screen, Mr. Brady decided to book and play his big picture in Stamford, just as he does his stage productions. The result was said to be an extraordinary and unqualified success for the picture and a demonstration of the pulling power

"The Purple Riders" to Be February Release

Daring feats of horsemanship make up a big part of "The Purple Riders," Vitagraph's forthcoming serial in which Joe Ryan is starred, according to a Vitagraph announcement. This will be the first Western serial to be made by that company in some time.

The atmosphere of the western is ably met in "The Purple Riders." Inasmuch as "western" is the big theme, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has decided that this production will be as thrilling a western as ever was filmed. Mr. Smith, in collaboration with Cleveland Moffett, the fiction writer, wrote "The Purple Riders." It will be released in February.

"Nineteen and Phyllis" is Delivered

Charles Ray's third production from his own studio, "Nineteen and Phyllis" has been delivered to Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and according to those who witnessed a screening, the story gives him an opportunity to even excell "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway" and "Peaceful Valley," the two first independently produced features from his own studio. While the story takes him off the farm it leaves him in a country village and the tale as it unwinds develops into one continuous laugh with an accompaniment of amused chuckles.

When Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returned to Los Angeles Tuesday, he was accompanied by Robert Loraine, the English actor, who is on a trip around the world. While Mr. Lasky was in London last summer he was entertained by Mr. Loraine, who appeared all of last season in London in the leading male role in Sir James M. Barrie's play, "Marie Rose."

Ascher Brothers Hold Anniversary Week

Ascher Brothers, of Chicago, owners of one of the largest chains of exclusive motion picture theatres in America, hold an anniversary week, beginning November 7th, in celebration of their eleventh successful year. They are among Chicago's pioneer exhibitors, having as far back as 1909, when pictures still were in their infancy, seen their possibilities. From their first venture with twin houses, the Panorama and the President, which were even at that time heralded as the city's finest theatres, they have steadfastly blazed a trail, striving, contriving always to attain just a little higher standard for the motion picture entertainment, until for the large chain of theatres which they have rapidly acquired, Ascher Brothers are at present operating twenty theatres in Chicago. This chain will be further augmented within three months by the Roosevelt, West Englewood and Portage Park theatres, which are now under construction.

These enterprising exhibitors are carrying their policy of better pictures and accompanying entertainment beyond Chicago and its suburbs and are at present operating theatres in Milwaukee, Wis.; Rockford, Ill., and Dayton, O. They are building theatres in Peoria, Ill., and Cincinnati, O.

Goldwyn announces that the next Reginald Barker Production will be "Snow Blindness" from the new story of the same title by Katherine Newlin Burt, author of "The Branding Iron," which Mr. Barker fashioned into a Goldwyn picture.

Mahlon Hamilton has been selected to act the principal role. Only two other members of the cast have as yet been announced. They are Cullen Landis and Mary Alden.

THE complete schedule of Paramount feature releases for the month of December, January and February have been announced by Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The list includes twenty-six productions, two for each of the twelve weeks of the period.

The following are the releases scheduled for December:

December 5, Thomas Meighan in "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," William DeMille's production of Leonard Merrick's story, scenarized by Olga Printzlau; and Dorothy Gish in "Flying Fat," an adaptation by Harry Carr and F. Richard Jones of a story by Virginia Withey, and directed by F. Richard Jones.

December 12, Roscoe Arbuckle in the feature comedy, "The Life of the Party," directed by Joseph Henabery, a screen version by Walter Woods of Irvin Cobb's ludicrous Saturday Evening Post story; and the Cosmopolitan production, "Heliotrope," which was scenarized and directed by George D. Baker from the story by Richard Washburn Child.

December 19, the first Lois Weber special production for Paramount, "To Please One Woman," written and personally directed by Miss Weber; and Bryant Washburn in "An Amateur Devil," adapted from the story, "Wanted, A Blemish," by Jesse E. Henderson and Harry J. Buxton, directed by Maurice Campbell from a scenario by Douglas Bronson.

December 26, William S. Hart in "The Testing Block," Mr. Hart's own Western story, picturized and directed by Lambert Hillyer; and Enid Bennett in the Thomas H. Ince production, "Silk Hosiery," an adaptation by Agnes Christine Johnston of a story by Frank M. Dazey, directed by Fred Niblo.

For January the releases are as follows:

January 2, Maurice Tourneur's personally directed production, "The Bait," featuring Hope Hampton, adapted by Jack Gilbert from Sidney Toler's play, "The Tiger Lady"; and Dorothy Dalton "In Men's Eyes," an adaptation of E. Phillip Oppenheim's novel, "Jeanne of the Marshes," directed by Frank Reicher from a scenario by Kathryne Stuart.

January 9, George Melford's production, "The Jucklins," scenarized by Frank Condon from the novel by Opie Read; and Wallace Reid in "The Charm School," a picture version of Alice Duer Miller's story, directed by James Cruze from Tom J. Geraghty's scenario.

For February the releases are:

February 6, Roscoe Arbuckle in "Brewster's Millions," adapted by Walter Woods from Winchell Smith's stage version of George Barr McCutcheon's novel; and Dorothy Gish in "The Ghost in the Garrett," by Wells Hastings, directed by F. Richard Jones.

February 13, Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Forbidden Fruit," by Jeanie Macpherson; and Douglas MacLean in the Thomas H. Ince production, "Chickens," an adaptation by Agnes Christine Johnston of Herschel S. Hall's Saturday Evening Post story, "Yanconna Yillies," and directed by Jack Nelson.

February 20, the Cosmopolitan production, "The Fassionate Pilgrim," directed by Robert G. Vignola from George Dubois Proctor's adaptation of Samuel Merwin's novel; and Charles Maigne's production of "The Kentuckians," adapted from the novel by John Fox, Jr.

February 27, Ethel Clayton in Hugh Ford's production, "The Price of Possession"; and the second Lois Weber production, "What Do Men Want?"

That R. A. Walsh will undoubtedly desert his Eastern studio and come to Los Angeles to make his independent productions which are released through First National is the announcement contained in a wire just received from the New York Biograph studio. If the plan is carried out, the Walsh unit will be attached to the Mayflower production organization at the Brunton studio.

This change is due to the fact that Walsh's next production will require big stage settings, and Eastern studios cannot accommodate the necessities of the new Walsh story. Great inconveniences were experienced on this account by the director during the filming of "Idols," which will soon be released by First National.

Detroit House Features Educational Films

Phil Gleichman, president of the Broadway-Strand theatre, the long run house of Detroit, is specializing lately in short subjects. On his current bill which is now in its second week Educational Exchanges supply the only pictures used in addition to the feature, "Something to Think About." These are "Nonsense," a Mermaid Comedy featuring Jimmie Adams and "The Art of Diving," the single reel special in which Annette Kellerman illustrates the feats that made her one of the most famous women in the world before both the standard motion picture camera and slow motion.

Fame of Stage Version Helping Picture

Everywhere Robertson-Cole branch managers and salesmen who are engaged in booking to thousands of exhibitors the screen version of "So Long Letty," the Al Christie six-reel comedy-drama, are discovering a great interest in the picture by reason of the fame of its stage version. This was produced by Oliver Morosco, and appeared for five years in the leading theatres of the spoken drama.

On the screen it has become a comedy-drama. Not being handicapped by stage dimensions, Mr. Christie has evolved a highly-pretentious comedy-drama that bids fair to even out-do the well-known success of the stage version, declares Robertson-Cole.

"The One Best Pet" Is Next Chester Comic

"The One Best Pet" is the catchy title of the next of the two-reel Chester Comedies to be released through Educational Exchanges. It is said to introduce even more animals than in any of the Chester pictures, including a number of lions. A volume of thrills is promised including scenes of a baby being carried away and landed on a church steeple by a bunch of toy balloons.

Snooky, the Humanzee, is featured and quite a large part falls to little Ida May McKenzie. Hap H. Ward also has a prominent part in the comedy.

Theatres Give Out Returns

Paramount Exploitation Service Give Election Results to Houses

PARAMOUNT exploitation service gave prompt election returns Tuesday night to approximately five hundred motion picture theatres in three large cities. In New York City, Chicago and Detroit exclusive returns were furnished through the exploitation representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by special arrangement, in each instance with a local newspaper. Audiences were kept seated long after the usual closing hour and the theatres continued to do business in many cases until well after midnight.

Abner Robinson, exploitation representative at the New York Exchange concluded arrangements with the New York American whereby returns were furnished to 200 theatres in the city and outlaying districts showing Paramount pictures. The Keith houses figured prominently in the arrangement while theatres in Hoboken, Mt. Vernon, Yonkers, New Rochelle, and Jersey City were included in the service.

Intent upon obtaining every possible benefit of Election Night for Paramount exhibitors in his district Robinson made arrangements to have posters printed in advance advertising the fact that complete and prompt returns would be available at the theatre showing the poster. In addition the New York American, for four days before Election Day published a complete list of theatres to which this service would be rendered.

The idea was founded in large measure on the suggestion of Oscar A. Doob, Chicago exploitation representative, who concluded a similar arrangement with the Chicago American. This paper not only listed the theatres which would receive such service but for a solid week ran front page stories upon the unusual facilities afforded for getting early returns by going to such and such a theatre and waiting for the results free from congestion prevalent around the bulletin board on Election Night.

Critics Praise Realartist

New York Press Applauds Minter Production, "Eyes of the Heart"

"EYES OF THE HEART," Mary Miles Minter's latest feature production for Realart, now having its first New York showing at the Rialto, strikes a responsive chord—to judge from the reviews of the picture among New York newspaper critics.

The Evening Telegram declares that "The Realart picture, which Paul Powell directed, is a sure winner." In its criticism the Telegram says: "When Dana Burnet's story, 'Blindness,' was published in 'The Ladies Home Journal,' nation-wide attention was drawn by this appealing after-the-war story.

"So dramatic were the incidents that their value for motion pictures was realized at once. The story has now been made into an excellent film drama now at the Rialto under the title 'Eyes of the Heart.'

"Miss Mary Miles Minter—is the heroine, and she has never done anything better than her work in this play. Supporting Miss Minter are Edward Burns, Lucien Littlefield, Florence Midgely, John Cook, Fred Turner, William E. Parsons and Loyola O'Connor."

Says the critic on the Sun: "Miss Minter interprets the role of a blind girl, who proves that vision is not only the function of the eye but also of the heart. The acting is excellent, especially on the part of the star, and the charm of the settings is in keeping with the strange love story."

Bruce Scenic a Setting for "Earthbound"

"Solitude," one of the single reel Scenic Beautiful made by Robert C. Bruce on his last trip to the Alaskan and British Columbian coast and released through Educational exchanges, was used last week as a prologue with the showing of "Earthbound" at the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, and several of the motion picture critics of that city commented on the way that it fitted in with the unusual feature and how the atmosphere was maintained through the Imperial's presentation.

"Solitude" is sub-titled "a tale of the Lonesome Land" and pictures the lone wanderings of a man through mountain snowstorms and Nature's great open spaces and his content with the beauties of the world out of doors.

Plane Views of Rome in International

Unusual picture of Rome, Italy, taken from an aeroplane, are shown in International News No. 75, just released by Universal. The camera-bearing aeroplane flew at low altitude over the famous bridge of Tiber, over the Coliseum, the Pantheon and over many other points familiar to the school-boy student of history.

Captain Ariel Varges, the International News cameraman, who was recently admitted to the Pope's presence and who took the first moving pictures ever made of the Holy Father (recently seen in International News releases) took the bird's-eye views of the Italian capital.

Wm. DeMille Busy with Barrie Play

"What Every Woman Knows," Sir James M. Barrie's play, which was starred in on the legitimate stage by Maude Adams, is rapidly shaping up in screen form, as a William DeMille production for Paramount.

It is said that this story is of the type that Mr. DeMille takes the keenest delight in producing. Every director has his favorite theme and his favorite type of play and Mr. DeMille has voiced the sentiment that the production of this picture is a labor of love.

All Eyes Turn to Jacksonville

Inducements Offered to Producers by Committee

What might pass as an Egyptian Nile scene but in reality a "location" only ten miles from Jacksonville, Florida

THE eyes of the American producers are at present focused on the city of Jacksonville, Florida, which is now offering unusual inducements to companies who are interested in making this city their producing center. Being only thirty hours out of New York is it's strongest point. It has been claimed that it is cheaper to produce there than in any other place in the country. Every kind of location is right at hand. It lies within a short distance of Miami, Palm Beach, St. Augustine, Daytona, The Everglades, Nassau and Cuba. Already Florida is the winter playground of the United States, Jacksonville has some of the finest beaches in the world, and is itself a beautiful metropolitan city. Mountain locations are within one night's ride.

The city is not only described as being the most logical place for winter operations, but also an ideal location for all-year-round work.

Prominent men in Jacksonville want to make the city the third producing center of the world and will match dollar for dollar with producers who will establish a mammoth studio there, it is stated. They have in mind taking over a former government camp site, consisting of some three thousand acres. About eight hundred acres of this land is covered with several hundred buildings of all descriptions, all said to be suitable for some purpose connected with picture-making. The streets are paved, and this young city is complete with water and electricity. There is enough lumber and material on the ground to construct half a dozen such centers such as Universal City, it is declared. The camp site is located right on the beautiful St. John's River and is splendid for all sorts of water scenes. Many of the buildings are stated to be suitable for conversion into houses and bungalows, thus solving the housing question. A fine club house and a theatre are among the buildings.

Furthermore, the city is ready now to accommodate companies coming South with stage space in studios now operating. There is now located in the city professional talent in every line—directors, cameramen and extras.

The Motion Picture Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, of which W. R. Carter, a retired publisher is chairman, and which includes J. W. Martin, Mayor of Jacksonville; H. B. Hoyt, president of the Jacksonville Gas Company; E. E. Cohen, managing director of Cohen's big department store, and H. J. Klutho, the leading architect of Florida, announces that it will be glad to co-operate with companies coming down.

Jacksonville feels that its success as the third producing center is assured.
